The erection of a substantial building on joint property by one co-owner cannot be regarded as conclusive evidence of ouster. If a joint tenant has in good faith effected valuable improvements upon the common property at his own expense, equity takes that fact into consideration upon a partition and in some suitable way makes an allowance to him therefor, in addition to his rateable share of the property. See Revenue Sale Law.		• Question of mixed fact and law—Acts necessary to constitute adverse possession of one co-owner against another—Ouster, proof of—Principle, if applies to co-owners, not members of a family.] The question of adverse possession is a mixed question of fact and law. The facts found by the Judge must be accepted but the conclusion drawn from them, namely whether the possession was adverse or not, is a question of law. Lachmeswar Singh v. Manawar Hossain, L. R. 19 I. A. 48; s. c. I. L. R. 19 Cal. 253 (1891). Ram Gopal v. Shamskhaton, L. R. 19 I. A. 228; s. c. I. L. R. 20 Cal. 93 (1892). Chintamani Pramanik v. Hriday Nath Ramia, 29 C. L. To prove dispossession of one co-sharer by another, it must be shown that there was exclusion or ouster to the knowledge of the former and this principle is applicable to all cases of co-owners and is not confined to cases where the co-owners were persons who at one time had formed members of a family. The possession of one co-owner is the possession of all for the purpose of limitation. There can be no dispossession by one joint tenant

If possession may be either lawful or unlawful, it must, in the absence of evidence be assumed to be the former, and until something occurs of which the other co-tenants must take notice and which indicates the contrary, the possession taken and held by one co-tenant is the possession in law of all the co-tenants and not adverse to any of them. Although the possession of one co-tenant is not deemed adverse to the other co-tenants the existence of the relation of co-tenants does not preclude one co-tenant from establishing an adverse possession in fact as against the other co-tenants and though the co-tenant enters in the first instance without claiming adversely his possession afterwards may become adverse. The evidence to show adverse possession by one co-tenant must be much clearer than between strangers to the title and the hostile intent of the co-tenant in possession must be shown by unequivocal conduct. But the ouster of the other co-tenants in order to render the possession adverse need not be by violence or intimi-

It makes no reference directly or by implication, to the mode in which the lands of the estate are held. The duty is imposed upon the Revenue Court to effect a partition of an estate on an application by a person competent to claim partition under sec. 97. The first step in the performance of that duty is to ascertain the lands which constitute that estate. To carry out this preliminary step, it may conceivably be necessary to have recourse to an ancillary measure, namely, to effect a partition of the joint lands of the several estates and thereby to ascertain the lands which belongs to the estate under partition. It is a well-known rule of interpretation of statutes that where a statute confers jurisdiction, it impliedly grants also the power to do such acts, adopt such measures, and employ such means as are essentially necessary to its execution. Abdul Khalek v. Abdul Khalek , I. L. R. 23 Cal. 514 (1896), Sarat Chandra v. Prokash Chandra , I. L. R. 24 Cal. 751 (1897) and Brajendra Kishore v. Kalikumar , I. L. R. 46 Cal. 236 (1918), referred to. It cannot be maintained that the joint lands should first be divided by a Civil Court, as then the result would follow that the Civil Court would in essence be called upon to constitute an estate for the purpose of partition under sec. 97 and consequently to deal with a matter which affects the Government revenue and is excluded from its jurisdiction by sec. 154 (1), (f) of the Regulation. Gouri Krishna v. ALLUVION —Lanka formed in the Godavari—Accretion—Concurrent findings of fact—"Gradual, slow, and imperceptible." test how applicable to Indian rivers.] A lanka formed by alluvion in the river Godavari was claimed by the Maharajah of Vizianagram as being an accretion to his pre-existing land. This claim was denied by the Government on the ground that the lanka was a vertical accretion to the bed of the river: Held —That both the lower Courts had found as a fact that the lanka was a lateral extension of the Maharajah's property and the Board saw no reason to dissent from their findings. Held, also —That the question whether the accretion was "gradual, slow, and imperceptible" had not been raised in the pleadings or issues and it was doubtful whether the contention could be raised now. On the assumption that it could. Held —That the accretion was "gradual, slow, and imperceptible." In the English rule which provides that all accretions must be "gradual, slow and imperceptible" the words "slow" and "imperceptible" are only qualifications of the word gradual and this word with its qualifications only defines a test relative to the conditions to which it is applied. The actual rate of progress necessary to satisfy the rule when used in connection with English rivers is not necessarily the same when applied to the rivers of India. the land of the village to the grantee to get it cultivated and populated. It was for the purpose of clearing the jungle, making the land fit for cultivation and bringing in rayyats which carried with it the duty of sinking wells. The birt-holder was to enjoy it free for five or six years. A comparatively small but gradually ascending rent was fixed for the years 1210 to 1214 in proportion to the increasing productiveness of the soil. After 1214, he was to pay the revenue to the sarkar prevalent in the Taluqa and take the daswant prevalent in the Taluqa, the daswant being a deduction in the nature of a rebate. The rent of the tenure could not be capriciously enhanced by the Taluqdar as the assessment of the jama was to be in accordance with the rate prevalent in the Taluqa: Held, in view of the above and other circumstances of the case, that the Judicial Commissioners were right in holding that the grantees had under-proprietary right in the village.

BENGAL MUNICIPAL ACT (III of 1884, B. C.), s. 15, cl. (2) assessment of income tax upon the joint income of father and son as members of joint family, if entitles both of them to be voters—Cl. (3), son living with father, if a qualified voter as occupying a holding.] The income of a father and his son, as members of a joint Hindu family, were jointly assessed for purposes of income tax. The son brought a suit for a declaration that he was a qualified voter under sec. 15, cl. (2), of the Bengal Municipal Act because he was assessed to income tax, and under cl. (3), because he was a graduate and occupied a holding along with his father: Held—That the income of both the father and the son having been assessed, both of them were qualified to claim to be a voter under cl. (2) of sec. 15. Narendra Nath Sinha v. Nagendra Nath Biswas, I. L. R. 38 Cal. 501 (1911), distinguished. From the mere fact of a person living with another individual occupying holding by reason of some connection with or relation to him, such as son or servant, he cannot be considered to be a person occupying a holding within the meaning of the section. Hence the son was not qualified to be a voter under cl. (3) of the section. Ambika Churn Mozumdar v. Satish Chandra Sen, 2 C. W. N. 689 (1898), followed. Macdonell v. Dickson, 16 R. 143 and Gobinda Chandra Ganguly v. Kailas Chandra Sanyal, 15 C. L. J. 689 (1905), referred to. CHARU CHANDRA MAZUMDAR v. CHAIRMAN OF THE FARIDPUR MUNICIPALITY ... 412 were in one building in the town of Jalpaiguri, had their gardens outside the Municipal limits, and the tea was sent direct from there to Calcutta and sold there. The sale proceeds used to be sent to a Bank in the town of Jalpaiguri, which placed the amounts to the credit of the respective companies after deducting advances, etc., and the net amounts were ultimately distributed as dividends amongst share-holders. The Jalpaiguri Municipality separately assessed each of the said companies with a personal tax at the maximum rate on the basis of the income received at the Jalpaiguri Bank from the sale proceeds of the tea. The assessment list, however, which was prepared under sec. 87 (d), omitted to show the income upon which the tax was imposed, as ought to have been shown according to the provisions of the section: Held—That the “circumstances and property” of a person depended upon what he got or upon what he spent within the Municipality. In the present case though the original source of the income may be outside the limits of the Municipality, the entire income is brought to be spent and enjoyed within the Municipality. The proceeds of the sale of tea deposited in the Bank at Jalpaiguri, are “the circumstances and property” of the companies, i.e., their “means and property” within the Municipality, irrespective of questions as to whence the income accrues and so forth, and furnish a just measure of their liability under sec. 85 (a). Deb Narayan v. Chairman of Baruaipur Municipality, I. L. R. 39 Cal. 141 (1911): s. 85, I. L. R. 41 Cal. 168; 17 C. W. N. 1230 (1913) and Kameswar Prosad v. Chairman of Bhabua Municipality, I. L. R. 27 Cal. 849 (1900), and several other cases referred to. The tax imposed was the tax upon persons contemplated by sec. 85 (a) and not the tax upon holdings prescribed by sec. 85 (b). Sec. 85 (a) cannot be limited in its application to a case where only one person occupies an entire holding. The companies undoubtedly were persons and they occupied holdings inasmuch as the possession of the holding by each of them was actual, as of right and not of a transient character. There was nothing in the section which saved them from liability because their occupation was joint. Per Buckland, J.—The tax was in the nature of a poll-tax leviable on persons, according to their “circumstances and property” within the Municipality. Ambika v. Satis, 2 C. W. N. 689 (1898) and Govinda v. Kailas, 15 C. L. J. 689 (1905), and several other cases referred to. Held, further—That though the assessment list under sec. 87 (d) was defective, the defect was one of form and did not invalidate the assessment. Besides, no proceedings were taken under sec. 113, which provides a remedy in such a case. Chairman of Chittagong Municipality v. Jogesh, I. L. R. 37 Cal. 44 (1909) and Chairman of Chapra Municipality v. Basudeo, I. L. R. 37 Cal. 374 (1910), and other cases referred to. THE CHAIRMAN, JALPAIGURI MUNICIPALITY v. BENGAL MUNICIPAL ACT—contd.

s. 101—"Machinery," meaning of—Balancing tank of Calcutta Municipality with supporting structure, at its pumping station, if machinery and exempted from assessment as such.] Held—That neither the balancing tank at No. 1, Khelat Babu's Lane within the Cossipore and Chitpore Municipality (which is used to regulate the supply of water to the Calcutta Corporation) nor its supporting structure or both combined are "machinery" within the meaning of sec. 101 of the Bengal Municipal Act. There is nothing in the language of the Act or in the objects it was designed to effect to suggest that the word "machinery" was used in any special sense differing from its ordinary sense. The determination in any given case of what is or is not machinery must, to a large extent, depend upon the special facts of the case. The word "machinery" must mean something more than a collection of ordinary tools. It must mean something more than a solid structure built upon the ground, whose parts either do not move at all, or if they do move, do not move the one with or upon the other in interdependent action with the object of producing a specific and definite result. There is great danger in attempting to give a definition of the word "machinery" which will apply in all cases. The word when used in ordinary language prima facie means some mechanical contrivances which, by themselves or in combination with one or more other mechanical contrivances, by the combined movement and interdependent operation of their respective parts generate power, or evoke, modify, apply or direct natural forces with the object in each case of effecting so definite and specific a result. THE CORPORATION OF CALCUTTA v. s. 261, manufactory or place of business from which offensive or unwholesome smell may arise—Cases in which the offensive smell arises when the water from a mill comes in contact with the stagnant water of the Municipal drain, if come within the purview of the section—The manufactory or business, if must be per se offensive or unwholesome.] In a rice-mill within a certain Municipality the water, in which the paddy was steeped, was offensive when it flowed from the drain, but not so offensive as when it came into contact with the stagnant water of the Municipal drain and the finding was that the flow of a large quantity of filthy water was the direct cause of the bad smell: Held—That the finding was sufficient to bring the case within the category of places of business from which unwholesome or offensive smell may arise and therefore within the purview of sec. 261 (Bengal Municipal Act), which covers not only cases which are per se offensive or noxious but also a manufactory or place of business from which offensive or unwholesome smells may arise. Wanstead Local Board of Health v. BENGAL TENANCY ACT (VIII of 1885), as amended by Act I, B. C., of 1907, ss. 3 (3), 4, 116, Sch. III, Art. 1 (a)—Khamat land, tenant of, for a term—Suit to eject after expiry of term—Limitation—Tenant of non-occupancy raiyat—Effect of repeal of s. 45.] It is only under Chap. VI of the Bengal Tenancy Act that the status and rights of a non-occupancy raiyat can be acquired, and as that chapter does not apply to the private lands of a proprietor, a tenant of such land for a term of 9 years did not acquire the status of a non-occupancy raiyat, and, at the expiry of his term, became liable to be ejected as a trespasser. Art. 1 (a) of Sch. III of the Bengal Tenancy Act did not apply to the landlord's suit to eject such a person. Art. 1 (a) of Sch. III of the Act did not extend the limitation of six months to suits to eject persons who had not been non-occupancy raiyats within the meaning of the repealed sec. 45. Sec. 3 (3) is merely a definition and sec. 4 merely a section specifying the classes of tenants to which the Act applied. Secs. 3 (3) and 4 did not separately or conjointly create or confer upon any one any status or any right. Ganpat Mahton v. Rishal Singh, 20 C. W. N. 14 (1914) and Dwarka Nath Chowdhuri v. s. 15, omission by heirs of a tenure-holder to give the prescribed notice to the landlord, if entitles the landlord to recognize one of the heirs as the representative of the tenancy—Sale of entire tenure in execution of a rent decree obtained against the said representative, if affects the rights of the other heirs.] On the death of a permanent tenure-holder his heirs did not give the notice under sec. 15, Bengal Tenancy Act, to the landlord. The landlord, however, chose to recognize one of the heirs as the representative of the tenancy and obtained a rent decree against him alone. In execution of that decree the tenure was sold, and the other heirs brought a suit for recovery of their shares saying that their interest in the tenure was unaffected by the sale: Held—That the shares of the heirs who were not parties to the rent decree did not pass under the sale, and only the right, title and interest of the tenant who was the sole Defendant in the rent suit passed. It is not sufficient to show that the landlord has chosen to obtain a decree for rent against one out of several heirs. It has to be established that all the tenants have held out one of them as their representative in their transactions with the landlord. Netal v. Hari, I. L. R. 26 Cal. 677 (1899), Jeo Lal v. The tenant proved the previous rent and that the enhancement claimed was in excess of two annas in the rupee. The Plaintiff claimed the benefit of a decision under sec. 105 of the Bengal Tenancy Act pronounced subsequent to the institution of the rent suit and before the trial thereof: Held—That as the previous rent of the tenant had been proved, it was for the Plaintiff to justify the enhancement of the rent claimed which was obviously in excess of the enhancement allowed by sec. 29 (b). Bengal Tenancy Act. Certain lands were described in the record-of-rights as chandina, by which the settlement authorities meant bazar lands not subject to the provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act. In a suit for khas possession of the lands, it was pleaded by the Defendant that the entry being with respect to lands which did not come within the scope of the Bengal Tenancy Act, the Revenue Officer had no jurisdiction to make the entry, and as such no presumption as to its correctness arose under sec. 103B (3). The landlord did not produce his papers which would have shown the origin and nature of the tenancy and the Defendant stated the lands to be jets or homestead lands: Held—That though it cannot be said that no presumption arose under sec. 103B (3), the presumption cannot be of such great weight as would be the case if the entry were with regard to matters which are rightly and properly included in the record-of-rights. The non-production of papers by the Plaintiff coupled with the statement of the Defendant was sufficient to rebut the statement in the record-of-rights. Bipradas Pal Choudhury v. In settlement proceedings, the Revenue Officer ignored the existence of these tenancies. Thereupon the proprietor brought suits for declaration of his tenancy right to the lands and for settlement of fair rents in respect thereof, but the Court held that it was beyond its jurisdiction to settle the annual rents: Held—That sec. 104H, sub-sec. It was purchased by A. who obtained possession thereof. Some of the other landlords then brought a suit for the entire rent of the whole occupancy holding against the original tenants, making the other co-sharer landlords Defendants in the suit. The purchaser at the previous sale was not, however, made a party to the suit. The suit was decreed ex parte and in execution of the decree the entire occupancy holding was put up to sale under sec. 163 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The purchaser at the said sale not having obtained actual possession brought the present suit for recovery of possession on declaration of his title by purchase at the rent sale. Held—That the other landlords were not bound to recognize A., the purchaser at the first sale, as their tenant as the purchase made by him was merely of the right, title and interest of the tenants in an 8 as. share of the holding. On the other hand A. was bound by the later rent sale, his position being that of an unregistered transferee. Asgar Ali v. Asaboddin Kazi, 9 C. W. N. 334 (1904), followed. In the suit by the other co-sharer landlords for the rent of the entire holding A., the purchaser, was not a necessary party, because at the first sale only the interest of the tenants in an 8 as. share passed to the purchaser. Under the provisions of sec. 88 of the Bengal Tenancy Act any sub-division of the tenancy required the consent of all the landlords. In the absence of any sub-division of the holding with the consent of all the landlords, the right of the landlords to put up the entire holding to sale was not affected by the purchase made by A. This under-tenure was sold in execution of a rent decree and purchased by a third party who never obtained possession and in execution of a rent decree obtained against the latter the under-tenure was again sold more than twelve years after and purchased by the Plaintiffs who sued for possession: Per Walsmley, J. The Plaintiffs by their purchase acquired the under-tenure with power to annul encumbrances and the interest acquired by the Defendants by adverse possession against the recorded tenants, of which the Plaintiffs were aware, was an encumbrance which the Plaintiffs could have and should have annulled under sec. 167, Bengal Tenancy Act, within one year; and not having done so their right to recover possession was lost. After the rent decree was satisfied, the putnidars applied for payment to them (out of the surplus sale proceeds) of the rent which had fallen due between the institution of the suit and date of the confirmation of sale and claimed interest on the said rent: Held—That the putnidar was entitled to rent only up to the date of sale. Bijoy Chand Mahatap v. s. 11, Provide, "bona fide" and "required," meanings of—Sub-s. (5) "pays rent to the fullest extent allowable by the Act," when rent has not been standardized—Sub-s. (4) "refused to accept the rent offered," tenant if bound to offer and have a refusal every month, to be entitled to deposit rent with the Rent Controller.] The Defendant was a monthly tenant under the Plaintiff. The Plaintiff in 1919 wanted to let out the premises to a third party and gave Defendant notice to quit, to which the Defendant paid no attention. The Plaintiff subsequently wanted rent at the rate of Rs. 150 per mensem, and the Defendant agreed to pay Rs. 110 per mensem, which the Plaintiff refused to accept and the Defendant deposited the rent with the Rent Controller. In November 1920, the Plaintiff gave the Defendant notice to quit as he required the premises for his own use and occupation and as he had made arrangements for letting out the residential house in which he had been then living. The Defendant did not quit and therefore the present suit was brought. In the suit the Plaintiff's evidence was that his wife having given birth to a child and suffered from malarial fever thereafter on account of the insanitary surroundings of their residential house, was advised by the doctor, who treated her, to remove to the house in suit. The doctor gave his evidence and substantially corroborated the Plaintiff. Held—That the Plaintiff could not be said bona fide to require the house for his own use and occupation. The reason given in the notice of November 1920 was that he required the house in suit because of some arrangements he had made with some other tenants for letting out his present residential house and not that he required it on the ground of his wife's health. In the said notice no reference was given to the personal aspect of the matter, but it was based entirely upon the arrangements made with some other tenants. To allow a landlord who has premises sufficient for his requirements to eject tenants because he chooses for his own convenience, to deprive himself of the use of premises which he is occupying would be to defeat the objects of the Act. It is not sufficient that a Plaintiff in order to defeat a plea under the Calcutta Rent Act should merely say that he desires the premises bona fide for his own occupation. The word in the Act is not "desire" but "require." This involves something more than a mere wish and involves an element of need to some extent at least. It is not necessary for a tenant to offer rent to his landlord every month and obtain every month a refusal from him before he is entitled to pay to the Rent Controller. The tenant is justified in paying the rent to the Controller month by month once there has been a refusal by the landlord to accept it. As the rent had not been standardized by the Rent Controller nor had there been any agreement between the parties to pay increased rent, the question as to whether the Defendant had paid rent to the fullest extent allowable by the Act did not arise. The Defendant was therefore entitled to re-

This application was dismissed on the ground that the Petitioner had no locus standi. It appeared, however, that the landlord Opposite Party did not set up the invalidity of the tenancy but invited the Court to fix the standard rent at a certain amount: Held—That in the circumstances of the case the Rent Controller should have entered the application. That in the present case the rooms let were certain, easily ascertainable and subject to no doubt, and the order of the Rent Controller rejecting the application for fixing a standard rent was liable to be set aside.  1793, s. 1—Reg. XI of 1825, s. 1 (1), (4).] The intention and effect of Act IX of 1847 was merely to alter the machinery by which lands gained from the sea or rivers by alluvion or dereliction were to be assessed, and not to subject to assessment any lands which would not have been liable thereto under the law in force at the time when the Act was passed. The Secretary of State for India v. Srimati Fahamidunnissa Begum, L. R. 17 I. A. 40: s. c. I. L. R. 17 Cal. 590 (1899), followed. The question whether chur lands formed since the Permanent Settlement in beds of rivers belonging to a permanently settled zemindari are assessable as "land added to the estate" within the meaning of sec. 6 of the Act IX of 1847 has to be determined by reference to the pre-existing law and particularly to Reg. II of 1819. The effect of Reg. II of 1819 is to declare that chur formed since the Decennial Settlement upon land which at the time of the Settlement had been river-bed are to be treated as unsettled; and this express provision cannot be excluded by showing that the river-bed from which the churs have been thrown up was at the date of settlement the property of the zemindar and that the settlement was imposed upon the zemindari as a whole. In view of Art. 3 of Reg. II of 1819, a river-bed was not intended to be treated as "waste land" coming within the protection of Art. 31 of the Regulation. The Secretary of State for India v. Srimati Fahamidunnissa Begum, L. R. 17 I. A. 40: s. c. I. L. R. 17 Cal. 590 (1899), distinguished on the ground that the land which was held to be exempt from assessment in that case was land which was specifically comprised in the settlement, but which, having since been submerged, had formed again. THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA v. CHOWKIDARI CHAKRAN LANDS within the ambit of a putni, resumed by Government—Respective rights of putnidar and Zamindar in such lands.] The interest of the putnidar in resumed Chowkidari Chakran lands comprised in his putni is derived from the putni itself and nothing else and the Zamindar cannot claim a share in the profits derived from the settlement of such lands and thus in effect to vary the putni. (a), reversing of that order without notice to the Defendant, legality of—Ss. 148 and 149,—Court's power to extend time for putting in deficit court fees after expiry of the period of limitation.] A suit was instituted on the last day for filing the suit under the Limitation Act. The plaint was insufficiently stamped and the deficit Court fees not having been put in within the time fixed by the Court, the suit was dismissed. Thereafter on an application for review, the order of dismissal was set aside without any notice to the Defendant and time was granted for putting in the deficit Court fee: Held—That at the time the order of dismissal was set aside, there was no opposite party on whom the notice could be served, as the summons in the suit had not yet been issued on the Defendant and as, until the suit was registered, the suit could not be said to have been duly instituted. The order of dismissal passed at that stage of the case can be reviewed without notice to the Defendant. Musstt. Gulaboo v. Ramdyal Singh, 8 W. R. 304 (1867) and *Sahebzada Md. Zahuruddin v. Once the order rejecting the plaint is set aside in review, the Court has full power, under secs. 148, 149 of the Civil Procedure Code, to extend the time for payment of the deficit Court fee, and the plaint having been originally filed within the period of limitation, the suit was not barred. SUHENDRO PRASAD LAHIRI CHOWDHURY v. s. 47—Suit to recover possession of undivided share, decreed—Partition pending suit—Execution of decree—Decree-holder, if may obtain possession of the allotted share in execution—Decree, if must be amended for the purpose—Separate suit, if necessary.] Pending a suit to set aside a sale for arrears of revenue of an undivided share in a Mahal and for joint possession thereof, the Collector effected a partition of the estate under the Estates Partition Act, and gave the purchaser separate possession of specific lands. The Court decreed the suit without being informed of the completion of the partition by the Collector. This decree, being reversed by the High Court was ultimately restored with certain modifications by the Privy Council. The decree-holder having applied for execution of the decree and for possession of the lands which had been substituted by the partition for the undivided share decreed by the Court: Held—That the decree could be executed by giving the decree-holders possession of the substituted lands, the question as to what were the substituted lands being a matter which arose within the meaning of sec. 47 of the Civil Procedure Code between the parties relating to the execution and satisfaction of the decree; neither an application to the Judicial Committee to vary their decree nor a separate suit for establishment of title was necessary. RAI BAIJ-NATH GOENKA v. The suit was ultimately decreed and the decree-holder applied for execution, whereupon the sureties deposited the decretal amount in Court. On that very day just before the deposit was made, the Petitioner who also held a money-decree against the same judgment-debtor, applied for execution of his decree and prayed for rateable distribution of the amount deposited. The application was refused by the Trial Court and the money paid out to the attaching creditor on the latter giving an undertaking to refund the amount in case the High Court reversed the order rejecting the Petitioner's application for rateable distribution: Held—That the amount deposited was subject to rate-able distribution under sec. 73, C. P. Code. The natural interpretation of the wide language of the section would include any asset in the possession of the Court and at the disposal of the Court for the purpose of satisfying a decree against a judgment-debtor. There is no reason why it should be restricted to what is paid in by virtue of a process taken in execution. Besides, the assets in the present case though not strictly speaking realised in process of execution were realised by a process in the nature of an anticipatory execution. Harai Sasu v. s. 98—Reference of point of law to third Judge—Procedure when third Judge does not decide question referred, but an altogether new one.] Per Woodroffe, J.—That the difference of opinion not having arisen in a Letters Patent Appeal, sec. 98, C. That under the present law the third Judge cannot dispose of the appeal generally but can only decide the point of law referred and then dispose of the appeal, the referring Judges having indicated how it should be disposed of according to the possible answers to be given. s. 110—Petitioner if has to show that any substantial question of law is involved, where though the High Court's decree purported to dismiss the appeal, it yet substantially overruled the decision of the lower Court. In a certain suit the lower Court held amongst other things that in view of the frame of the suit it was not open to it to direct a conveyance to the Plaintiffs of the mortgaged properties. On appeal, the High Court dismissed the Plaintiff's appeal with costs and affirmed the decree of the lower Court with one variation, namely—"that the decree as also the mortgaged properties will be included in the conveyance to the Plaintiffs." s. 144, application for restitution of money paid to mortgagee auction-purchaser after the date of sale and before confirmation of the sale—Jurisdiction of Court to order restitution in execution proceedings—Separate suit for restitution, if necessary. A mortgagee got a mortgage decree and in the sale in execution thereof purchased the mortgaged property "for whatever was due to him on the decree at the time of the sale," without offering any specific bid. In subsequent proceedings by the judgment-debtor to set aside the sale, the mortgagee auction-purchaser and the judgment-debtor came to a settlement to the effect that if a specified sum was paid off before a certain date, the sale would stand cancelled, but on default the sale would stand confirmed. The judgment-debtor, however, did not pay the entire sum but made part payments on two occasions and the auction-purchaser, with the sanction of the Court, from time to time extended the time on the above conditions. Finally, default having been made, the sale was confirmed under sec. 65, C. P. C., and the judgment-debt was satisfied in full by the purchase of the mortgaged property. The judgment-debtor subsequently made an application, in the execution proceedings, for restitution of the sums paid by him to the decree-holder purchaser. The lower Appellate Court held that the remedy of the judgment-debtor was by way of a regular suit: Held—"That it is competent to the execution Court, in the exercise of its inherent power, to make an order for restitution with a view to secure complete justice between the parties concerned, even in cases not comprised within the terms of sec. 144, C. It being clear that if the matter had not been overlooked at the time of the confirmation of the sale an order for restitution would have been made, any Court can rightly consider itself to possess an inherent power to rectify the mistake or omission which had been inadvertently made. Debi Baksh v. Habib Singh, L. R. 40 I. A. 151; s. c. I. L. R. 35 All. 331; 17 C. W. N. 829 (1913), referred to and followed. The Court has an inherent power to recall money improperly paid out. Mrinalini v. Abinas Chandra, 11 C. L. J. 533 (1910), and other cases referred to. The difficulty of invoking the inherent power of the Court under sec. 151, C. P. C., when there is an express provision to the contrary in a statute, does not arise in the present case, as sec. 144 does not define the full measure of the power of the Court to make an order for restitution. Sec. 144 may be taken as a guide to determine in what class of cases an order for restitution may be made so that complete justice may be made between the parties and they may be restored to the status quo ante. *Sabitri v. "Assignment" of business within local limits of one Subordinate Court to another by District Judge if "transfer" of business—Civil Courts Act (XII of 1887), s. 13 (2).] A decree was passed by the third Subordinate Judge's Court in respect of a claim the cause of action whereof arose within certain local limits. Subsequently the business arising within these limits was assigned to the fourth Subordinate Judge's Court by the District Judge under sec. 13 (2) of the Bengal and Assam Civil Courts Act (XII of 1887). Held—That the fourth Subordinate Judge's Court could not entertain an application to execute the decree. An "assignment" of business under sec. 13 (2) of Act XII of 1887 is not the same thing as "transfer" of business within the meaning of sec. 150 of the Civil Procedure Code. MUNSHI MD. KAZEMALY v. —Suit for interest on bond—Decree satisfied—Subsequent suit for principal barred.] A hypothecation bond contained a clause stipulating that if interest was not paid for six months the creditor might sue either for interest alone or for both principal and interest without waiting for the expiration of the period fixed for repayment (which was three years) and the debtor was "to have no objection whatever." More than three years after, no interest having been paid, the creditor brought a suit for interest alone and obtained a decree for sale of the mortgaged property. The decretal amount was deposited in Court and satisfaction entered. On a subsequent suit by the creditor for the principal sum and arrears of interest: Held—That the provisions of Or. II, r. 2 of the Civil Procedure Code were applicable and the subsequent suit was not maintainable. The cause of action referred to in the rule is the cause of action which gives occasion for and forms the foundation of the suit, and if that cause enables a man to seek for larger and wider relief than that to which he limits his claim, he cannot afterwards seek to recover the balance by independent proceedings. —Amendment of plaint, when permissible—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Arts. 39 and 120.] Courts will allow amendment of pleadings subject to three general conditions, viz., (1) when there is bona fides on the part of the applicant, (2) where the amendment does not cause such prejudice to the other party as cannot be compensated by costs, (3) where it does not convert a suit of one character to a suit of another character. Where the Plaintiffs originally sued for damages and injunction against the Defendant and then by an amendment prayed for declaration of title and then further by another amendment prayed for recovery of possession if in the opinion of the Court he was out of possession, and it was found that the dispossession of the Plaintiffs was more than six years before the institution of the suit: Held—That the limitation applicable to the claim for damages being three years and that for declaration of title six years the second amendment ought not to have been allowed as its effect was to enlarge the period of limitation to 12 years from the date of the dispossession and to take away from the Defendant his right to defeat the suit as originally framed on the ground of limitation. —Sale of immoveable property in execution of an order for payment of expenses of witness, legality of—S. 36, scope and effect of.] In a certain suit the Plaintiff was ordered to pay a certain sum as expenses for one of his witnesses. The order was executed and certain immoveable property of the Plaintiff sold in execution. The present suit was instituted for a declaration that the sale of the immoveable property was without jurisdiction and illegal: Held—That the sale of the immoveable property in execution of the order was illegal. Or. 16, r. 4 is not to be treated as a short and summary procedure for realisation of the expenses of a witness in addition to other modes of execution of orders under the provisions of sec. 36 of the Code. That section does not make any order capable of execution which was not so before. The section only means that the procedure prescribed for execution of decrees shall apply to execution of such orders as can be executed under the Code. There being a specific provision in that behalf in Or. 16, r. 4, the amount ordered to be paid

6 and 22, application for transfer of decree and for issue of notice upon judgment-debtor—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Art. 182 (5), later application to the Court which passed the decree whether "an application in accordance with law or a step in aid of execution." An application for transfer of a decree was made on the 4th November 1910, in which there was also a prayer for issuing notice on the judgment-debtor. The notice having been twice returned unserved, the decree-holder applied on the 24th January 1911 for issue of another notice which was served and the decree was duly transferred. On the 7th January 1914 an application for execution was made to the Court to which the decree was transferred: Held—That the application for execution, dated the 7th January 1914 having been made more than three years after the application (for transfer of the decree), dated the 4th November 1910 was barred by limitation. Or. XXI, r. 22 Civil Procedure Code, provides that the notice upon the judgment-debtor to show cause against execution shall be issued by the Court executing the decree. The Court which transferred the decree had therefore no power to issue that notice. Further, an application for transfer of a decree is not an application for execution. Chatterpat Singh v. Rai Bahadur Saita Soomorimuli, 20 C. W. N. 889 (F. B.) (1916), referred to. Therefore the application made by the decree-holder on the 24th January 1911 to issue notice upon the judgment-debtor cannot be held to be an application "in accordance with law" for execution or to take some step in aid of execution of the decree within the meaning of Art. 182 (5) of the Limitation Act and therefore could not save limitation. HAZARILAL v. XXI, r. 89 of the Civil Procedure Code: Held—That he was not entitled to make the said application. The interest, if any, which he held in the property was not by virtue of a title acquired by him before the execution sale: his interest, if any, was by virtue of a title acquired after such sale and consequently he was precluded by the very terms of the rule from applying under Or. (3) applies—Guardian and Wards Act (VIII of 1890), s. 10, sub-sec. (3)—Willingness of the guardian to act, essential—S. 99, applicability of.] The generality of the language used in Or. XXXII, r. 4, sub-r. (3), makes it clear that the Legislature has prescribed that no person who is competent to act as guardian of an infant, either under sub-r. (1) or under sub-r. (2), shall be appointed guardian for the suit without his consent. The willingness of the proposed guardian is essential even in cases of appointments of guardians under the Guardians and Wards Act as guardians ad litem. When a person has been appointed guardian without his consent, the infant is not represented and a decree made in a suit so constituted has no binding effect upon him. The provision as to the consent of the person proposed to be appointed guardian for the suit is mandatory and imperative. Khairajmal v. Diām, L. R. 32 I. A. 23; s. c. I. L. R. 32 Cal. 296; 9 C. W. Or. XXXIV, r. 2, cl. (c)—Decree of first Court allowing redemption within six months of the date of the decree—Appeal by the judgment-debtor against the decree and cross-objection by the decree-holder both dismissed—"Six months' time," whether to run from the date of the original decree or of the Appellate decree.] A decree declared the right of the decree-holder to recover possession of certain property subject to the right of the judgment-debtor to redeem on payment of a certain sum within six months of the date of the decree. Against that decree, the judgment-debtor appealed and the decree-holder filed a petition of cross-objection, but both were dismissed and the decree of the first Court confirmed. Then within six months of the date of the Appellate decree but more than six months after the date of the original decree, the judgment-debtor paid into Court the sum necessary for the redemption. The decree-holder applied for execution of the decree: Held—That where in a suit on a mortgage the decree of the Appellate Court simply dismisses the appeal leaving the decree of the first Court untouched, the time for redemption runs from the date of the decree of the first Court. *BASANTA KUMAR ADAK v. XLIII, r. 1, such order if appealable—S. 2 (2), such order of rejection if comes within the definition of "Decree." In an appeal the lower Appellate Court called upon the Appellant to furnish security for costs under Or. XLI, r. 10 of the Civil Procedure Code, and the order not having been complied with dismissed the appeal. Against this order an appeal was preferred to the High Court: Held—That an order of rejection of an appeal under Or. XLI, r. 10 is not appealable either as a decree or as an order. If it is treated as an order, it is not included in the list of appealable orders set out in Or. XLIII, r. 1, nor is it covered by the provisions of sec. 104. That the order further did not fall within the definition of a "decree" contained in sec. 2 (2), because the Court did not deal with the merits of the controversy between the parties. *Lekha v. The words "any other sufficient reason" in Or. XLVII, r. 1, mean a reason sufficient on ground at least analogous to those specified immediately previously, that is to say, to excusable failure to bring to the notice of the Court new and important matters or error on the face of the record. entered into an agreement with some others to refer to arbitrators a dispute about some properties and they all made an application to Court under r. 17 of the Second Schedule to the C. P. Code. The guardian of the minors' properties appointed by the District Judge subsequently gave his assent to the agreement to refer and participated in the said application under r. 17. The Court thereupon acted upon the agreement and referred the dispute to arbitration: Held—That the mother was not competent to bind the infants by the agreement to refer to arbitration. The mother has no larger powers to deal with her minor child's property than any outsider or non-relative who happens to have charge for the time being of the infant. The natural guardian can perform acts which are purely advantageous to the infant, but can impose no obligations on the infant. Imambandi v. Mutsaddi, I. L. R. 45 Cal. 878: s. c. 23 C. W. N. 50 (P. C.) (1918), followed. A party who entered into the agreement to refer, under a misconception as to the legal authority of the mother, may afterwards withdraw therefrom. The legal guardian's assent subsequently given to the agreement to refer and his participation in an assent to the application under r. 17 cannot validate the agreement which formed the basis of that application. Per Beachcroft, J.—The fact that the Subordinate Judge subsequently found the mother fit to act for the minors would not validate an arrangement which in its inception was invalid, there being no appointment of the mother to act for the infant in the partition proceedings by the District Judge who takes the place of the Kazi in Mahomedan law. *MOHSI-NUDDIN AHMED v. After the hearing of argument was closed it was brought to the notice of the arbitrators that two out of the parties had died and the arbitrators allowed time for filing fresh achnamahs and for appointment of a guardian for the minor heir of one of the deceased parties, but nothing was done. The arbitrators then made their award and on application being made to Court, the Court made the order for filing the award: Held—That having regard to the subject-matter of the arbitration and the terms of the reference the legal representatives of the deceased persons would be bound by the reference to arbitration made by their predecessors. *Rashidunisa v. It is true as a general principle that a person who is not a party to or properly represented in any proceedings should not be bound by those proceedings. But proceedings before arbitrators are not intended to be carried on according to the rules of procedure contained in the Civil Procedure Code. If there is a binding reference to arbitration all that it is necessary to be seen is that there is a substantial representation of the different interests before the arbitrators. There is no rule of procedure by which the arbitrators could substitute representatives or appoint guardian ad litem for infants. The question whether the award would be binding or not must depend upon the circumstances of each case. The interests of the minors not having been prejudicially affected and having been properly looked after by the adult members who were present, the award ought not to be set aside on the ground of the defect in procedure not affecting the merits where substantial justice has been done. *BINAYAK-DAS ACHARYA CHOWDHURY v. Sch. II, para. 18—Suit pending decision of arbitrators—Award of arbitrators whether a bar to the suit where no application for stay of suit made—Proper procedure.] The Plaintiff and the Defendant were owners of adjoining parcels and the controversy between them constituted a boundary dispute. On the 19th May 1915 they executed a deed of agreement and referred the matter in dispute to three arbitrators who held an enquiry. On the 4th November 1917 one of them announced a decision which was signed only by himself and was unfavourable to the Plaintiff. On the 8th March 1918 the Plaintiff commenced a suit to establish his title and enforce his claim. The arbitrators were apprised of the institution of the suit and on the 30th March 1918, they published their joint award. The Defendant who did not receive notice of the suit till the 4th April entered appearance on the 11th April and filed his written statement on the 26th April: Held—That as the Defendant did not take recourse to the proper procedure, namely, apply for stay of the suit, cancellation of the award as made without jurisdiction and thereafter remission of the matter to the arbitrators, the award had been rightly rejected by the Court below as

Will purporting to give an absolute estate and another part imposing restrictions on the powers of alienation and mode of enjoyment, whether passes an absolute or a limited estate—Succession Act (X of 1865), s. 125; applicability of—Central idea and isolated expressions in a Will, which to prevail.) In a Will the testator provided that after his death his daughter would be malik vested with the power to transfer by sale and gift the entire properties and would enjoy and hold possession of the same down to her son, son's son and so on. The Will next provided that the daughter should live in the testator's ancestral bhita, and perform the pujas inaugurated by him, otherwise she would not be entitled to hold possession or transfer any portion of the property. The Will also provided that she would be entitled to transfer the property only if it was unavoidable necessary for the education of her son or if they fell into great calamity. In a suit for possession by the sons of the daughter, the Court of first instance held that the Will conferred an absolute estate on the Plaintiffs' mother, who having left a maiden daughter still living, the Plaintiffs had no title to the property. On appeal the lower Appellate Court held that the questions raised should be decided after taking evidence and remanded the case for trial upon the merits: Held—That the words in the earlier part of the Will, without anything to qualify them, would no doubt create an absolute estate and there was power of alienation expressly given. There is no doubt that if an estate conferred by Will is held to be absolute, the conditions as to the mode of its enjoyment are void. But considering all the terms of the Will it is clear that the provisions made in the earlier part of the Will are qualified by the provisions made in the other parts of it. Three things appear to have been uppermost in the mind of the testator: that his daughter and her sons, etc., should reside in his bhita, that power of alienation should be given only for meeting the education expenses of her son or in case of great calamity, and that she should hold the properties subject to performance of the pujas. Taking into consideration the central ideas of the Will, instead of isolated expressions, it is clear that

The buyer having sued the seller in the Madras High Court for enforcement of an award made by an arbitrator in London, the seller objected that the award was not binding on him as the arbitrator had proceeded to arbitrate without giving him an opportunity to be heard: Held—That as the arbitration clause provided for an arbitration which was to take place in London and in accordance with English law and procedure, any objection to the award on the ground of misconduct or irregularity had to be taken by motion to set aside or remit the award, under the English Arbitration Act of 1889, within the time limited by Or. 64, r. 14, of the Rules of the Supreme Court. No such objection having been taken, the award became fully binding on both parties to it, as if it had been incorporated in the contract. Any defence going to the root of the award, e.g., that the arbitrator had no jurisdiction or that the matter was tainted with fraud—could have been pleaded in the suit, but a defence on the ground of irregularity not appearing on the face of the award was excluded by the law by which both parties had agreed to be bound. *Thorburn v. Rival businesses in plying ferry boats—Sale of good-will of one to the owner of the other—Agreement not to start similar business by vendor, if in restraint of trade.] The Respondent plied passenger ferry boats on a river. The Appellant started a similar business and gained an advantage over the Respondent by securing better landing places and negotiating facilities for collecting dues. In 1910, the Appellant purported to sell to the Respondent the good-will of his trade in plying the ferry boats and every description of interest and ownership which the Appellant had acquired in the several landing places as well as settlements obtained for the collection of tolls. By a separate document the Appellant undertook to close the business of plying the particular ferry boats and that if he ever carried on the business again he would return the whole amount of consideration. The contract was made on 21st January 1914, and it was headed "contract shipment and arrival." The goods were to be shipped in July and August 1914. The Defendant had previously ordered 50 cases of white shawl cloth from sellers in London. In part fulfilment of the Defendant's order 20 cases were shipped in

July 1914 by his sellers in a German ship SS. "Spitzfels," Hamburg to Calcutta. The German ship was captured by the British in the Mediterranean shortly after the outbreak of the war and was condemned as prize. Under Government orders the cargo was transhipped at Alexandria into a different ship, which arrived in Calcutta in June 1916, delivery to the consignees being made conditional upon payment of extra charges in the nature of transshipping and forwarding expenses. There was a provision in the contract that in case of loss of the ship the contract should stand cancelled. There was a further provision in the contract that if the goods did not arrive within the specified time, the sellers should notify their buyers, and the latter should declare whether they are prepared to grant an extension of time, otherwise the contract should be considered as cancelled. The Defendant did not inform the Plaintiff of the arrival of the cases in June 1916 and he similarly ignored his other buyers of 1914, and sold them to other dealers at a profit to himself, the market having risen. The Plaintiff in July 1917 in consequence of information which he had received, tendered the contract price to the Defendant and brought the present suit for non-delivery of the goods. Held—That having regard to the capture of the ship and the transshipment, the Plaintiff was not entitled to the delivery of the goods on their arrival in June 1916 in the same manner as if there had been no interruption. Per Sanderson, C. J.—The arrival of goods in June 1916, after the events which happened, was not such an arrival as was contemplated by the parties to the contract. The purpose of the contract and the intention of the parties to the contract were altogether upset by the capture of the ship, by the prolonged delay and by the other circumstances which were the result thereof. Consequently the Defendant was not bound to deliver the goods to the Plaintiff when they eventually did arrive in June 1916. Per Richardson, J.—Regard being had to the events which happened, the contract had ceased to be operative when the goods arrived in June 1916. If the contract between the Defendant and his shippers became illegal owing to the outbreak of the war, it may be that the contract between the Plaintiff and the Defendant fell with it, but the question of illegality not having been raised, the conclusion that the events which happened dissolved the contract may be supported by recourse to the doctrine of frustration, according to which a subsequent event or contingency beyond the ken of the parties at the time of the transaction, for the occurrence of which neither of them is responsible and for which they have not provided, may operate to undermine and avoid the contract between them. *Horlock v. s. 253, cl. (10)—Dissolution of partnership by death of a partner—Execution of a trust deed by a partner, the other partner affixing his signature as an attesting witness, if can be treated as a "contract to the contrary"—Representatives of deceased partner, if entitled to profits of the business continued by the surviving partner.] A partnership business was carried on by two persons, one of whom died in August 1915. On the day previous to his death he executed a trust deed for continuance of the business after his death and the other partner affixed his signature thereto only as an attesting witness, but after the execution of the deed said that he would not carry on the business unless his remuneration was fixed. The trustees too subsequently refused to carry on the business. The surviving partner continued the business alone: Held—That by the execution of the trust deed and the signature of the other partner as an attesting witness thereto, there was no concluded "contract to the contrary" within the meaning of sec. 253 of the Contract Act and the partnership was dissolved by the death of one of the partners in August 1915 by virtue of the operation of cl. (10) of the section. Held further—That as to the profits made out of the business by the surviving partner subsequently, the latter was bound to share them with the representatives of the deceased partner, after making all just allowances including fair remuneration for his management, in accordance with

- CONTRIBUTION SUIT—Co-sharer's right to be reimbursed when money realised by creditor by coercive process—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Arts. 61, 99, 120—Time from which limitation runs. The Plaintiff and the Defendants were owners of five different jotes. In execution of one of the decrees obtained by the landlord in respect of the five jotes one of the jotes was put up to sale and purchased by the Plaintiff. The landlord took out the amount of his dues in respect of that jote out of the sale proceeds and in respect of the other jotes he attached the balance and ultimately withdrew it. The sale of the first jote was set aside, but the Plaintiff failed to obtain restitution of the sale proceeds. The Plaintiff thereupon sued the Defendants for contribution: Held—That the joint liability of the Plaintiff and the Defendants having been discharged by the money of the former there was no doubt that the Defendants obtained the benefit of the same. That although under sec. 173 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, the Plaintiff being one of the judgment-debtors could not purchase at the sale, the Plaintiff and the Defendant having bid for the jote and the Plaintiff's bid having been accepted the purchase by the Plaintiff was not void but only voidable. In any case after the sale was set aside the money deposited became the money of the Plaintiff alone and should be treated as having been lawfully paid, or appropriated in payment of the decree for rent. That so far as the right of contribution against co-sharers is concerned it does not matter whether the money is actually handed over by the party seeking contribution or is realised from him by coercive process by the creditor. In either case the right to contribution arises from the fact that one of the co-sharers has paid in excess of his share and the joint liability of all the co-sharers has been discharged. That the suit was not barred under Arts. 61 or 99 of the Limitation Act, having been brought within three years of the setting aside of the sale or under Art. 120, having been brought within six years of the date of payment. GOPENATH MOONSHI v. of acts of possession during currency thereof
Onus on Defendant to prove adverse possession for statutory period—Qualities which make possession adverse—Effect of acts of possession by owner upon the character of trespasser's possession which is claimed to be adverse.] Where the original title is unknown and both parties in a suit for ejectment give evidence of possession the Court will be justified in deciding in favour of one party or the other by a comparison of the evidence, judged in the light of probabilities. Such possession has to be interpreted according to the fairest view of what the property itself (in this case forest land) was capable of in the way of possession and what upon a broad view would be considered an adequate assertion of title by sufficient occupation. But where the Plaintiff has succeeded in proving a clear title the onus lies on the Defendant to prove adverse possession for the statutory period; and possession to be "adverse" must have all the qualities of adequacy, continuity and exclusiveness. Radharoni Debi v. The Collector of Khulna, L. R. 27 I. A. 136, 140. s. c. 4 C. W. N. 597 (1900) and The Secretary of State for India in Council v. Chelikani Rama Rao, L. R. 43 I. A. 192; s. c. I. L. When the holder of title proves that he too has been exercising during the currency of his title various acts of possession, then the quality of these acts, even though they might have failed to constitute adverse possession as against another, may be quite sufficient to destroy that adequacy and interrupt that exclusiveness, and continuity which is demanded from any person challenging by possession, the title which he holds. KRISHNAN alias KRISHNAN MOOTHAVAR v. ELECTION, suit to set aside—Specific Relief Act (1 of 1877). s. 42, scope of—Legal character, what is.] The Plaintiff, who was unsuccessful as a candidate for election as a Municipal Commissioner, sued for a declaration that the election, being in contravention of the Plaintiff's right and franchise, right of election and right of being present at the polling place, was not according to law proper and valid and was ultra vires, and that the election of the Defendants was illegal, and he further prayed that they should be restrained by injunction from forming the Municipal Board: Held—That although the words "legal character" in sec. 42 of the Specific Relief Act have been held to be wide enough to include the right of franchise and also a right of being elected as a Municipal Commissioner, it was doubtful whether, regard being had to the form of the suit and the declarations asked for, the case came within the words of the section. That, assuming that the Court had inherent jurisdiction to entertain the suit, having regard to the circumstances of the case, there was no ground for setting aside the election. CHAIRMAN OF THE MUNICIPAL COMMISSIONERS OF KOTRUNG v. Several applications were made to the Chairman of the Municipality under r. 7 for removal of his name, and the said voter too made an application under r. 6 for inclusion of his name in the Register. All these applications were disposed of by the Chairman on the same date. He allowed the applications under r. 7, and directed the name of the said voter to be removed from the register. The said voter thereupon applied to the District Magistrate under r. 10, who restored his name in the register. On appeal, it was contended that r. 10 was inapplicable because the name of the said voter was already on the register when he made the application under r. 6 for inclusion of his name therein: Held—That the Chairman could not have dealt with the application of the voter in question before he had decided the applications under sec. 7, and he had not rejected the application of the said voter as premature. In these circumstances, the application might well be regarded as having been presented on the day and after the applications under sec. 7 were disposed of, although it was on the record from before. In that view the Magistrate had power under r. 10 to make an order for the insertion of the name in the register. Besides, r. 29 gives a general power to the Magistrate to decide all disputes arising under the Rules, so the Magistrate had power to decide the point under r. 29. SYAM

The lessor having instituted a suit for ejectment on the ground of expiry of the period of the lease, the Defendant stated that the year in respect of jalkars begins from the commencement of the rains, i.e., from Ashar, and the term of yearly settlement subsists till then, so that the term of the aforesaid settlement did not expire before Ashar 1325. The Court of first instance held that the expression used in the contract was unambiguous and that oral evidence was not admissible to show that the expression San meant not the Bengali year which ends on the last day of Chaitra, but another period which ends in Ashar. Held—That it is well-settled that various words in written documents which prima facie present no ambiguity may be interpreted by extrinsic evidence of usage, and their peculiar meaning, when found in connection with the subject-matter of the transaction, fixed by parole testimony. Therefore evidence was admissible to show that the term San did not signify the Bengali year, but a different period specially applicable to jalkar tenancies. Grant v. Maddox, 15 M. & W. 737; 71 R. Held further—That the circumstance that evidence had been improperly excluded by the trial Court did not justify a reversal of the decree and a remand of the suit. Under the provisions of Or. 41, rr. 27, 28 and 29, it was open to the Appellate Court either to take the evidence itself or to direct the primary Court to take the evidence and to send it to the Appellate Court for consideration. be executed against tenant personally, when the tenure was sold in execution of the first decree—Sale, subject to directions in the second decree.] Two compromise rent decrees provided that the landlord should satisfy his claim for rent by sale of the tenure. Under the first decree the property was sold and purchased by the decree-holder and the decree-holder next applied for personal execution of the second decree: Held—That the executing Court cannot go behind the decree and must give effect, if possible, to both the decrees. The second decree having been passed before the sale of the property, the sale was subject to the directions contained in the second decree. The first decree for rent, being a special rent decree passed on a contract between the parties, was not an ordinary rent decree under the Bengal Tenancy Act under which all encumbrances would be avoided. Objection on the ground of non-service of notice—Concurrent findings by two Courts in India—Non-interference by Judicial Committee—Adjudication of judgment-debtor as insolvent—Subsequent Proceedings in execution against sons and heirs only of judgment-debtor.] In execution of a decree passed in 1896 the decree-holder in December 1915 applied for the attachment of a certain property of the judgment-debtor and obtained the order of attachment on the 21st January 1916. In March 1916 the judgment-debtor applied to have the order of attachment set aside on the ground that no notice of execution had been served on him and the decree was barred by limitation. The decree-holder's contention was that the judgment had been revived by a writ of attachment issued on the 3rd February 1904 and within 12 years from that date, viz., on the 12th January 1916, the notice of execution taken out in December 1915 had been served. This application of the judgment-debtor was, in the first instance, dismissed but on appeal a remand was ordered on 23rd November 1916. On the same day the judgment-debtor was declared an insolvent by the Privy Council. The judgment-debtor died on 25th April 1918 and on 5th August 1918 the decree-holder took out a summons against the present Appellants, the sons and heirs of the judgment-debtor, to show cause why the original decree should not be executed against them and having thus revived against them brought the matter of the remand on for hearing. The decision of both the trial Judge and the High Court in appeal on the remand was that notice had been served on the judgment-debtor as alleged by him: Held—That, on the question of service of notice, there was nothing exceptional to cause their Lordships to interfere with two concurrent findings of fact. Held, further—That in the absence of information as to whether the order adjudicating an insolvent was afterwards annulled or came to a termination in

Where the District Judge acting under the Guardians and Wards Act empowers the guardian to sell a property of the minors for an alleged debt of theirs and further directs him to put in the bonds after these have been satisfied and so endorsed by the creditors, it does not follow that non-compliance with the latter direction vitiates the sale if actually carried out and the vendee has all along been in possession of the purchased property. Upon taxation of the costs a question arose with regard to four fees of Counsel and the Taxing Officer said that he could not allow those fees without an order of Court as required by r. 32 of the taxation rules. Thereupon an application was made to the Judge by the said former Attorney for an order that in the taxing of his costs as between Attorney and client the Taxing Officer might do so irrespective of the taxation rules as regards payment of Counsel's fees. The learned Judge rejected the application on the ground that he had no jurisdiction to make the order asked for: Held—That the fact that the matter was not raised by means of a reference by the Taxing Officer does not deprive the Judge of his jurisdiction under r. 32. The Judge had jurisdiction to deal with the application and to decide the matter on its merits. The proviso in r. 32 requiring client's written authority or ratification for payment of the fees applies to the jurisdiction and discretion of the Taxing Officer only and does not control the jurisdiction and discretion of the Court or a Judge. The proviso applies to a case when the Court or a Judge has not ordered or does not order otherwise. Even assuming that r. 6 must be taken to refer to Counsel's fees, although such fees are not specifically mentioned therein, the rule is a direction to the Taxing Officer only and does not limit or control the jurisdiction of the Court or a Judge given by r. 32. It is open to the learned Judge to consider the question as to the proper time and procedure at and in which such an application should be made to him. SAILLENDRA MOHAN DUTT v. Held also—That the fact that the manager had been an attesting witness to a conveyance by which his co-sharers subsequently purported to transfer the property did not estop him from denying their title. Attestation of a deed by itself estops a man from denying nothing whatever excepting that he has witnessed the execution of the deed. It conveys, neither directly nor by implication, any knowledge of the contents of the documents. as recognised by the School of Benares, an orphan cannot be adopted. It is also beyond doubt that in some parts of Northern India, particularly in districts now in the Punjab or adjacent to the Punjab, the strict rules of the Mitakshara, as recognised by the School of Benares, have not been followed by some castes, tribes and families of Hindus, and that customs which are at variance with that law have for long been consistently followed and acted upon and that when such customs are established, they, and not the strict rules of the Mitakshara with which they are at variance, are to be applied. They are found principally amongst the agricultural classes, but they are also to be found among classes which are not agricultural. The Dhusars of Gurgaon are governed in matters of adoption not by the orthodox Hindu law but by customary law; and the adoption of orphans by Dhusars being consistent with that customary law is valid. RAMKISHORE v. Dayabhaga family with a minor coparcener—Loan by karta for new business started after father's death—Liability of minor—Adult brothers adjudicated insolvent and Receiver appointed of their shares—Partition between Receiver and minor and share of all properties including after-acquired given to minor—Suit against minor for money borrowed for new business—Receiver if necessary party—Indian Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 247, scope and meaning of—Order directing accounts to ascertain Defendant's liability, appeal against—Order, if "final"—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), ss. 109, 97.] The Defendant a minor and his brothers were members of a Dayabhaga family. The ancestral businesses which their father had were carried on after the father's death by the eldest brother as karta assisted by the adult brothers and they started a new business for which they borrowed sums of money from the Plaintiffs in the two suits out of which the present appeals arose. Proceedings under the Insolvency Act were taken and the adult brothers were adjudicated insolvent and a Receiver was appointed to take possession of the adult brothers' proportionate share of all ancestral and after-acquired properties. A partition took place between the Receiver and the infant's guardian and the infant was given his proportionate share in all properties ancestral and after-acquired. The dividend received by the Plaintiffs in the insolvency, falling short of the amount due they sued to recover from the share of the Defendant, the minor, who disclaimed all interest in the new business: Held—That the suits to which the Receiver was not a party were misconceived. In the circumstances the Receiver was a necessary party to any proceeding for the purpose of realising assets liable for the firm's debts and the proceeds of any realisation would be applicable, not towards the exclusive discharge of any individual debt but for rateable distribution among the whole body of the firm's creditors. of adjudication and if any part of it got improperly into the possession of the minor the right to recover it was in the Receiver. The distinction between an ancestral business and one started after the death of the ancestor as a source of partnership relations is patent. In the one case these relations result by operations of law from a succession on the death of an ancestor to an established business with its benefits and obligations. In the other they rest ultimately on contractual arrangement between the parties. Under sec. 247 of the Contract Act a minor may be admitted to the benefits of partnership but cannot be made personally liable for any obligations of the firm, but the share of such minor in the property of the firm is liable for the obligations of the firm. This share is no more than a right to participate in the property of the firm after its obligations have been satisfied. The High Court in reversing a decree dismissing the suits against the minor Defendant directed certain accounts against the Defendant, not because his liability was established but for the purpose of determining whether or not he was liable. On appeal to the Judicial Committee a preliminary objection that the order was not "final" and in consequence not appealable was overruled by the Judicial Committee. SANYASI CHARAN MANDAL v. Family custom—Migration of family carrying custom of primogeniture—Custom if necessarily ceases with the cesser of office.] In a suit for partition of family properties, the principal Defendant claimed that succession in the family was governed by the rule of primogeniture, the properties being in consequence impartible and as such belonging exclusively to him as the holder of the gaddi and the title of Rada. It was not disputed that the family to which the parties belonged were Chohan Rajpoots who had migrated from their original homes into the Nimar District in the Central Provinces. Held—That the presumption was that they carried with them to their new homes the customs and institutions to which they were subject in the land of their birth. That the evidence showed that the custom of primogeniture which the family brought with them continued to govern the family under the Mahomedan, the Marhatta and the British rules up to the present time, and that the existence of the family as an entity through so many centuries was mainly owing to this custom, and the theory favoured in the Judicial Commissioner's Court that after the head of the family ceased to be the holder of a hereditary fiscal office, the junior members must

Joint family—Karta, position of, if that of trustee in the strict sense—Accountability for money misapplied as karta—Interest payable thereon—Discretion of Courts in India, Privy Council if will interfere with—Adoption by Sudra—Partition among adopted son and after-born sons—Shares, if equal—Dattaka Chandrika, authority of, in Southern India and Bengal.] The trial Court directed the karta of a joint Hindu family to pay interest at 9 per cent. per annum on moneys misapplied by him, but the High Court on appeal reduced it to 6 per cent. per annum. Held, by the Judicial Committee, that it would require very special and unusual circumstances to induce it to vary such a decision which rested upon discretion even though in this matter the view of the High Court differed from that of the trying Court as to the way in which that discretion should be exercised. On the merits of the matter, too, the Judicial Committee agreed with the High Court. There are a number of fiduciary relationships in India to which the rules applicable to strict accounts between trustees and cestuis que trusts in England cannot in their entirety apply—the office of manager of a joint Hindu family affording one such instance. In the absence of proof of direct misappropriation or fraudulent and improper conversion of the moneys to the personal use of the manager, he is liable to account for what he received and not for what he ought to or might have received if the moneys had been profitably dealt with. The rule of the Dattaka Chandrika that on a partition of the joint family property of a Sudra family, an adopted son is entitled to share equally with the legitimate son born to the adoptive father subsequently to the adoption, although not supported by any ancient text of the Smritis or by the Mitakshara is not inconsistent, so far as Sudras are concerned, with the Smritis or the Mitakshara, and having been accepted and acted upon for at least more than a century in the Presidency of Madras until the law on the subject was disturbed in 1918 by the decision of the Madras High Court in Karuturi Gopalam v. Karuturi Venkataraghavulu, I. L. R. 40 Mad. 632; s. c. 29 M. L. J. 710 (1915), should be affirmed as the law applicable in such cases in that Presidency. Karuturi Gopalam v. however follow from this, that comments and propositions contained in it, apparently novel, when the Dattaka Chandrika was first accepted in Southern India as an authority on the law of adoption, if not based upon ancient texts which can with some certainty be identified, have been accepted by the Hindus of Southern India as part of Hindu law. ARUMILLI PERRAZU v. Maharatta School—Widow's power to adopt without husband's authority and without consent of kindred—Authority by husband—Particular boy named—Direction if operates as prohibition to adopt another boy on his death.] The rule laid down in Rakhmabai v. Radhabai, 5 Bom. H. C. R. A. C. J. 181 (1868), that in the Maharatta Country, a Hindu widow may, without the permission of her husband and without the consent of his kindred, adopt a son to him, if the act is done by her in the proper and bona fide performance of a religious duty and neither capriciously nor from a corrupt motive, is equally applicable whether her husband at the time of his death was joint or separate and whether his property was or was not vested in her as his heir at the time when she made the adoption. Ramji v. Ghamau, I. L. R. 6 Bom. 498 at p. 503 (1879) and Dinkar Sitaram v. Ganesh Shivram, I. L. R. 6 Bom. 505 (1879), overruled. Report of Bayabai v. Bala Venkatish, 7 Bom. H. C. R. Where the most that could be said was that the husband directed his wife to adopt a particular boy, but said nothing as to what should be done if the boy named should be unavailable or should die after he was adopted, and the boy who was adopted after the husband's death in childhood and unmarried: Held—That there was no explicit or clearly expressed intention to prohibit the widow against adopting any boy other than the boy named, and a second adoption by the widow to her husband subsequently to his death was validly made. YADAO v. Mitakshara—Joint family—Bond held in the name of a member—Separate private transactions by individual members—Presumption of jointness, if rebutted.] The presumption is that a bond held in the name of the managing member of a joint Mitakshara Hindu family is joint property and it is for those who assert the contrary to make good their case. Proof that some of the members of the joint family had some private transactions by no means proves that the particular bond in question was the private property of the member in whose name it was held. Held—That while the evidence on both sides was somewhat meagre the presumption in favour of joint ownership was not displaced. BANDHU RAM v. CHINTAMAN (P. C.) 406 on minor son, if bound father's undivided share—Power of father to dispose of joint property.] R, the managing member of a joint Hindu family, for himself and as guardian of his minor son G, after obtaining a decree for money against T, by compromise surrendered all his rights and those of G, the consideration mentioned being that T would not prosecute an appeal he had preferred against that decree. Two more sons were born to R subsequently to the compromise. G on attaining majority having sued to set aside the compromise, it was held that the compromise did not bind G: Held—That as the decree was a portion of the joint family property, R could deal with it only with the consent of G or as manager for a justifying necessity: and therefore the compromise failed as a whole and did not bind even the then existing share of R in the undivided property. That the compromise having been set aside T was entitled to proceed with his appeal. T. R. VENKATA ROW v. T. V. TULJARAM ROW (P. C.) ... 645

—Succession, order of, amongst atma-bandhus—Division into ex parte paterna and ex parte materna, and preference of former to latter, if justifiable—Doctrine of of spiritual benefit, if determines preference—Propinquity alone, if ground of preference—The rule in Mitakshara, if open to question as spurious or as incomplete—Enumeration of heirs, illustrative—Viramitrodaya, authority of, in Southern India—Maternal uncle's place in the order of succession.] The passage in the Mitakshara, Chap. II, sec. 6, para. 1, laying down the order of succession amongst the bandhus has been accepted by a series of Commentators and by eminent Hindu Judges in the British Indian Courts, and any doubt at this stage as to its character or authority will lead only to perplexity and confusion. The enumeration of bandhus in the passage being intended, by way of illustration only, the rule is not open to objection on the ground of incompleteness. The question being whether according to the law of the Mitakshara as recognised in the Dravira Country, the maternal uncle or the son of the paternal aunt's son (both of whom are atma-bandhus) should succeed as the preferential heir: Held—That there is nothing in para. 598 of the Sarasvati Vilasa to justify the division of the atma-bandhus in two sub-classes, viz., ex parte paterna and ex parte materna or the preference of the former to the latter. That, in the absence of express authority varying the rule, the propositions enunciated in Muttusami v. Muttukumarasami, I. L. R. 18 Mad. 23 (1892): affirmed on (P. C.): I. L. R. 23 I. Mitakshara—Partition, clear expression of intention to separate, if effects—After notice expressing intention to separate, joint family if liable for marriage expenses of members—Father's right to give money to daughter.] Under the Hindu law, it is open to the members of a joint family to make a division and a severance of interest in respect of a part of the joint estate whilst retaining their status as a joint family and holding the rest as the properties of a joint undivided family. Under the law of the Mitakshara, an unambiguous and definite intimation of intention on the part of one member of the family to separate himself and to enjoy his share in severalty has the effect of creating a division of the interest which until then he had held in jointness. No obligation therefore lay on the joint family to provide for the expenses of the marriage of some of the Plaintiffs which took place after the latter had given to their co-parceners a notice clearly expressing such an intention but before a decree for partition was made in their suit in the Court of first instance. The father has undoubtedly the power under the Hindu law of making within reasonable limits gifts of moveable property to a daughter and in one case the Judicial Committee upheld the gift of a small share of immoveable property on the ground that it was not shown to be unreasonable. K. RAMALINGA ANNAVI v. NARAYANA ANNAVI (P. C.) 929

Southern India—Inheritance—Division amongst sons by putrabhag approvable as custom—Custom proved as prevailing amongst Chettis of certain villages, if open to objection as unreasonable, as a local custom—Chettis, if Sudras.] Though division of the inheritance amongst sons by putrabhag (i.e., according to the number of sons) is now the recognised rule of Hindu law, there are traces of division by putrabhag (i.e., according to wives). Therefore, though the prevailing law is putrabhag, putrabhag may be proved to exist as a territorial family or caste custom specially in Southern India, where it is possible that the matriarchal theories of the earlier inhabitants may have led to the prevalence of this custom and caused difficulties in the way of its being extirpated by the Brahmans when they introduced the law of the Smritis in Southern India. The Chettis are generally deemed to be Sudras. Held, on the evidence, that the custom of putrabhag proved in the case was one of the particular class of Chettis who happened to dwell in, and probably were at the moment the only dwellers in, an area of seven villages; and such a custom could not rightly be described as a local custom, which it would be unreasonable to impose upon all persons dwelling in the area. HINDU LAW. Temple property, permanent lease of, questioned after 100 years—presumption that alienation was lawfully made.] The disability of a shebait of a Hindu Deity to make a permanent grant of endowed property is not absolute. Although the shebait for the time being has no power to make a permanent alienation of such property in the absence of proved necessity for the alienation, yet the long lapse of time between the alienation and the challenge of its validity is a circumstance which enables the Court to assume that the original grant was made in exercise of that extended power. Chockalingham Pillai v. Mayandi Chettiar, I. L. R. 19 Mad. 485 (1896), followed. The above principle was applied in the present case of a permanent lease of temple property which was challenged after the lapse of 100 years, when it had become completely impossible to ascertain the circumstances which caused the grant to be made. The importance to parties to litigation in India of defining at the earliest moment and in the simplest terms the exact character and extent of the dispute which is going to be made the subject of litigation adverted to. Will—Construction—Bequest to widows by Mithila Hindu—Interest given whether absolute or limited—"Malik," "malkiyat," meaning and effect of—Danger of construing one Will by reference to another—Translation of vernacular documents, challenged in the High Court—Proper procedure.] The term "malik," when used in a Will or other document as descriptive of the position which a devisee or donee is intended to hold, has been held apt to describe an owner possessed of full proprietary rights, including a full right of alienation, unless there is something in the context or in the surrounding circumstances to indicate that such full proprietary rights were not intended to be conferred. But the meaning of every word in an Indian Will must always depend upon the setting in which it is placed, the subject to which it related, and the locality of the testator from which it may receive its true shade of meaning. Where a Hindu governed by the Mithila School of Hindu law purported by his Will to confer on his wives "full power and all proprietary rights (malkiyat) over all his moveable and immoveable properties": Held—That the rights intended to be conferred included full rights of alienation. It is always dangerous to construe the words of one Will by the construction of more or less similar words in a different Will, which was adopted by a Court in another case. Proper procedure where the correctness of the official translation of a vernacular document is challenged in the High Court indicated. MUSAMMAT SASIMAN CHOWDHURAIN v. SHIB NARAYAN CHOWDHURY (P. "malik" and directed that she should leave the property to his two daughters in such manner as she might like: Held—That the word "malik" taken in conjunction with the context indicated a clear intention to pass an absolute estate, and that even assuming it were intended to create a trust, the subject-matter of such trust was too uncertain. The word "malik" is not a term of art, it does not necessarily define the quality of estate taken but the ownership of whatever that estate may be, but in the context of the present Will, it imported that the estate was absolute. If words are used in a Hindu's Will conferring absolute ownership upon the wife, the wife enjoys the rights of ownership without their being conferred by express and additional terms, unless the circumstances or the context were sufficient to show that such absolute ownership was not intended. *Mussammat surajmani v. Right of succession of young widowed daughter in a caste where widow remarriage is permitted—Necessity of proof of custom entitling the widowed daughter to succeed equally with a married daughter.] A Hindu was succeeded by his widow, and on her death, the contest for succession was between a childless widowed daughter aged 16 or 17 and a married daughter having a son. In the caste to which the parties belonged widow remarriage is permitted: Held—That though widow remarriage is a custom in the caste, that does not by itself predicate the further custom that the widowed daughter, because it is open to her to remarry, is entitled to succeed equally with the married daughter. There must be clear proof of custom entitling the widowed daughter to succeed equally with the married daughter. BINO DINI HAZRANI v. SUSTHA HAZRANI 29

Widow—Power to make permanent lease—Benefit of estate—Acquisition of tenant's rights—Accretion to husband's estate—Onus on Appellant to show error in judgment appealed from.] A permanent lease executed by a Hindu widow does not bind the reversioners unless legal necessity and benefit to the estate are proved. The mere fact that the rent and purchase price represent the fair market value does not of itself prove necessity. Tenant rights acquired by a Hindu widow are, in the absence of proof that they were acquired out of the accumulated savings of her income and were dealt with as her separate property, accretions to her husband's estate and as such cannot be sold by her so as to give a title as against the reversioners. *NARA KISHORE MONDAL v. INCOME TAX ACT, INDIAN (VII of 1918), ss. 31, 33, 34—Assessment to super-tax as agent of principal non-resident in British India—Agent who is—Agent, if must be in receipt of income on behalf of principal.] The applicant Company was assessed to super-tax as agent for six share-holders in the Company all of whom were non-residents of British India in regard to the dividends payable to them by the Company: Held per Woodroffe and Greaves, JJ.—That secs. 31 and 34 of the Indian Income Tax Act are to be read together, the latter section merely defining who may be included as an agent under sec. 31. That being so the agent must be in receipt of income within the terms of sec. 31 and the Company was not in receipt of income on behalf of the share-holders within the meaning of sec. 31. That even if the two sections be read disjointly the Company was not in the circumstances of the case an agent within the terms of the Act. That in this view no question as to the propriety of assessment to super-tax as agent arose. Per B. B. Ghose, J., contra.—Under sec. 33, sub-sec. (1), the agent of any person residing out of British India whose income accrues or arises within British India need not be in receipt of the income on behalf of such person to be assessable to the tax in respect of such income; the mere fact of agency is sufficient. Sec. 34 was enacted for the purpose of assessing the income of such non-residents when they have not appointed agents residing in British India who might be assessed under sec. 33 (1). It is only necessary that the person on whom the Collector has served a notice under sec. 34 is a "person employed by or on behalf of a person residing out of British India or having any business connection with such person" and if that condition is satisfied the person on whom such notice has been served shall for the purposes of the Income Tax Act be deemed to be the agent of such person. The Judge put to him certain questions and elicited certain answers. The Receiver also submitted a report and a petition on the same date. The Judge after considering the report and the petitions submitted and after hearing pleaders refused to go into the question of title and decided that the insolvent had a saleable interest in the properties. He thereupon directed the Receiver to sell the insolvent's right, title and interest in the properties under the provisions of sub-sec. (3) of sec. 4 of the Provincial Insolvency Act. Held—That though the Court had power under sub-sec. (1) of sec. 4 to decide a question of title, it had full discretion to follow the course laid down in sub-sec. (3), i.e., to refuse to decide questions of title and to direct sale of insolvent's right, title and interest, whatever that might be. Where the Court has reason to believe that the debtor has a saleable interest in any property, it may without further enquiry sell such interest. The matters stated in the report of the Receiver and the answers given by the claimant when questioned by the Judge, were sufficient materials for his coming to the conclusion that the debtor had a saleable interest in the property. *JITENDRA NATH BHATTACHARJEE v. In Madras, the Karnam of the village occupies his office not by hereditary or family right, but as personal appointee, though in certain cases that appointment is primarily exercised in favour of a suitable person who is member of a particular family. The enfranchisement of the Karnam lands in 1906, whereby the Inam was confirmed to V, "his representatives and assigns, to hold and dispose of as he or they might think proper," subject to the payment of quit rent, etc., and the reservation of minerals, did not enure for the benefit of the joint family of which V was a member but to him exclusively. Different considerations apply to the case of a Palayam; for when a Palayam was abolished, in so far as the duty of rendering military service was concerned, the estate was continued with all its hereditary incidents to the Palayagar in the same manner as if possessed by a zamindar, and the Full Court of Madras were in error in applying the law regarding Palayams by analogy to a Karnam case in *Gunnaiyan v. s. 54—"Award," if includes decision on disputed question as to disposition of compensation money.] The "award" as constituted by the Land Acquisition Act is nothing but an award which states the area of the land, the compensation to be allowed and the apportionment amongst persons whose interest are not in dispute. of land under a compromise decree—Lessee, if entitled to suspension of entire rent when he does not get possession of a portion of the leasehold, known to both parties to be in the possession of a stranger—Liability for proportionate rent—Lessor's bona fides and mala fides, effect of. A. purchased a jote at a sale for arrears of rent, but found the major portion of it in the possession of B. and the rest in the possession of C. He thereupon brought a suit against B. for declaration of his title to, and khas possession of, the land in B.'s possession. The suit was compromised and under the compromise B. took a lease of the entire jote, but did not obtain possession of the portion which was in C.'s possession. A. subsequently brought a suit against B. for arrears of rent of the entire jote: Held—That where the lessor has evicted the lessee from a part of the land demised the entire rent is suspended. Sarada Prosad v. Monmotha Nath, 19 C. W. N. 870 at p. 871 (1914), referred to. The present case is not an ordinary case of settlement, where the lessor has to deliver possession of the land demised to the lessee. The lessee was already in possession (though wrongful) of the major portion and took settlement of the entire jote with full knowledge that a portion of it was in the wrongful possession of a third party. These indicate an intention that the liability of the lessee to pay rent in respect of the portion in his possession already did not depend upon the delivery of possession of the other portion which was in another's possession. The lessor never put any obstruction in the way of the lessee recovering possession and there is no question of mala fides on the part of the lessor. Therefore the lessee cannot claim suspension of the entire rent, and he is liable to pay proportionate rent in respect of the portion of the jote in his possession. *Manindra Chandra v. LETTERS PATENT, cl. 15—Judgment—Suit on behalf of a lunatic—Benefit of the lunatic—Application to take the plaint off the file—Dismissal of the application—Right to apply at the hearing—Final decision. In a suit instituted on behalf of a lunatic one of the Defendants applied for taking the plaint off the file on the grounds, amongst other, that the suit was not for the benefit of the lunatic and was an abuse of the process of the Court. The Court dismissed the application on the ground that on the materials before the Court at that stage, the Court was not prepared to hold that these grounds were substantiated. The Defendant appealed: Held—That the order dismissing the application was not a "judgment" within the meaning of cl. 15 of the Letters Patent, inasmuch as the said order did not finally decide any right between the parties, it being open to the Defendant to substantiate the grounds by further materials at the hearing of the suit. he gets his costs. The execution case is dismissed for default. The decree-holder will get his costs;” Held—That the order dismissing the execution case must be treated as equivalent to an order for striking off the case or removing it from the file for the convenience of the Court; and a subsequent application for execution made more than three years after the date of the first application was therefore to be regarded as one in continuation or revival of the previous application. CHOWDHURY AJODHYA NATH PAHARY v. LIMITATION ACT (IX of 1908), s. 14, applicability of, when the parties in the two proceedings are not the same—Arts. 62 and 97, which applies, where an execution purchaser of a putni paid rent to the zemindar after the setting aside of the sale by the first Court and during the pendency of infructuous appeal—Existing consideration, meaning of.] Plaintiff purchased a putni at a sale held under Reg. VIII of 1819 in May 1908. In October 1910 the purchaser paid rent to the zemindar after the sale was set aside by the Court of first instance in May 1910, and during the pendency of an appeal by the zemindar, which was ultimately dismissed. There were certain proceedings for assessment of mesne profits between the purchaser and the original putnidar on the basis of the decree for cancellation of the sale. Thereafter the said purchaser in February 1916 sued for recovery of the money paid as rent to the zemindar: Held—That the suit was barred. In view of the provisions of sec. 14 of the Limitation Act, the Plaintiff was not entitled to a deduction of the time during which the mesne profits proceedings were going on as the zemindar was not a party therein, nor was there, since October 1910, any period of time when the right of the Plaintiff to sue was suspended by reason of events over which he had no control. Prannath v. mortgage bond securing an advance of Rs. 5,700, the question was whether an endorsement made on the back of the mortgage bond by the mortgagor in the following terms: “Paid on account of the principal as per separate accounts Rs. 1,751 only” was a valid acknowledgment within sec. 19 of the Limitation Act. Held—That the expression “the principal” must be taken to refer to the principal mentioned in the bond on the back whereof the endorsement was made. The examination of the bond shows that the principal advanced being Rs. 5,700, a payment of Rs. 1,751 on account of that principal cannot be taken to wipe out the liability and there was thus an acknowledgment of the right of the mortgagee to recover whatever might be found to be due. Therefore, the endorsement constituted an acknowledgment within the meaning of sec. 19 and consequently saved limitation. Shearman v. Fleming, 5 B. L. R. 619 (1870) and Madhavray v. The said application for execution was made more than three years after the date of the decree, but within three years from the dates of the said payments: Held—That the payments, which were evidenced by letter written and signed by the judgment-debtor, having been made within three years of the decree and within three years of the present application for execution, and they having been certified by a petition which was made a part of the application for execution, the application for execution was not barred by limitation. Lakhi v. partnership—Suit by other partner for recovery of share therein, if maintainable after suit for general accounts barred—Position where an item falls in after accounts squared off—Fresh cause of action. It is contrary to the policy of the Legislature to allow a partner, whose right to sue for a general partnership accounts has been barred by limitation, to sue for his share of specific payments received from debtors by one partner subsequently to the dissolution of the partnership, permitting the latter by way of set off to claim what may be found due to him upon taking the partnership accounts. If a partnership has been dissolved and the accounts have been wound up and each partner has paid what he has to contribute to the debts of the partnership and received his share of the profits, the mutual rights and obligations having been thus all discharged, and then it turns out afterwards that there was some item to the credit of the partnership which was either forgotten or treated as valueless by reason of the supposed insolvency of the debtor or for any other cause, which item afterwards becomes of value and falls in, it ought to be divided between the partners in proportion to their shares in the original partnership. If on the other hand no accounts have been taken and there is no constat that the partners have squared up, then the proper remedy when such an item falls in is to have the accounts of the partnership taken; and if it is too late to have recourse to that remedy, then it is also too late to claim a share in an item as part of the partnership assets. *Knox v. ... Art. 138—"Date when sale becomes absolute," significance of—Arts. 137, 138 and 144, which applies when an execution purchaser obtains symbolical possession, but is kept out of actual possession—S. 16, it applies to a suit for possession by such an execution purchaser.] A tenure was purchased at an execution sale, which was confirmed in August 1902. Symbolical possession was delivered to the purchaser in January 1904. An application for setting aside the sale was made in June 1905 and was rejected in April 1906. Being kept out of actual possession the purchaser brought a suit for possession in July 1914 and added some Defendants in March 1916, i.e., more than 12 years from the date on which the sale became absolute, as well as from the date when symbolical possession was delivered to the execution purchaser: Held—That the sale became absolute on the confirmation of the sale in August 1902 and not in April 1906, when the application for setting aside the sale was dismissed. The confirmation of a sale cannot be kept in abeyance (when no proceedings are taken to set aside the sale before the confirmation) in order to enable the judgment-debtor to take such proceedings afterwards. So if Art. 138 of the Limitation Act applied, the suit would be barred, even deducting the time during which the application for setting aside the sale was pending. Art. 137 did not apply as the judgment-debtor was in possession at the date of the sale. Art. 138 too was not the proper article applicable to the case. The purchaser obtained symbolical possession, which was as effective as actual possession against the judgment-debtor, and if the latter continued in possession, it was the Appellants did not cultivate the lands themselves but sub-leased them to cultivating tenants. On the termination of the lease the Appellants were served with a notice to quit. The Appellants, contending that inasmuch as they were cultivating the lands as raiyats when the Madras Estates Act of 1908 came into operation the contract of tenancy was entirely superseded by that statute, instituted a suit against the Respondents for determination of a fair and equitable rent for the holding leased to them and for a decree directing the Respondents to grant to them a patta in proper terms: Held—That the object of the Madras Estates Act, 1908 was to improve the condition and confer new rights and privileges especially upon the occupying cultivators of raiyati lands and it would be quite opposed to its policy to confer on middlemen who sub-let to occupying and cultivating tenants rights and privileges at all resembling those conferred on occupying cultivators and indeed would result in depriving the latter class of the benefits intended to be conferred upon them. The words "izadar" and farmer of rent" in sub-sec. 1, sec. 6, are not synonymous. They denote two classes of persons. If izadars and farmers of rent are raiyats at all, they are, as appears from sec. 46, non-occupying raiyats and cannot be converted into raiyats with a permanent right of occupancy. *SURISETTI BUTCHAYYA v. MAHOMEDAN LAW—Acknowledgment as son, what is necessary to its validity—Valid acknowledgment, operates as declaration of legitimacy and not as legitimation—Presumption of fact, rebuttable by proof of impossibility of marriage or no marriage—Concurrent findings of fact. In Mohammedan law, the acknowledgment by one person of another as his legitimate son is of no avail, in the face of a finding that there was no marriage. In Mohammedan law, such an acknowledgment is a declaration of legitimacy and not a legitimation—a declaration which, though it cannot be withdrawn, may be contradicted. By the Mohammedan law, a son to be legitimate must be the offspring of a man and his wife or of a man and his slave; any other offspring is the offspring of zina; that is, illicit connection, and cannot be legitimate. The term "wife" necessarily connotes marriage, but, as marriage may be constituted without any ceremonial, the existence of marriage in any particular case may be an open question. Direct proof may be available, but if there be no such, indirect proof may suffice. One of the ways of direct proof is by an acknowledgment of legitimacy in favour of a son. This acknowledgment must be not merely of sonship, but must be made in such a way that it shows that the acknowledgor meant to accept the other not only as his son but as his legitimate son. It must not be impossible upon the face of it, i.e., it must not be made when the ages are such that it is impossible in nature for the acknowledgor to be the father of the acknowledgee, or when the mother spoken to in an acknowledgment, being the wife of another, or within prohibited degrees of the acknowledgor, it would be apparent that the issue would be the issue of adultery or incest. The acknowledgment may be repudiated by the acknowledgee. But if none of these objections occur, then the acknowledgment has more than a mere evidential value. It raises a presumption of marriage—a presumption which may be taken advantage of either by a wife-claimant or a son-claimant. Being, however, a presumption of fact, and not juris et de jure, it is, like every other presumption of fact, capable of being set aside by contrary proof. The result is, that a claimant-son who has in his favour a good acknowledgment of legitimacy is in this position; the marriage will be held proved and his legitimacy established unless the marriage is disproved. Until the claimant establishes his acknowledgment the onus is on him to prove a marriage. Once he establishes an acknowledgment, the onus is on those who deny a marriage to negative it in fact. Muhammad Allahdad Khan v. Muhammad Ismail Khan, I. C. R. 10 All. 289 (1898) and Sadik Husain Khan v. Hashim Ali Khan, L. R. 43 I. A. 212; a. c. 51 C. W. N. 130 (1916) followed. Where the majority of the Judges in the Appellate Court affirmed the Trial Court's finding that the marriage was disproved, the finding was a concurrent finding which bound the Board. To constitute such a finding, the fact or facts found must be such as are necessary for the foundation of the proposition of law to be subsequently applied to them. *SYED HABIBAR RAHMAN CHOWDHURY v. ... Divorce by writing—Pregnancy followed by miscarriage—Divorce in khula form—Date on which period of iddat commences—Circumstances by which iddat may be terminated earlier. A Mahomedan husband executed and registered a deed of divorce in favour of the wife and a few days later saw her, pronounced the legal formulas, made over the document to her and went away. Subsequently she went through ceremonies of marriage with two persons one after the other, the marriage with the Plaintiff taking place last. In a suit for restitution of conjugal rights by the Plaintiff on the allegation that the first marriage after the divorce took place within the period of iddat and as such was void, the defence set up was that the period of iddat commenced on the date of the execution of the document and expired before the first marriage after the divorce took place, that the lady was pregnant at the time of the divorce and miscarried and this had the effect of terminating the period of iddat and that the divorce was in khula form: Held—That the divorce took effect from the date of the writing and not from the date of its receipt by the wife unless there were words in the instrument showing a different intention. That the case must be sent back for re-investigation as to the validity of the first marriage after the divorce on production of the Talaknama so as to enable the Court to consider whether there was anything in the document preventing its taking effect from the date of its execution and after allowing the parties to adduce relevant evidence regarding the divorce so as to enable the Court to consider the other points raised in the defence. *MOHAN MOLLA v. Wakf—Musalman Wakf Validating Act (VI of 1913)—Provision for support and maintenance of family how far validates wakf—If wakf property be mortgaged at the time of dedication whether the wakf valid—Whether delivery of possession essential—Settlor in death illness—Wakf affects what share of the property—Death illness, conditions of—Question when one of fact only and when of law and fact.] In a wakf although provision is made for the maintenance and support of the family, children and descendants of the settlor, if the ultimate benefit is reserved for the poor and for other purposes recognized by the Mahomedan law as religious, pious or charitable purposes of a permanent character, then, tested in the light of the provisions of the Musalman Wakf Validating Act, no valid objection can be taken to the legality of such a wakf. The circumstance that the property dedicated was under a mortgage at the time of creation of the endowment and that provision was made in the wakf for the discharge thereof does not render the endowment invalid under the Mahomedan Law. Shahzadi Hajra Begum v. Khaja Hossain Ali Khan, 12 W. R. 498; 4 B. L. R. 86 (A. C.) (1869), referred to. According to the Calcutta High Court, a valid wakf is created by declaration of endowment by the owner, and delivery of possession is not essential. Where the settlor had appointed himself as the first mutwali no formal delivery of possession from himself was a prerequisite to the validity of the wakf and even if transmutation of possession was necessary no formal delivery was essential. Abdul v. Bai Juna Bai, 14 Bom. L. R. 295 (1911), referred to. A Muslim who is in Marz-ul-maut or death-illness cannot make a valid disposition of more than one-third of his property after payment of funeral expenses and debts, and if he purports to make a wakf in such illness, unless his heirs assent, the wakf will affect only one-third of his estate and will be invalid in respect of the excess notwithstanding that possession of the entire property dedicated has been delivered to the person nominated mutwali. In order to establish the existence of death-illness there must be at least three conditions with regard to the illness which has caused death: (a) proximate danger of death so that there is a preponderance of apprehension of death, (b) there must be some degree of subjective apprehension of death in the mind of the sick person and (c) there must be some external indicia such as inability to attend to ordinary avocations. Fatima Bibi v. Ahmad Baksh, L. R. 35 I. A. 67; s. c. I. L. R. 35 Cal. 271; 12 C. W. N. 214 (1907), referred to. Whether or not a particular illness constitutes Marz-ul-maut is primarily a question of fact, but may sometimes be a mixed question of law and fact, for instance, where the question arises whether the facts found as to the physical condition of the deceased at the date of the execution of the deed constitute the essential elements of Marz-ul-maut as formulated by Mahomedan jurists. *BIBI JINJIRA KHATUN v. Proof of custom in derogation of, if permissible—Standard of proof—Onus—Lubbai Mahomedans of Coimbatore—Custom excluding females from succession. The parties to the litigation were Lubbai Mahomedans of the Sunni sect residing in the District of Coimbatore in the Madras Presidency, the question was whether succession to the estate of a deceased member of the sect was governed by Mahomedan Law or by a rule of descent excluding females: Held—That in view of sec. 16 of the Madras Civil Courts Act, III of 1873, prima facie all questions of succession amongst the parties who were Mahomedans were to be decided according to Mahomedan Law, but it is now well established that in India a custom at variance even with the rules of Mahomedan Law, governing the succession in a particular community of Mahomedans may be proved. The onus of proof is on the party alleging the custom. The custom should be ancient and invariable and established to be so by clear and unambiguous evidence. *Ramalakshmi Ammal v. Held—That the evidence in this case fell far short of the standard of proof requisite to establish the custom alleged. Apart from Madras Act III of 1873, the standard of proof found sufficient in Fanindra Deb Raikat v. Rajeswar Das, L. R. 12 I. A. 72 at p. 81; s. c. I. L. Merger is not a thing which occurs ipso jure upon the acquisition of what, for the sake of a just generalisation, may be called the superior with the inferior right. The question to be settled in the application of the doctrine is, was such a coalescence of right meant to be accomplished as to extinguish that separation of title which the records contain. *Capital and Counties Bank v. The fact that acquisitions of the superior and inferior interests on behalf of a joint Hindu family have been made in the names of different members thereof may point to an intention to keep the two interests from merging. DULHIN LACHHANBATI KUMRI v. MOHANT OF MUTT—Permanent lease by Mohant of Mutt without necessity—Lessee if acquires title by adverse possession after twelve years—Shebait or mutwalli, if "trustee"—Legal powers of Mohant and sajjadanashin—Application of rules of English law by analogy in such cases condemned—Indian Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Arts. 134, 144, s. 10. Neither under the Hindu law nor in the Mahomedan system is any property "conveyed" to a shebait or a mutwalli, in the case of a dedication. Nor is any property vested in him; whatever property he holds for the idol or the institution he holds as manager with certain beneficial interest regulated by custom and usage. The shebait or the mutwalli is not a "trustee" as understood in the English system though if any specific property is specifically entrusted to such a person for specific purposes, he might be regarded as trustee with regard to that property. Where the head of a Mutt gave a permanent lease of property which had been granted for the general purposes of the Mutt and no necessity for the alienation was established: Held—That Art. 134 of the Limitation Act which is controlled by sec. 10 of the Act did not apply to the case as the property in question was not property specifically "conveyed" to the Mutathipathe "in trust." Also, that the rent reserved in the lease was not "valuable consideration" within the meaning of the article. Held, further—That as, according to the well-settled law of India, a Mohant is incompetent to create any interest in respect of Mutt property to endure beyond his life, the possession of the lessee did not become adverse within the meaning of Art. 144 of the Limitation Act until he died, and the acceptance of rent by his successor being properly referable only to a new tenancy created by himself, which it was within his power to continue during his life, the possession of the lessees did not become adverse again until his death. Ordinarily speaking the sajjadanashin has a larger right in the surplus income than a mutwalli, for so long as he does not spend it in wicked living, or in objects wholly alien to his office he, like the Mohant of a Hindu Mutt, has full power of disposition over it. SRI VIDYA VARUTHI THIETHA SWAMIGAL v. MORTGAGES, successive—Suit by first mortgagee without impleading puisne mortgagees—Purchaser at mortgage sale, may set up first mortgage as shield in puisne mortgagee's suit—Puisne mortgagee's right to be placed in the same position in which he would be if he had been impleaded.] Under r. 5 of Or. XXXIV of the Civil Procedure Code (which has repealed sec. 89 of the Transfer of Property Act) an owner of a property who is in the right of a first mortgagee and of the original mortgagor, as acquired at a sale under the first mortgage, is entitled, at the suit of a subsequent mortgagee who (not having been made a party in the first mortgagee's suit) is not bound by the sale or the decree on which it proceeded, to set up the first mortgage as a shield. Het Ram v. Shadi Lal, I. L. R. 45 I. A. 180; s. c. 22 C. W. N. 1033 (1918), Matru Mai v. Durga Kunwar, I. L. R. 47 I. A. 71. (1919) and Vanmikalinga Mudali v. Chidambara Chetty I. L. R. 29 Mad. 37 (1905), referred to. But in such a case, the puisne mortgagee (Plaintiff) also is entitled to be put in the position which he would have occupied had he been made a party to the first mortgagee's suit. After two mortgages had been effected by the owner of certain properties, the first mortgagee sued on his mortgage and purchased the property without impleading the second mortgagee. Later on his successor in interest executed another mortgage in favour of the Plaintiff. Subsequently the second mortgagee sued on his mortgage without impleading the Plaintiff, and in that suit the then owners recovered from the second mortgagee the amount of the first mortgage (which they set up as a shield), but as they failed to redeem the second mortgagee the property was sold and purchased by the latter. On 21st July 1915, the Court of Wards declared the mortgagor a disqualified proprietor and assumed superintendence of his estate under United Provinces Act, IV of 1912. On 21st February 1916, a decree absolute for sale was passed against the Court of Wards representing the mortgagor on the application of the mortgagees. On 12th September 1917, the estate of the mortgagor was released from the superintendence of the Court of Wards under an order of the Local Government which was made under the direction of the Central Government for reasons of State. The correspondence which passed between the two Governments upon the matter was not produced and its production could not be compelled by Court: Held—That prima facie, the Local Government acted within its powers in putting the Court of Wards in charge of the mortgagor's estate and it could not be presumed until the contrary was shown that the order of release operated retrospectively. That the Court in India was therefore right in holding that the decree absolute bound the mortgagor. NARINDRA BAHADUR SINGH v. THE OUDH COMMERCIAL BANK LD. (P. C.) ... 825

In August 1916, the decree-holder applied for execution and sought to escape from the bar of limitation by reference to a payment alleged to have been made by the judgment-debtor in October 1917. The lower Courts dismissed the application for execution, as the alleged payment had not been certified or recorded under Or. 21, r. 2 of the C. P. Code. r. (2) of r. 2 of Or. 21, i.e., where the judgment-debtor moves the Court for recording a payment as certified. The only article applicable in the case of a decree-holder certifying a payment to Court is Art. 181. The Code does not prescribe that such application must be distinct from an application for execution of the decree and there is obviously no objection to a combined application embodying a two-fold prayer, namely, first that the alleged payment be recorded, and secondly, that the decree be executed for the balance of the judgment-debtor. Therefore, if the application for execution is made within three years from date of the said payment, it is not barred by limitation. Lakhi Narain v. Falamoni, 20 C. L. MADRAS ESTATES ACT—concl'd.

Or. 34, rr. (7) and (9), scope and effect of.] A mortgagor brought a suit for redemption of an usufructuary mortgage, and alleged that if accounts were taken a large sum would be found due from the mortgagee. The mortgagee contended that the claim for recovery of the surplus profits received by him was barred under Art. 120 of the Limitation Act: Held—That having regard to the provisions of Or. XXXIV, rr. (7) and (9) of the Civil Procedure Code, the claim for recovery of the surplus profits received by the mortgagee is a relief which is a part of the suit for redemption itself, for which the limitation is provided by Art. 148 of the Limitation Act. Therefore the claim for recovery of the surplus collections was not barred by limitation. Baboolal Dass v. Jammal Ally, 9 W. R. 187 (1868), discussed. The firm of S. K. C. recovered a preliminary mortgage decree inter alia against the mortgagor on their sub-mortgage on 26th August 1905, against which the mortgagor appealed to the Privy Council. and the appeal was dismissed for want of prosecution on 16th April 1910. The mortgagor on 9th September 1912 sued the mortgagee to recover the amount paid to the assignee of the decree on the basis of the deed of indemnity. Held—That the decree of 26th August 1905 became unenforceable under Art. 179 of Sch. II of the Limitation Act of 1877 by proceedings commenced after 26th August 1908, and time did not run either from the date when the appeal to the Privy Council was dismissed for default or from the expiry of the six months given for redemption in the decree of 26th August 1905, but from 26th August 1905 the date of the decree. It cannot be said that there was a supersession of the original tenancy or that there was a novation of contract. The consent decree for rent at an enhanced rate did not give the tenancy a fresh start in all respects, nor did the alteration of rent necessarily destroy the transferable character of the tenancy. PLEADINGS. Shama Churn, 11 M. I. A. 7 (1866) and North-Western Salt Coy., Ltd. v. Electrotype Alkali Coy., Ltd., [1914] A. C. 461, referred to. The reason for the rule is that the Plaintiff might have received no notice that the point would be raised by the Defendant and would presumably be not prepared with the necessary evidence, and conversely, the Defendant might be seriously embarrassed if the Plaintiff were permitted to spring a surprise upon him in the shape of a new case. The test to be applied is whether the party aggrieved has really been taken by surprise. So, where the Plaintiffs sought to eject the Defendant on the ground that he was a trespasser and the Defendant answered that he was a tenant at money rent, but the Court determined the nature of the alleged tenancy and came to a conclusion which was not the case of either party: Held:—That the substantial question in controversy between the parties being whether the Defendant was a trespasser or a tenant, the finding that the Defendant was a tenant was a complete answer to the claim for ejectment, and the determination of the nature of the tenancy did not prejudice the Plaintiffs in respect of their claim for ejectment. The question of the nature of the tenancy was, however, left open. GONDLI BIBI v. JOYNAL ABDIN ... 294 on declaration of his title thereto. The Plaintiff and the Defendant were putridars under two separate Touzis, both the Touzis being situate in the same village. The Plaintiff claimed the land as appertaining to his Touzi while the Defendant claimed it as part of his Touzi. The lower Appellate Court found title with the Plaintiff but that he had failed to prove possession within 12 years of suit and accordingly held that the suit was barred by limitation: Held—That the case was governed by Art. 142 of the Limitation Act. Where the Plaintiff while in possession has been dispossessed and is out of possession at the date of the suit, the onus is upon him to prove that he was in possession and was dispossessed within 12 years of the suit. Moharaja Koowar Nitrasur Singh v. Nund Lal Singh, 8 M. I. A. 199 (1860), Rajah Saheb Perhlad Sein v. Moharaja Rajendra Kishore, 12 M. I. A. 292, 337 (1869), Beer Chunder Jodrai v. The Deputy Collector of Bhooloah, 13 W. R. P. R. 364 (1890), and other cases distinguished. In cases under Art. 142 of the Limitation Act, although the Plaintiff's title is proved, the onus is not upon the Defendant to show that the Plaintiff lost his title by adverse possession on the part of the Defendant. Possession is not necessarily the same thing as actual user. The nature of the possession to be proved by the Plaintiff, and the evidence of its continuance must depend upon the character and condition of the land in dispute. Where the land is incapable of actual enjoyment, as in the case of diluvion by rivers, if the Plaintiff shows his possession down to the time of diluvion, his possession is presumed to continue so long as the lands continue to be submerged. In cases where the land is not incapable of enjoyment, but may produce some profit though trifling in amount and only of occasional occurrence, as is so often the case with jungle land, all that can be required is that the Plaintiff should show such acts of ownership as are natural under the existing condition of the land and in such cases when he has done this his possession is presumed to continue so long as the state of the land remains unchanged unless he is shown to have been dispossessed. In waste as well as jungle lands possession may be exercised by grazing cattle, putting up boundary marks or fences and the like. The cases of diluviated lands or jungle or waste lands are thus no exception to the general rule that a Plaintiff who is dispossessed and brings a suit for recovery of possession must show that he was in possession within 12 years of the suit. Monomohan Roy v. Mathura Mohan Roy, I. L. R. 7 Cal. 225 (1881), Raj Kumar Roy v. Gobind Chandra Roy, L. R. 19 I. A. 140: s. c. I. L. R. 19 Cal. 660 (1892), Mahomed Ali v. Khaja Abdul, I. L. R. 9 Cal. 744, 750 (F. B.) (1883), and other cases referred to and discussed. In the case of jungle or waste lands if the Plaintiff proves his title, there is a presumption of possession in his favour where having regard to the nature of the land, possession cannot be expected to be proved by acts of actual user and enjoyment. If, however, the Plaintiff asserts that he exercised acts of ownership and adduces evidence in support thereof, which is disbelieved by the Court, he cannot turn round and rely upon any presumption, because the case set up by him negatives the existence of circumstances which would give rise to the presumption, and is inconsistent with it. The presumption that possession follows title can be raised where the evidence is equally strong on both sides, and cannot be called in aid to give weight to evidence unworthy of credit. *Runjeet Ram Pandey v. PRIVY COUNCIL—Practice—Appeal pending before the Privy Council—Compromise, in which persons under disability are concerned, application for approval of, should be moved before the High Court in India in the first instance. In all cases where it is desired to bind persons under disability by a compromise which is proposed to be entered into in an appeal pending before the Judicial Committee, it is of the utmost importance that there should be a clear expression of opinion by the proper Court in India that such compromise is a beneficial one for these persons. Such a question is essentially and necessarily the proper subject for consideration of the Courts in India, who are in a position to institute the inquiries, to ask the questions and to obtain the information which must always be required before sanctioning proceedings on behalf of persons who are unable to assent for themselves. And though the Judicial Committee may in rare cases, in their desire to avoid the multiplication or prolongation of proceedings, entertain in the first instance an application to sanction a compromise in which persons under disability are interested, this is not the regular and usual course. GOBINDA

The fairness of the bargain is the crucial test, and the Court must have regard to the intellectual attainments of the lady concerned and will naturally be disinclined to set aside the deed where she is proved to have been of business habits, to have been literate, and to have possessed a capacity to judge for herself. That in the present case the Defendant in whose favour the document was executed stood towards the Plaintiff in a relation of personal confidence and the document was executed under circumstances which according to the rules applicable to the execution of documents by purdanashin ladies rendered it liable to be cancelled. Every variance between pleading and proof is not fatal. The Court must carefully consider whether the objection is one of form or of substance. Per Buckland, J.—The rule that a case of fraud can succeed only on proof of the fraud specified in the plaint may be applicable in cases between man and man but where a purdanashin lady is involved other and equally well known rules have to be applied and conformity with them has to be established. That a purdanashin lady must have independent legal advice is not necessary as an inflexible rule. But, excluding such rare cases where the experience and attainments of the lady or the circumstances of the case render such advice superfluous, a purdanashin lady must have advice, the adviser should have no adverse interest and should be such a person as is capable of explaining to her fully her rights in general and in particular under the document which she intends to sign, if necessary contrasting them with her rights should the intended document not be executed by her; if the circumstances are such that unless he has a knowledge of law he is not competent to advise her, then and in that case independent legal advice is essential. PURDANASHIN lady, suit for cancellation of document executed by—Rules by which Court should be guided to determine validity of document—Rule that case of fraud must depend strictly on proof of fraud alleged, how far applicable to action brought by purdanashin lady.] The Plaintiff, a purdanashin lady, sought to have a deed of partition executed by her in favour of her husband's brother immediately after her husband's death cancelled: Held—That it is well settled that the Court when called upon to deal with a deed executed by a purdanashin lady must satisfy itself upon the evidence first that the deed was actually executed by her or by some person duly authorised by her with a full understanding of what she was about to do; secondly, that she had full knowledge of the nature and effect of the transaction into which she is said to have entered; and thirdly, that she had independent and disinterested advice in the matter. In cases where the person who seeks to hold the lady to the terms of her deed is one who stood towards her in a fiduciary character or in some relation of personal confidence, the Court will act with great caution and will presume confidence put and influence exerted and in cases where the person who seeks to enforce the deed was an absolute stranger and dealt with her at arm's length, the Court will require the confidence and influence to be proved intrinsically. In the former class of cases, the principle formulated in sec. 111 of the Indian Evidence Act applies, viz., that where there is a question as to the good faith of a transaction between parties one of whom stands to the other in a position of active confidence the burden of proving the good faith of the transaction is on the party who is in a position of active confidence. It is an elementary principle that whenever any person derives a benefit under a deed, if any confidential or fiduciary relation subsists between the parties, the Courts so far presume against the validity of the instrument as to require some proof, varying in amount according to circumstances, of the absence of anything approaching to imposition, over-reaching, undue influence or unconscionable advantage. Independent and competent advice which it is necessary that a purdanashin lady should have does not mean independent and competent approval; it simply means that the advice shall be removed entirely from the suspec-		—Principles which should guide Court—fndependent and competent advice, meaning of—Necessity of greater caution in cases where persons benighted holds fiduciary position—Misrepresentation or fraud, proof of, not essential—Joint family—Severance, if effected by deed of settlement by widow entrusting reversioner with management for a term—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Art. 91, applicability of, when Plaintiffs seek possession on declaration that Defendants' document of title wholly void—Time from which limitation runs when deed voidable.} On the death of a member of a Hindu joint family a deed of settlement was executed by the guardian of the widow who was at the time a minor, the effect of which was to place the properties of the minor inherited by her from her husband in charge of her husband's brother who was the reversioner on certain terms. After the widow had attained majority a deed of settlement for the life of the widow was executed by her in favour of the sons of her husband's brother who was now dead. The widow brought a suit for partition of the joint family properties and for other incidental reliefs on declaration that the last deed of settlement was void and inoperative. Held—That it is well settled that the Court when called upon to deal with a deed executed by a purdanasihin lady must satisfy itself upon the evidence, first, that the deed was actually executed by her or by some person duly authorised by her with a full understanding of what she was about to do; secondly, that she had full knowledge of the nature and effect of the transaction into which she is said to have entered; and thirdly, that she had independent and disinterested advice in the matter. In the class of cases where the person who seeks to hold the lady to the terms of her deed is one who stood towards her in a fiduciary character, the Court will act with great caution and will presume confidence put and influence exerted, and in cases where the person who seeks to enforce the deed was an absolute stranger and dealt with her at arm's length the Court will require the confidence and influence to be proved intrinsically. The substance of the matter is that the fairness of the bargain is the crucial test. In dealing with these cases, the Court must have regard to the intellectual attainments of the lady concerned and will naturally be disinclined to set aside the deed where she is proved to have been of business habits, to have been literate and to have possessed a capacity to judge for herself. These, however, are only general principles and there is grave risk of failure of justice, if they are moulded into inelastic formulas or crystallised into inflexible rules and treated as of universal application, regardless of the special fact and surrounding circumstances of the concrete case which requires adjudication. Independent and competent advice does not mean independent and competent approval but signifies at any rate advice removed entirely from the suspected atmosphere and conveyed in the clear language of an independent mind, free from taint of interests, to the party acting, regarding the precise nature and consequence of the transaction. In cases of this class, there need not necessarily be misrepresentation by one party to the other to invalidate the deed: if there is any concealment of material fact, any failure to disclose material information or any just suspicion of artifice, the Court will interfere and pronounce the transaction void and restore the parties as far as possible to their original rights. Held—That as the family was joint and there was a nucleus of joint property the burden was on the party setting up a case of separate estate to establish his allegation. That the first deed of settlement was in essence a deed of management and did not cause a severance of the family, the title to the half-share inherited by the Plaintiff from her husband never having vested in her brother-in-law. Held, upon the evidence—That the disputed deed of settlement was understood by the lady to be a deed for five years whereas in reality it was a deed operative for her life; that she had no independent advice; that the extent of the income and the value of all the joint properties, moveable and immoveable, were not disclosed to her, and that the effect of the deed on her rights was never brought home to her. That the deed actually executed by the lady having been fundamentally different from the deed she intended to execute and thought she executed was void and inoperative and that being so no question of limitation arose. Art. 91 of the schedule to the Indian Limitation Act has no application to a case of this description where a suit is brought for possession and partition upon declaration that an instrument under which the Defendant claims is void. That, on the supposition that the deed needed being cancelled, the Defendants had failed to prove that the Plaintiff acquired full information of the true state of facts at a time too remote to allow her to maintain the suit. RECEIVER, rent decree obtained by, after conditional order of discharge made by Court, but not carried out and before the decree embodying order of discharge was signed by the Judge—Receiver, if bound to disclose to Court order of discharge in such circumstances—Devolution of interest pending suit—No application for substitution—Decree passed in favour of original party, it bad. In a rent suit instituted by the receiver of an estate as such a decree was obtained after an order discharging the receiver on certain conditions had been made by the Court. It appeared, however, that on the date the rent decree was made, the order of discharge had not been in fact carried out nor was the decree embodying the said order signed by the Judge who passed it. The receiver was in possession as before and he was subsequently continued as such by the order of the Appellate Court: Held—That it was not established that the receiver was in fact and law discharged on the date of the rent decree nor was it proved that there was fraud such as would entitle the Plaintiff to maintain a suit to have the decree set aside. That it was not shown that there was in fact and in law such a discharge as it was incumbent upon the receiver to disclose before the Court. That, assuming that the receiver was discharged before the decree was passed, there was only a devolution pending the suit, and the decree made in favour of the receiver would not on that account be a bad decree but would enure for the benefit of the party on whom the interest devolved, such party not having applied for the carriage of the proceedings. BEFIN BEHARI BOSE v. The owners of an estate brought a suit for account against a Teshildar of their estate who had been appointed by a Receiver who had been in charge of the estate under an order of Court but had since been discharged. Held—That a suit was not maintainable. Such a suit can be sustained only on proof of fiduciary relation between the parties. But the Receiver is not a representative of the owner; he is an officer of the Court. Hence an officer appointed by the Receiver does not stand in the same position as an officer appointed by the owner. Jatindra Narayan Acharya v. Rajendra Kishore Das, 8 C. L. (d) of sec. 17 of the Registration Act, 1908, and as such is inadmissible in evidence in a suit for specific performance of its terms, under sec. 49 of the Act if it is not registered even though the tenant is in possession under the said agreement. Cases of part performance under sec. 4 of the Statute of Frauds have no application to those arising under sec. 49 of the Registration Act, 1908, as the positions under the two Acts are quite different. The Plaintiff who was in possession of certain premises under a previous tenancy expiring in December 1916, on the expiry of the said tenancy entered into negotiations for a further tenancy with the landlords, the Mondol Defendants, the terms of which were reduced into writing. This document, dated 15th January 1917, which was unregistered, purported to be in form a memorandum of agreement but was intended to operate as a present demise of the said premises to the Plaintiff for five years from 1st January 1917 and was held to be a lease within the meaning of cl. (d) of sec. 17 of the Registration Act, 1908. In May 1919 the Mondol Defendants sold the said premises to the Lahiri Defendants who had full notice of the unregistered instrument of 15th January 1917 and of its terms. On the 29th May 1919, the Plaintiff was given notice by the Lahiri Defendants to quit by the 30th June 1919 on the allegation that he was a monthly tenant. The Plaintiff brought a suit for the specific performance of the said agreement in terms of the unregistered document. Held —That the document, dated 15th January 1917, was not admissible in evidence in a suit for specific performance, under sec. 49 of the Registration Act, as it was not registered. Held, also —That as there was no other evidence before the Court of the terms of the said agreement, there could not be a decree for specific performance. Per Rankin, J. —“If I admit the document at all it seems to me that I would be receiving it as evidence of a transaction affecting the property. If upon its true construction it is meant to take effect as a present demise I cannot treat it as something else or as evidence of a transaction different from this in nature and so avoid the statute. My opinion is that against the prohibition of the statute no estoppel avails and that there is nothing in Walsh v. Lonsdale , 21 Ch. 		RENT , suit for “abatement on the ground of eviction from a portion of the land by a person not having a title paramount—“Eviction by title paramount,” meaning of—Physical dispossession, if necessary to amount to eviction—Suit by stranger against tenant, and attornment by latter to former in respect of a portion of the tenure under Court's decree—Onus to prove eviction by title paramount, if on landlord.] An execution purchaser of some decretal lands obtained delivery of khas possession of the lands through Court and let out a portion thereof to B. Subsequently the Government settled with a third party some lands including a portion of the lands let out by the said execution purchaser. The Government lessee on the strength of the settlement sued B alone for recovery of the said lands and got a decree which provided that being a bona fide tenant B should not be ejected but should pay rent to the Government lessee in respect of the lands of which he was in possession. Subsequently the aforesaid execution purchaser brought a suit for rent against B, who claimed proportionate abatement of rent in respect of the said portion. Held —That in order to be entitled to proportionate abatement of rent, forcible expulsion is not necessary, nor is it necessary that the tenant should actually go out of possession, and if, upon a claim being made by a person with a title paramount, he consents by an attornment to such person to change the title under which he holds, or enters into a new arrangement for holding under him, this will be equivalent to an eviction and a fresh taking. But an eviction, whether actual or constructive, must be by a party with a title paramount. The Government lessee had no doubt obtained a decree against B, but that was not sufficient to show that he had a title superior to that of the execution purchaser. Nor was the onus to prove that the Government lessee had no title shifted on the execution purchaser in consequence of such a decree. Rani Dassi v. Asutosh Roy Choudhury , 15 C. L. The High Court has the power of revising the Rent Controller's orders under its general powers of superintendence under sec. 107 of the Government of India Act. - RES JUDICATA—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), sec. 11—Res judicata—Sec. 92. suit by public, if barred by the decision in a previous suit between a Manager appointed under the Religious Endowments Act and some claimants as Mohants. A Manager was appointed under sec. 5 of the Religious Endowments Act of 1863 in respect of a temple, and thereupon a person claiming to be a Mohant or Dundee of the temple instituted a suit for establishment of his title. There were three Defendants in the suit, viz., the said Manager, his successor in office and another rival claimant to the office of Dundee. The suit was decreed. During the pendency of the suit the public brought the present suit under sec. 92 of the Civil Procedure Code, but the District Judge dismissed the suit on the ground that the trial of the question raised in the present suit was barred by the result of the decision in the previous suit which was pending at the date of the institution of the present suit. Held—That the decree in the earlier suit though operative against the Manager appointed under sec. 5 of the Religious Endowments Act as also against the rival claimants, could not possibly operate to defeat a suit by members of the public instituted under sec. 92, C. P. C. Sec. 92 contemplates the administration of a trust created for public purposes. Such administration may include the removal of an existing trustee, the appointment of a new trustee or both. In such a suit it may be held that the endowment was not of such a nature as to attract the operation of the provisions of the Religious Endowments Act, 1863, and that the appointment of the Manager under sec. 5 of the Act was without jurisdiction and so forth. *SAHAYRAM CHAKRABARTY v. - , general principle of, not limited by Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), sec. 11. Under a deed of settlement executed by one R, one half of certain properties was given to his adopted son and the remaining half was given to his two wives who were to take the same half and half. One of these properties having been acquired by Government a question arose in a proceeding under sec. 32 of Act I of 1894 between the adopted son and one of the wives, as to whether the latter was absolutely entitled to her share of the compensation money or whether the same was to be invested she having no right to alienate her interest in the property under the deed of settlement. The High Court, when the matter came up before it, held that by the deed of settlement the wife was intended to have a widow's estate only in the property devised. Subsequently the wife having bequeathed her properties to Respondent by Will, the representatives of the adopted son instituted a suit against the claimants under the Will alleging that she had a limited estate under the deed of settlement and had no power to dispose of the properties by Will. Held—That it was not open to the Courts in this suit to review the decision of the High Court, in the proceeding under sec. 32 of Act I of 1894, that the lady had only a limited estate in the property without power of alienation. It is not competent for the Court, in the case of the same question arising between the parties, to review a previous decision no longer open to appeal given by another Court having jurisdiction to try the second case. This principle is of general application and is not limited by the specific words of sec. 11 of the Civil Procedure Code; so that the fact that the decision in question was not obtained in a "former suit" did not make any difference. The importance of a judicial decision is not to be measured by the pecuniary value of the particular item in dispute, and the Defendants in the suit could not be heard to say that in view of the comparatively small value of the property involved in the proceeding under sec. 32 of Act I of 1894 it was not thought worth the while to appeal from the decision of the High Court in that proceeding. *T. REVENUE SALE LAW—Act XI of 1859, sects. 2 and 3—Bengal Act (VII of 1868)—Tenures in Dibi Panchannogram—Board's Notification regarding time for sale, effect of—Sale for arrears of revenue when premature and ultra vires—Date of payment of revenue.] The effect of the Notification of the Board of Revenue, dated the 6th October 1871 is that no holding can be sold till after the 28th June next after the first day of the month following the month in which the revenue or rent should have been paid. The date on which the revenue is payable depends primarily not on general or administrative considerations such as the course of business in the Collectorate or the mode in which the accounts are kept but on the contract between the parties. Where a tenure was held under a kaluliya , dated the 10th November 1863, containing a stipulation to pay rent year by year in Dibi Panchannogram to which by virtue of Bengal Act VII of 1868, Act XI of 1859 was applicable, and the tenure was sold for arrears of revenue of 1914 and 1915 on the 17th May 1915, it was held that the sale was premature and ultra vires and conferred no title on the purchaser as the current demand for 1914-1915 was not payable till the 10th November 1914, so that the tenure could not be sold before the 28th June 1915. Haji Bukshi Elahi v. RIGHT OF WAY—Suit for declaration of—Necessity of proving that enjoyment of the right ended within two years before suit—Affirmative proof of "actual user," if necessary—Distinction between "enjoyment" of a right of easement and "actual exercise" of the right.] Plaintiff brought a suit for declaration of a right of way and for removal of an obstruction thereto. The right was enjoyed for more than 20 years peaceably and openly, without interruption, as an easement, and as of right. There was no discontinuance of the "enjoyment" by reason of the obstruction by the Defendant, till within a few days previous to the institution of the suit, and there was no suggestion that the Plaintiff voluntarily abandoned or discontinued the exercise of the right at any time before such date. Held—That it was not necessary for the Plaintiff to prove affirmatively "actual user" of the way down to a date within two years before the suit, Sham Churn v. Tariney Churn , I. L. A person may without violence to language, be said to be in "enjoyment" of a right of way during a period of time, though he does not actually "use" the way every moment. Cessation of user is not always inconsistent with continuance of enjoyment of a right, or in other words, cessation of user is not an invariable indication of abeyance of enjoyment of a right. Janhavi v. The permission of the Court was taken under Or. 1, r. 8, of the Civil Procedure Code. The suit was decreed and the decree confirmed on appeal. The Appellate Court found that the Plaintiff suffered special damage, and the finding was challenged in second appeal. Held—That the question of whether the Plaintiff suffered special damage or not did not arise, because a suit for a declaration that a pathway is a village pathway can succeed without proof of special damages. Harihar Das v. 		SHEBAIT, purchasing debutter property at Court sale in the benami of his son for adequate price, if can keep his purchase—Fiduciary relationship, purchase by person standing in, valid if full disclosure made to cestuiqui trust—Secret purchase in another's name invalid.] The grounds for removing a shebait from his office may not be identical with those upon which a trustee would be removed in England. The close intermingling of duties and personal interest which together make up the office of shebait may well prevent the closeness of the analogy, but as part of the office, it is indisputable that there are duties which must be performed, that the estate does need to be safeguarded and kept in proper custody, and if it be found that a man in the exercise of his duties has put himself in a position in which the Court thinks that the obligation of his office can no longer be faithfully discharged, that is sufficient ground for his removal. trustee who is not a trustee for sale may acquire from beneficiaries who are sui juris an estate in which they are interested, but he can only do this if has made the fullest disclosure to them of all the relevant and material facts with-in his knowledge affecting or that might affect the value and condition of the estate, and the parties are at arms length, the cestuiqui trust knowing that he is dealing with the trustee. Otherwise the purchase is bad and it is bad because any person who occupies a fiduciary relationship may be able by virtue of his position to acquire information with regard to the trust estate which he is not permitted to use for his own benefit. This rule is of general application to dealings by persons with an estate in regard to which they stand in a fiduciary relationship and therefore governs purchases of debuttar estate by a shebait. The rule laid down in Lewis v. Hillman, 3 H. L. C. 607 (1852), that even if an attorney or agent can show that he is entitled to purchase, yet, if instead of openly purchasing, he purchases in the name of a trustee or agent without disclosing the fact, no such purchase can stand, applied to the purchase in this case by a shebait at a Court sale in the benami of his son, and it was declared invalid in spite of the fact that the price fetched was abundant. *PEARY MOHAN MUKHERJI v. right of an idol to impose restrictions on the powers of subsequent shebait—Acceptance of benefits conferred by a gift by the shebait—Effect of such acceptance on the restrictions imposed by the gift. A Hindu governed by the Dayabhaga School established certain family deities, but imposed no condition as to their location. His son acquired a piece of land and erected thereon a separate Thakurbari for one of the deities. By a declaration of trust he declared that he, his heirs, executors, representatives and administrators should for ever hold the land to and for the use of the deity, that the Thakur should be located and worshipped in the premises and that the Thakur should not on any account be removed therefrom unless and until a similar or better Thakurbari was built. The grandsons of the founder separated and the palas of worship were divided. One of the said grandsons, not having got any part of the family house, removed elsewhere and built himself a separate residence, where he wanted to remove and worship the Thakur during his turn of worship, but was prevented by his co-sharers on the strength of the above declaration. Held—That the founder of the idols having imposed no condition as to their location, it was not open to any subsequent shebait to impose restrictions which would fetter those who subsequently as heirs of the founder became shebait. The said grandson is therefore entitled to remove the Thakur from the Thakurbari to his

Whether it is payable when claim is paid up upon compromise after an attachment before judgment—High Court Rules, G. XXXVI, r. 77—28, Elizi Ch. 4—“Levy,” meaning of.] A filed a suit against B for about 8½ lacs and subsequently applied for attachment before judgment of certain moneys belonging to B lying with the Bank of Bengal and got an order for interim attachment which was effected by the Sheriff. Thereafter a settlement was arrived at and the order nisi was discharged and the interim attachment was by consent withdrawn, each party paying his own costs. The present suit was filed by the Sheriff of Calcutta claiming Rs. 21,900 as poundage due to him as Sheriff of Calcutta by reason of the interim attachment before judgment under the High Court Rules, Ch. XXXVI, r. 77: Held—That the Sheriff was not entitled to any poundage under the said rule. A claim to poundage by a Sheriff must be under the express terms of a Statute, Rule or Order. He has no common law right to reward for executing a writ. Woodgate v. Knatchbull, 2 T. R. 148 (1787) and Graham v. Grill, 2 M. & S. 294, 297, (1874), referred to. R. 77 of Ch. XXXVI of the High Court Rules is directed to proceedings in which the Sheriff is employed about the levying of a sum of money in execution. The alternative part applies to such a proceeding in an event, viz., where the process is interrupted before completion but in a manner which produces the same or similar result. The rule has no application where there is an attachment before judgment but no execution. A. D. PECKFORD v. RAI RAHADUR TANAKI NATH ... 673

Suit for rectification of mortgage deed after issue of sale proclamation in execution of mortgage decree—Grounds on which rectification justifiable—Passing of decree if bar to rectification—Notice, necessity of, when knowledge proved—Notice to purchaser by title papers, nature and effect of—Purchase of mortgaged property during pendency of execution proceedings—Is pendens—Misdescription of property, if prevents its application. After the sale proclamation was issued in execution of a mortgage decree a suit was brought for the rectification of the mortgage bond so far as the description of the property mortgaged was concerned. The mortgaged property, it appeared, had been purchased by a third party during the pendency of the execution proceedings: Held—That in order to justify rectification of a contract or other instrument in writing there must be proof of a common intention different from the expressed intention and a common mistaken supposition that the intention was rightly expressed in the instrument; it matters not by whom the actual oversight or error was made which caused the expression to be wrong. The conception of notice was introduced into law and the rules concerning it were established from considerations of policy and expediency based upon the common experience of mankind. Notice even when actual is not necessarily equivalent to knowledge, but the same effect must be attributed to it which would naturally flow from knowledge. Notice being thus a representative of, or substitute for, actual knowledge, whenever a party has obtained a full knowledge, although not in accordance with the rules which define the nature of notice and regulate the mode of its being given and received, there is no longer any need of invoking the legal conception of notice. Notice to a purchaser by his title papers in a transaction will not be notice to him in an independent subsequent transaction in which the instruments containing the recitals are not necessary to his title; but he is charged constructively with notice merely of that which affects the purchase of the property in the chain of title of which the paper forms a necessary link. Held, further—That the fact that a decree had already been made on the mortgage bond was no bar to the rectification of the bond itself. It may be held as a general rule that if there is a mutual mistake in a mortgage in the description, of property and the same mistake is reproduced in the decree, equity may go back to the original transaction and reform both the mortgage and the decree so as to make them conform to the intention of the parties concerned, but in a case where the decree has been executed and title has passed to a purchaser, fresh considerations may arise. The contesting Defendant having purchased the property during the pendency of the execution proceedings would be bound thereby, for in the case of a mortgage suit the lis pendens does not terminate till the security has been realised for the satisfaction of the judgment debt. The principle of the decision in Lokenath v. Achitananda, 15 C. L. J. 391 (1909), that misdescription of the property involved in a litigation is sufficient to render the doctrine of lis pendens inapplicable cannot be invoked by a person who has either knowledge or notice of the true state of things. BEPIN KRISHNA ROY v. the allegation that he was in joint possession of the share claimed by him, but he did not seek any consequential relief. The Defendants pleaded that the title of the Plaintiff was extinguished by adverse possession on the part of the predecessor of one of the Defendants. The suit was, however, dismissed under the provisions of sec. 42 of the Specific Relief Act, inasmuch as the Plaintiff had omitted to claim further relief. Held—That the possession by one co-owner is not presumed to be adverse to the others but is ordinarily held to be for the benefit of all. The possession of one joint tenant is the possession of all and there can be no dis-possession by one joint tenant, in the absence of an assertion of a hostile title by him to the knowledge of the other joint tenants sought to be excluded from the joint tenancy. Balaram v. Denials of title, which are not accompanied or followed by overt acts, are not calculated to cast a cloud upon the title of a person, and do not accordingly give rise to a cause of action. Held, further—That in sec. 42 of the Specific Relief Act, the expression used by the legislature is, not "other relief" but "further relief." A suit for a declaratory decree ought not to be dismissed on the ground that it is barred by the proviso to sec. 42 of the Specific Relief Act unless it is quite clear that the Plaintiff ought to seek further relief which he has failed to claim, although such relief flows directly and necessarily from the declaration sought for. The proviso to sec. 42 forbids a suit for a pure declaration without further relief, but it does not compel a Plaintiff to sue for all the reliefs which could possibly be granted, or debar him from obtaining a relief which he wants unless at the same time he asks for a relief which he does not want. Where the Plaintiff is in joint possession of immoveable property, whether such possession be actual possession of his share of the whole or actual possession of a part coupled with a constructive possession of the remainder, he is entitled to maintain a suit for declaratory relief with a view to remove a cloud on his title created by the act of the Defendant dis-putting his share; in a suit so framed decla-

... sec. 42—Suit for declaration of title to property after it was attached under sec. 146, Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898)—Effect of Magistrate's attachment on the question of possession—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), sec. 23 and Arts. 120 and 142, period of limitation applicable to the case.] Plaintiff was dispossessed from some lands by the Defendant in April 1904 and in June 1904 the lands were attached under sec. 146, Criminal Procedure Code owing to disputes between the parties. Plaintiff brought the present suit for recovery of possession in May 1916. The lower Courts held that Plaintiff had title but that the suit was barred by limitation: Held—That the suit though framed as a suit for possession cannot be treated as such, because the possession was not with the Defendant, but with the Magistrate who was not and could not be a party to the suit. The article therefore applicable to the suit was Art. 120 of the Limitation Act and not Art. 142. Goswami Ranchor Lalji v. Sri Girdharji, 1. L. R. 20 All. 120 (1897). Raja of Venkatagiri v. Isakpalli, 1. L. R. 26 Mad. 110 (1902) and Brojendra Kishore Roy v. Sarojini Roy, 20 C. W. N. 481 (1915), referred to. The position of the Magistrate was that of a stake-holder and during the continuance of the attachment the property was in legal custody which must be held to be for the benefit of the true owner, i.e., the Plaintiff. And the possession of the Magistrate being in law the possession of the true owner the Defendant's possession was determined upon the Magistrate's taking possession under the attachment, in other words, the Plaintiff must be taken to have been restored to possession constructively on the date of the attachment. He therefore got a fresh starting point for purposes of limitation, and the case can be treated as one of continuing wrong within the meaning of sec. 23 of the Limitation Act. The suit was therefore not barred by limitation. Khagendra Narain v. Matangini, 1. L. R. 27 Cal. 814 (1890). Boni Prasad v. Shahzada Ojha, 1. L. R. 32 Cal. 856 (1905). *Rao Karan v. STRAITS SETTLEMENTS ORDINANCE No. 6 of 1896, sec. 10—"Specific purpose," meaning of.] A "specific purpose" within the meaning of sec. 10 of the (Limitation) Ordinance No. 6 of 1896 of the Straits Settlements (which in terms corresponds to sec. 10 of the Indian Limitation Act), must be a purpose that is either actually or specifically defined in the terms of the Will or settlement, or a purpose which, from the specified terms, can be certainly affirmed. — for accounts against a rent collector—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Arts. 89, 115 and 116, applicability of—Omission to render accounts, when amounts to a refusal.]

• A rent-collector, employed under a registered agreement, was called upon to render accounts up to 12th April on or before the 13th May 1914. No accounts were rendered as demanded, and on 11th October 1915 the said rent-collector was dismissed and ordered to render accounts up to date. Subsequently a suit for accounts was instituted on the 27th August 1918: Held—That Arts. 115 and 116 of the Limitation Act did not apply to the case. In order to make them applicable it must be shown that the suit was not specifically provided for in the schedule. Art. 89 applied to the case, as the term "moveable property" includes money, and consequently excludes the operation of Arts. 115 and 116. That there having been a demand for accounts, non-compliance with the demand amounted to a refusal and the suit in so far as it claimed accounts up to 12th April 1914 must be deemed barred by Limitation as it was instituted after the lapse of three years from the date of refusal, i.e., 13th May 1914. Madhusudan v. Rakhal, I. L. R. 43 Cal. 248; s. c. 19 C. W. N. 1070; 22 C. L. J. 552 (1915), Nabin v. Chandra, I. L. R. 44 Cal. 1; s. c. 21 C. W. N. 97 (P. C.) (1916), and Bhabatarini v. Sheik Bahadur, 30 C. L. J. 90 (1919), and other cases referred to. That the agency having been terminated by the dismissal on the 11th October 1915, and the suit having been brought within three years from that date, the Plaintiff was entitled to accounts from the Defendant other than the accounts demanded in April 1914. The suit was thus in time for the accounts from 13th April 1914 to 11th October 1915. Agappa v. Chidambaram, 31 Mad. L. J. 688 (1916) and Muthia v. Alagappa, I. L. TENANCY—Suit in ejectment—Homestead within Municipal limits forming part of non-transferable occupancy holding sold to a pleader for residential and professional purposes—Recognition by landlord on receipt of salami, rent previously paid being quadrupled—Settlement whether fresh or in continuation of the old tenancy—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882) or Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), which applicable.] Where a raiyat occupying his homestead within the residential suburb of the Naraingunj Municipality as part of his non-transferable occupancy holding first sold the rest of the holding to a certain person, and next sold his homestead to the Defendant a pleader who purchased it for the purpose of residence and for carrying on his profession as a pleader in the local Civil Courts, was recognized by the Plaintiff, landlords, on payment of salami and was granted rent receipts in the forms prescribed in the Bengal Tenancy Act as for a karsha holding, while the rent previously paid was now quadrupled: Held, in a suit brought by the Plaintiffs for ejectment of the Defendant after service of six months' notice to quit terminating with the end of a year of the tenancy—That the Defendant's contention that his tenancy was in continuation of the old tenancy of the outgoing raiyat was not maintainable, that the tenancy originated in a fresh settlement with the Plaintiffs and that in view of the purpose for which the new tenancy was created it was governed by the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act. Rakhal Das Addy v. TENURE—Covenant in a kabulyiat for payment of salami at every transfer in respect of a tenure, if enforceable after a sale in execution of a money decree—Involuntary sale and voluntary sale, difference in cases of.] A kabulyiat stipulated that at every transfer a certain salami should be paid. The tenure in respect of which this kabulyiat was given was sold in execution of a money decree. The landlord subsequently sued for recovery of the stipulated salami: Held—That the covenant did not cover an involuntary sale. A condition in a lease restraining transfer is not applicable to a case of involuntary transfer unless there are words in the covenant which clearly make it applicable to such a transfer. The transfer in execution of money decree can not be treated as on the same footing as a voluntary sale. Dwarika Nath Roy Chowdhury v. Mathura Nath Roy Chowdhury, 21 C. W. tract with one B undertaking to take delivery of certain goods in accordance with the contract and on their failure to do so the matter was referred to arbitrators who gave an award to the effect that the Defendants were to pay for and take delivery of the goods B, therefore, resold the goods which fetched a lower amount than that contracted for. He then brought a suit against the Defendants for the balance and then assigned to the Plaintiff all his claim in and the right to proceed with the suit and all advantages and benefits of all proceedings thereof: Held—That the suit was not maintainable inasmuch as the claim was for unascertained damages for breach of contract and the assignment was an assignment of a mere right to sue. Glegg v. Bromley, [1912] 3 K. B. 474 at p. 490, referred to. That there were no materials justifying the application of sec. 107 of the Contract Act and the resale was not justified by the award so that the claim was one for unascertained damages. That on a true construction of the terms of the assignment the subject-matter of the assignment was not property with an incidental right to sue but a mere right to sue for unascertained damages for alleged breach of contract within the meaning of sec. 6 (e) of the Transfer of Property Act. Per Richardson, J.—That in England there is no statutory rule that a bare right of action cannot be assigned. There is a statutory provision making choses in action assignable which is subject to a limitation placed upon it by the Courts that the assignment must not offend the law of maintenance. In India there is an imperative statutory rule prohibiting the transfer of a mere right to sue. But in spite of this difference the results may be in many respects similar. The Indian Legislature when it enacted sec. 6 (e) of the Transfer of Property Act, no doubt had in mind the expressions used in the English cases; and on the question of construction which arises in India the language of Parker, J., in Glegg v. Bromley, [1912] 3 K. B. 474 at p. 490 is at least a valuable guide. That even assuming that the goods were properly resold and that the claim asserted in the plaint and transferred to the present Plaintiff is a claim to an ascertained sum it would still be for consideration whether this claim is in the particular circumstances a mere right to sue or property with an incidental remedy for its recovery within the meaning of Parker, J., in Glegg's case, [1912] 3 K. B. 474 at p. 490. JEWAN RAM v. RATAN CHAND KISEN ... 285 after his death mortgaged them, and the mortgagee purchased them at a sale held in execution of the decree obtained upon the mortgage. In the meantime the lands had been sold in execution of a money decree against the husband and taken possession of by the decree-holder purchaser. The mortgagee purchaser thereupon sued for a declaration that the lands belonged to the wife and for possession. The kabuliyats, toujis, counter-foil rent receipts stood in the name of the wife and the mortgagee had taken the mortgage in good faith after making proper inquiry: Held—That so far as there were occasions for doing so, the husband held out his wife as the real owner, and therefore the purchaser in execution of the money decree against the husband, being the successor-in-interest of the said husband, was estopped from disputing the title of the wife and should not be allowed to defeat the rights of the mortgagee who is a transferee in good faith from the ostensible owner without notice, actual or constructive, of the husband's title. The mortgagee was not bound to enquire into the financial position of the husband at the time when the purchase was made in the name of the wife. Luchman Chunder Gossain v. Kali Charan Singh, 19 W. R. 292 (1873), and Sarat Chunder Dey v. Gopal Chunder Laha, 1. L. R. 20 Cal. 296 (P. C.) (1892), followed. ANNODA MOHAN ROY CHOWDHURY v. NILPHAMARI LOAN OFFICE LD. ... 436

(2) of the Transfer of Property Act, liable to the purchaser for moneys paid by the purchaser either for redemption of the mortgages existing on the property purchased at the date of the purchase, or for purchase of the properties on sales under such mortgages or to prevent such sales. Semble:—It is difficult to accept the view that purchasers of a property are not compelled to pay off mortgagees who have obtained decrees for sale, even though a sale is not immediately threatened. Where after the sale the vendor sold another item of property to a third person, and it was agreed between them that the latter should discharge the incumbrances on the property which the vendor had sold to the first purchaser free from incumbrances: Held—That a suit by the first purchaser, against the second purchaser for recovery of the amount of the incumbrances was

BENGAL MUNICIPAL ACT (III of 1884, B. C.), secs. 261 and 273 (2).—"Using a place as a kiln for making bricks," meaning and effect of—"Kiln," what it actually signifies—Country panjas or clamps, if come within the definition of "kiln." A certain person was prosecuted for burning bricks in panjas in contravention of sec. 273 (2) of the Bengal Municipal Act, which prohibits using any place, within the Municipal limits, "as a kiln for making bricks without a license;" Held—That the definition of a "kiln" points to a structure, which is of a permanent nature. The process used for making bricks (e.g., by panjas or clamps) did not amount to using the place as a kiln and hence no offence was committed. If, however, there is a doubt about the interpretation of the word "kiln," the words of the section ought not to be strained unduly against the Defendant. In a case of this kind, it is not the function of the Court to strain the meaning of the particular section of the Act, because if the particular process in question is in the opinion of the authorities such a process as ought to be brought within the purview of the section, it is open to them to amend the Act. SUPERINTENDENT AND REMEMBRANCER OF LEGAL AFFAIRS, BENGAL v. TRAILAKHYA NATH CHATTERJEE ... 926	CONFESION—concl'd. a confession made and subsequently retracted by a prisoner cannot be accepted as evidence of his guilt without independent corroborative evidence. The weight to be given to such a confession must depend on the circumstances under which the confession was originally given and the circumstances under which it was retracted including the reasons given by the prisoner for its retraction. It is unsafe for a Court to rely on and act on a confession which has been retracted unless, after a consideration of the whole of the evidence in the case, the Court is in a position to come to the unhesitating conclusion that the confession is true, that is to say, usually unless the confession is corroborated by credible independent evidence. A retracted confession should carry practically no weight as against a person other than its maker. Held, on a consideration of the circumstances, that the confessions were obtained in some manner under threats and inducements such as would render them inadmissible under sec. 24 of the Indian Evidence Act. The Petitioner was convicted under sec. 51A of the Calcutta Police Act for having in his possession certain second-hand articles of clothing: Held—That for the purpose of sec. 54A of the Police Act, it is obligatory on the prosecution to show that there is reason to believe that the goods had been stolen or fraudulently obtained and the mere fact that the articles in question were recovered from the house of the accused does not warrant the conclusion that they had been stolen or fraudulently obtained and in this view the conviction was bad. —Jurisdiction of Magistrate to prohibit holding of hat on one's own land and on day other than day on which old hat was held—Ex-parte order, propriety of passing—Speedy disposal of objection to order necessary.] The Petitioners started a new hat on their own property within a certain locality where existed an old hat belonging to the Opposite Party, but on a day different from that on which the old hat was held. The Magistrate acting on a police report made an order prohibiting "any person from going to, buy or sell in the said place." The Petitioners shifted their hat to another place and the Magistrate again made a similar order: Held—That every person is ordinarily, entitled to exercise all rights of ownership on his own property and the holding of a hat on one's property is not in itself a wrongful act. The Criminal Court assumes jurisdiction to interfere with the lawful exercise of a person's right to ownership when such exercise in its ulterior consequences and being directed primarily, against the lawful exercise of another person's right of ownership is likely to cause a breach of the peace. That inasmuch as the Petitioners claimed exclusive possession of the land on which they wanted to hold the hat and intended to hold it on a day other than the day on which the hat of the Opposite Party assembled the Magistrate had no jurisdiction to make an order in the form in which it was made prohibiting the Petitioners from holding their hat on any day of the week and on every place within a large area. That it is not proper for a Magistrate to pass an ex-parte order under sec. 144, Criminal Procedure Code and when its propriety or legality is challenged to postpone the hearing of the matter from time to time until about the termination of the force of the order. Such matters ought to be disposed of quickly in order to avoid unnecessarily encroaching on the civil rights and liberty of the subject. BANWARI LAL RAM v. PRONAB KRISHNA MAJUMDAR ... 663 prayers in a mosque to avoid a breach of the peace—Magistrate's jurisdiction to interfere with a mutwali's administration of wakf property—Proper course for Magistrate, when there is likelihood of breach of peace.] A certain mutwali of a mosque appointed as pesh iman, or the leader of prayers, a certain person, with whom the congregation got dissatisfied. The people therefore refused to read their prayers with him and the matter went so far as to necessitate police interference. Ultimately proceedings under sec. 144, Criminal Procedure Code, were drawn up and the Magistrate passed orders forbidding people of either party to read prayers in the said mosque: Held—That the order was a misconceived one. Unless the mutwali was displaced in due course of law, no one had a right to interfere with the management of the trust property. If the effect of the order of the Magistrate was that no Mahomedan would be allowed to say his prayer in the mosque, the order was not justified under sec. 144, Criminal Procedure Code. Such an order is not proper and justified by the law. The proper course for the Magistrate is to find out which party is wrong, and if he finds one party interfering unnecessarily with the exercise of the legal powers of the other party, he ought to bind down that party restraining them from committing any act which may lead to a breach of the peace. *Haji Md. 146—Evidence of possession on both sides equally unreliable—Order under sec. 145, based on presumption of possession arising from title, if valid—Such presumption when applicable—Interference by High Court—Magistrate directed to act under sec. 146.] Where in a proceeding under sec. 145, Criminal Procedure Code, a Magistrate found that the evidence of possession on both sides was equally unreliable, but declared the second party to be in possession relying on the presumption as to possession arising from the title he found in that party: Held—That the order of the Magistrate under sec. 145 was bad, and he was directed to act under sec. 146, Criminal Procedure Code. Where a Magistrate finds the evidence on both sides, which in itself is reliable, equally balanced, and he is unable to conclude from such evidence which party is in possession then he is entitled to corroborate the evidence of possession given by one side by the presumption as to possession arising from the title which he finds in that side. But this principle does not apply in a case like the present one where the Magistrate finds that the evidence of possession on both sides is equally unreliable. *AKSHOY KUMAR BHATTACHARJA v. W. T.) Department, was created to carry on recruitment, and Chittagong was made a recruiting centre for "marine ratings," for service in Mesopotamia. In selecting recruits for "higher ratings" certificates of fitness were required and the men selected were paid one month's pay in advance and diet allowance. There were various brokers for the supply of recruits. The brokers subsequently formed a combination based on a system of rateable distribution of profits. Enquiries revealed the existence of a widespread conspiracy to secure appointments by deceiving the recruiting officer and his staff with forged certificates. Eventually ten persons were put on their trial on a charge of criminal conspiracy against them all and on separate charges of other offences against each of them individually. One of the accused was acquitted. Eight of the accused were convicted on the general charge of conspiracy under sec. 120B/420, I. P. C. and one of the accused was acquitted on this charge. Besides all the said nine accused were convicted on one or more of the charges framed against them individually. The recruiting officer while giving his evidence, refreshed his memory from certain entries in a register written by the clerk but daily checked and signed by himself: Held—That although the allegations of the prosecution support a case of conspiracy to forge documents, for prosecution of which sanction under sec. 196A, Cr. P. C. is required, there is no reason why, because the accused might have been charged with an offence for the prosecution of which the sanction of the Government is required, they should not be charged with and tried for offences in respect of which no sanction is required, e.g., conspiracy to cheat and cause delivery of property (sec. 120B/420, I. P. C.). That sec. 196A, Cr. P. C., only renders sanction necessary when the prosecution is for criminal conspiracy punishable under sec. 120B, I. P. C. It does not alter the former law that a prosecution for abetment by way of conspiracy punishable under sec. 109, I. P. C., requires no sanction. Therefore the individual charges of abetment to commit the non-cognizable offences in this case did not require sanction. That under the provisions of secs. 159 and 160 of the Evidence Act, the recruiting officer, while giving his evidence, was entitled to refresh his memory from the entries in the register written by his clerk and which he himself signed daily. *ABDUL SALIM v. The legality of the joint trial depends on the accusation and not on the result of the trial. That the accused having been charged with criminal conspiracy under sec. 80B, the various acts of cheating referred to in the charges and the schedule annexed thereto are not to be treated as separate offences but as having been set out as acts done in pursuance of the conspiracy. It was open to the prosecution to prove such acts in order that from them the existence of the conspiracy might be inferred. It may not have been necessary to set out these details in the charge, but their addition did not make the charges bad for misjoinder. Subrahmanya Ayyar v. King-Emperor, L. R. 28 J. A. 257, 1 L. After the examination in chief of the witnesses for the prosecution in the regular manner the Magistrate being of opinion that no offence under sec. 206 was made out changed the procedure to that applicable to summary trials and ultimately convicted the Petitioners under sec. 186, I. These petitions purported to bear the signature of the pleader of B who acted for him in the said rent suits, but it was alleged that this signature was forged. The Munsif after holding a preliminary enquiry made an order under sec. 476, Criminal Procedure Code, directing the prosecution of the Petitioner for offences under secs. 463, 471, I. P. C.: Held—That the petitions in question were not filed in the course of a judicial proceeding and the Munsif had no jurisdiction to make the order. The Sessions Judge in charging the jury said—"Sec. 34 provides that where it is doubtful which of several persons has taken the chief part in any given crime committed in furtherance of the common intention of all of them each of such persons is severally liable as if he alone had done the deed." Held—That it is necessary for the Judge to read the very words of the section itself to the jury if he purports to give them what are the provisions of the section and then if necessary to explain what is the meaning of the section and the direction with regard to sec. 34 was not a proper direction. In charging the jury as to what constitutes murder the Sessions Judge said—"Murder is the intentional killing of another human being with malice aforethought." Held—That it is not the way in which Judge ought to charge the jury in this country. It is usual to refer to the sections which relate to culpable homicide and to direct the jury as to what is culpable homicide and in what circumstances culpable homicide amounts to murder. As to the charge under secs. 302/149, the Sessions Judge charged the jury as follows—"This charge is to some extent redundant and strictly applies only to one accused A, for the other accused are supposed to have been the actual murderers. By sec. 149, A becomes a constructive murderer and liable for the substantive offence just as by sec. 34 all the accused are equally liable for the murder as though each of them had committed it single-handed." Held—That this was a misdirection. Some pleaders refused to appear in a certain Court in pursuance of a resolution of the Bar Association to boycott that Court as a protest against its ill-treatment of pleaders. Proceedings under sec. 14 of the Legal Practitioners Act were drawn up against several pleaders for failure to appear in Court in matters which had been entrusted to them by their clients. The pleaders concerned having intimated their unqualified regret to the High Court for the course adopted by them: Held—That having regard to their unqualified expression of regret the proceedings should be dropped. That the Court regarded the action of the pleaders as a very serious matter. The pleaders deliberately abstained from attending the Court and took part in a concerted movement to boycott the Court, a course of conduct which was not justified. The pleaders had duties and obligations to their clients in respect of suits and matters entrusted to them which were pending in the said Court. There was a further and equally important duty and obligation upon them, viz., to co-operate with the Court in the orderly and pure administration of justice. By the course which they adopted, the pleaders violated and neglected their duties and obligations in both these respects. If the pleaders thought they had a just cause of complaint, they had two courses open to them; to make a representation to the District Judge or to the High Court. They took neither of these alternatives, but they adopted the high-handed

In May 1921, there was considerable excitement in the town of Noakhali due to sympathy for some tea garden coolies stranded at a neighbouring place called Chandpur. At a public meeting a resolution was passed that a complete hartal, i.e., cessation of public activity of every description, should be observed as an expression of the indignation of the community. At a second public meeting it was resolved that those who would not follow the previous resolution should be punished with social boycott or in some equally deterrent manner. Subsequently an informal meeting was held in the Bar Library and the opinion was expressed by the majority that it was not safe to disregard the public feeling which ran very high. The Pleaders, with the exception of two, accordingly ceased to attend Courts during the period of the hartal from the 23rd May to 3rd June. The consequence was that cases, when they were taken up for disposal, had either to be postponed, or decided ex parte or dismissed for default. Proceedings were then drawn up against several Pleaders who had filed vakalatnamas in those cases, for grossly improper conduct under sec. 13 cl. (b) of the Legal Practitioners Act. The Pleaders filed written explanations and the clients were examined as witnesses. In one case, a petition filed in the suit by the client on the date on which his pleader failed to appear, in which he stated that the Pleader had declined to attend Court on account of the hartal was admitted in evidence. The Pleaders stated inter alia that they were afraid to go against public opinion and preferred to "bow down to the popular will, that they had not been paid fees for the dates on which they did not appear and that they had not agreed nor were bound to appear in Court on all the dates fixed for the hearing of the suits: Held, per Sanderson,

C. J.—That a vakalatnama was much more than a mere authority to act, and it was the duty of a Pleader who had accepted a vakalatnama and had been asked to go to Court to do so to protect his clients' interests, unless it was proved that his obligations towards his client, entailed by the acceptance of the vakalatnama, were limited by a special arrangement, accompanying the acceptance of the vakalatnama; but no such special arrangements were proved by the Pleaders, upon whom the onus of proving it lay. Quære:— Whether a Pleader can divest himself of his duty arising from the acceptance of the vakalatnama without the leave of the Court. Held:— That, in any case, the Pleaders were bound to give the clients reasonable notice so as to afford the clients reasonable opportunity of obtaining other legal assistance. In the absence of any proof that any fee was asked or that there was any arrangement that a fee should be paid before the Pleaders would attend Court, the mere fact that no fees were tendered or paid was no justification for a Pleader's refusal to attend to his client's further interests. Pleaders have a duty not only towards their clients but also towards the Court and it was clearly their duty to co-operate with the Court in the orderly and pure administration of justice. They would not be justified in allowing their fear of humiliation and inconvenience to override their duty to their client and to the Court and that was no adequate reason for abstention from Court. Held, however, on the facts:— That the Pleaders willingly acquiesced in the boycott of the Courts and thereby lent support to the movement, which was calculated to paralyse the administration of justice. Therefore the Pleaders are guilty of grossly improper conduct within the meaning of cl. (b) of sec. 13 of the Legal Practitioners Act, and of such misconduct as would bring their case within cl. (1) of the section. The contents of the petition in the suit filed by the client were admissible in evidence under sec. 137 of the Evidence Act in corroboration of the evidence which he had already given at the time when his attention was directed to the contents of the petition and when he said the contents were true to his knowledge. Per Woodroffe, J.—That it was open to any practitioner for reasons personal to himself to refuse to practise in a particular Court or before a particular Judge. But he can adopt this course either by refusing briefs in such Court, or before such Judge, or, if he has accepted a brief or vakalatnama, by first properly discharging himself on due notice to the client and in the latter case to the Court. But concerted action by a whole body of legal practitioners to boycott a Judge or Court in protest against an alleged wrong of one of its members or in respect of its conduct in the administration of justice generally is not permissible because the Bar cannot constitute itself an authority to adjudge on such grievance and its duty is not to impede the administration of justice by collective abstention from Court, but to seek relief by representation to the High Court. It would not be possible to charge a legal practitioner with grossly improper conduct, whatever his liability to his client might be, if he omitted to carry out his duty to his client by reason of his genuine fear of any real and substantial injury, physical or otherwise, to himself or family. Nor would it make any difference if such fear were, in fact, unfounded if, in fact, it was sincerely entertained. But in these cases such risk or fear was not the operative cause on the minds of the Pleaders in inducing them not to attend. They bowed to the popular will not because they were afraid of it but because they approved of it. That these proceedings were quasi-criminal proceedings in the sense that they might result in penalties, and not in the sense that all rules of procedure applicable in criminal trials are necessarily in force in a quasi-criminal proceeding. It was open to the Pleader to say nothing or to give no explanation, but if the Pleader did offer an explanation the Court might take it into account in ascertaining whether the charge was made out. The onus undoubtedly was on the party making the charge. That the previous petition of the client was evidence of a step taken in the proceeding and would be corroborative to the extent that there was evidence on the record which it might corroborate. If a Pleader has accepted a vakalatnama in general and common form, the onus of proving any special contract accompanying the acceptance of the vakalatnama is on the Pleader. If again, it is alleged that the Pleader has discharged himself, he must show that he has properly done so with sufficient notice to his client and with intimation to Court. If a Pleader stipulates for payment of fees before he does any work, he is not bound to do such work without such payment. If, however, he accepts a vakalatnama without such stipulation he must proceed to represent him even though unpaid his fees until either his client discharges him or he properly discharges himself. Per Woodroffe and Mookerjee, JJ.—That the cases fell under both cl. (b) and (f) of sec. 13 of the Legal Practitioners Act, i.e., under cl. (b) in so far as they involved neglect of duty towards the client in accepting vakalatnama and without excuse not fulfilling the duties involved in such acceptance and under cl. (f), in so far as the practitioners' conduct was directed against the Court by abstention from attendances on account of the hartal. Per Mookerjee, J.—In view of the definite provisions for appointment and discharge of Pleaders [Vide Ord. III, rr. 1 and 4 (1) and 4(2), Criminal Procedure Code], Pleader who has accepted a vakalatnama and filed it in Court is ordinarily bound to appear and conduct his case, in the absence of an agreement to the contrary. It is conceivable that the vakalatnama may not set out explicitly all the terms of the engagement between the Pleader and his client, and amongst these there may be implied terms sanctioned by well-known and well-established usage of the profession. Re, Gopinath Mudduk, W. R. 7 (1870), and Ram Koer v. Pana Koer, 3 Shome 75 (1880), referred to. The acceptance of a vakalatnama with the usual terms, which is filed by the Pleader in Court, prima facie places him under an obligation to appear and not act on behalf of his client, and if he fails to do so, he must be ready to justify his conduct by proof that the client had failed to fulfil an implied term of the engagement. Muni v. Venkata, I. L. B. 37 Mad. 298: s. c. 23 M. L. J. 477 (F. B.) (1912), Kally v. Carapiet, 2 Shome 124 (1878), Re, A Solicitor, 4 B. L. R. 29 (P. C.) (1870), and Satish v. Sarada, 19 C. L. J. 432 (1891), and several other cases referred to. When a Pleader has accepted a vakalatnama with or without implied conditions, his liability continues, till he has discharged himself by recourse to the appropriate procedure. But this is not a matter solely between the Pleader and his client. The appointment of a Pleader when filed in Court with his acceptance continues in force until determined with the leave of the Court by a writing signed by the client or the Pleader as the case may be. Atul v. Lakshan, I. L. R. 36 Cal. 609 (1909), and Prabhulal v. Kumar Krishna, 20 C. W. N. 437: s. c. 23 C. L. J. 326 (1916), and several other cases referred to. It is further well-settled that a legal practitioner must always give a reasonable notice of his withdrawal from the case to his clients. The failure of a Pleader to appear to conduct the case before he has discharged himself in the manner provided by law, unless such failure can be justified renders him liable to disciplinary action by the Court. Overriding pressure of circumstances beyond the control of the Pleader may be a reason justifying a failure to attend to a case, but to avail himself of it, it is essential that the Pleader should in full appreciation of his duty as the representative of his client and as an officer of the Court, have been sincerely anxious to protect the former and assist the latter. The relation of Pleader and client involves the highest personal trust and confidence, so much so that it cannot be delegated without consent. A Pleader is more than a mere agent or servant of his client. He is also an officer of the Court and as such owes the duty of good faith and honourable dealing to the Court before which he practises his profession. Muruga v. Rajasami, 22 Mad. L. J. 284 (1912), referred to. The practice of the law is in the nature of a franchise from the State conferred only for merit and may be revoked whenever misconduct renders the Pleader holding the license unfit to be entrusted with the powers and duties of his office. Any attempt on the part of a Pleader to boycott the Courts or to obstruct the administration of justice by a resort to any form of device constitutes ground for disbarment or suspension. Proceedings under sec. 14, Legal Practitioners Act, are not of a criminal nature. They are undoubtedly a judicial proceeding. They are neither civil suits nor criminal prosecutions, but special proceedings resulting from the inherent power of the Courts over their officers. The form of the proceeding, however, is not of controlling importance, so long as the essentials of fair notice and opportunity to be heard are present. The essence of the matter is that the Pleader must be allowed an opportunity of making his defences. It is not obligatory on the Pleader to submit a written defence or to be present at all. But if he submits a written statement in answer to the charge, the Court is bound to take it into consideration and may draw such inference as may legitimately arise from its contents. In such a case it is not obligatory on the Court to rule out all conceivable hypothetical grounds which could have but proved not been set up in answer to the charge. IN THE MATTER OF EMPEROR v. RAJANI KANTA BOSE. For other cases under the Legal Practitioners Act, See Civil Index ... 589

PENAL CODE, INDIAN (Act XLV of 1860), s. 147, out of six accused persons three found to have a common object different from that set out in the charge—Legality of conviction of any of the six accused—Court's duty in cases where near relatives want to compound cases. Six accused persons were convicted under sec. 147, Indian Penal Code and sentenced to 15 days' imprisonment. In the charge the common object was stated to be to assault the complainant. During the pendency of the case the complainant wanted to compound the case but the Magistrate did not allow him to do so. In his judgment he found that three of the accused assaulted the complainant and the other three accused went to snatch away the cattle of the complainant in common object with that of the other accused persons: Held—That there being a difference between the common object found by the Magistrate in the case of three of the accused persons, there were not five persons that shared in the common object set out in the charge, and the ingredient of an offence under sec. 147, I. P. C. was wanting. Therefore the conviction under sec. 147 against all the accused must fail. It is a great pity, when parties, who are apparently nearly related to one another, succeed in patching up their quarrels, that the Magistrate should not do what he can to restore peace and good will. AMINT'LLA v. THE EMPEROR ... 536

PRIVY COUNCIL—Criminal appeal, when entertained.] The King in Council is not a Court of Criminal Appeal and the power in the Sovereign to entertain appeals of this character is only to be exercised when there has been such a gross denial of the principles of natural justice as has been defined in numerous cases. MURUGA GOUNDAN v. THE CALCUTTA WEEKLY NOTES. REPORTS.

[PRIVY COUNCIL.]

[APPEAL FROM MADRAS.]

LORD BUCKMASTER.

LORD DUNEDIN.

LORD SHAW.

SIR JOHN EDGE.

Heard, 24, 25, 28,

February and 1,
March.

Judgment, 5, May.

AROMILLI PERRAZU
and ors., Appellants,

ARUMILLI SUBBA-RAYADU and ors.,
Respondents.

Hindu law—Joint family—Karta, position of, of that of trustee in the strict sense—Accountability for money misapplied as karta—Interest payable thereon—Discretion of Courts in India, Privy Council if will interfere with—Adoption by Sudra—Partition among adopted son and after-born sons—Shares, if equal—Dattaka Chandrika, authority of, in Southern India and Bengal.

The trial Court directed the karta of a joint Hindu family to pay interest at 9 per cent. per annum on moneys misapplied by him, but the High Court on appeal reduced it to 6 per cent. per annum:

Held, by the Judicial Committee, that it would require very special and unusual circumstances to induce it to vary such a decision which rested upon discretion even though in this matter the view of the High Court differed from that of the trying Court as to the way in which that discretion should be exercised. On the merits of the matter, too, the Judicial Committee agreed with the High Court.

There are a number of fiduciary relationships in India to which the rules applicable to strict accounts between trustees and cestui que trusts in England cannot in their entirety apply—the office of manager of a joint Hindu family affording one such instance. In the absence of proof of direct misappropriation or fraudulent and improper conversion of the moneys to the personal use of the manager, he is liable to account for what he received and not for what he ought to or might have received if the moneys had been profitably dealt with.

The rule of the Dattaka Chandrika that on a partition of the joint family property of a Sudra family, an adopted son is entitled to share equally with the legitimate son born to the adoptive father subsequently to the adoption, although not supported by any ancient text of the Smritis or by the Mitakshara is not inconsistent, so far as Sudras are concerned, with the Smritis or the Mitakshara, and having been accepted and acted upon for at least more than a century in the Presidency of Madras until the law on the subject was disturbed in 1918 by the decision of the Madras High Court in KARUTURI GOPALAM v. KARUTURI VENKATARAGHAVULU (7), should be affirmed as the law applicable in such cases in that Presidency.

KARUTURI GOPALAM v. KARUTURI VENKATARAGHAVULU (7) overruled.

MOHON GHOSH MOULIK v. MOHON GHOSH MOULIK (10) affirmed.

The Dattaka Chandrika has been for long accepted in the Presidency of Madras as a treatise on adoption of the highest authority. It does not however follow from this, that comments and propositions contained in it, apparently novel when the Dattaka Chandrika was first accepted in Southern India as an authority on the law of adoption, if not based upon ancient texts which can with some certainty be identified, have been accepted by the Hindus of Southern India as part of Hindu law.

Appeal from a judgment and decree of the Madras High Court, dated the 13th October 1916, modifying a judgment and decree, dated 13th December 1913, of the Court of the temporary Sub-Judge of Rajamundry.

The facts of the case will sufficiently appear from their Lordships' judgment.

Mr. A. M. Dunne, K. C. (with Messrs. J. M. Parikh and K. V. L. Narasimham) for the Appellants. The questions for decision are (1) the share an adopted son takes in Hindu law, the High Court having decided that he gets only one-fifth of a natural son's share; (2) Is the High Court right in refusing to order a general account against Plaintiff although we have proved numerous classes of fraud.

There are concurrent findings as to adoption. After adoption Plaintiff had natural sons. If the parties were not Sudras, the adopted son would get only $\frac{1}{4}$ of the natural son's share. It has been decided in Bengal among Kayasthas, that is Sudras, that the adopted son gets the same share as a natural son.

Dattaka Chandrika gives $\frac{1}{2}$ share of a natural born son to adopted son. This is inapplicable to Sudras. Dattaka Chandrika has been recognised by the Board as the leading authority on adoptions.

Golap Chandra Sastri's Hindu Law, pp. 657 and 658: quotes Vyavashita Chandrika, paras. 17 and 19; para. 29 does not apply to Sudras. Karuturi Gopalam v.

Karuturi Venkataraghavulu (7) is not correctly decided. Strange's Hindu Law, Edn. (1825), Vol. I, bottom of p. 86 and top of p. 87, says, "among the Sudras the after-born son and adopted son share equally," McNaghten's Hindu Law (1865 Edn.), Vol. I, pp. 70, 66; in Raja v. Subbarayya (5), the question was between the adopted son of one brother claiming against the natural son of another brother. Turner, C. J. and Muttuswami Iyer, J., at p. 254, clearly acknowledge the authority of the Dattaka Chandrika.

Baramanund Mahanta v. Krishna Chhuran (11) relied on in Asita Mohon Ghosh Moulik v. Nirode Mohon Ghosh Moulik (10). This last case came before the Board in 1920, Asita Mohon v. Nirode Mohon (12), but the Calcutta judgment is very important, as it refers to a number of authorities. Sri Balusu Gurulingaswami v. Sri Balusu Rummamlakshamma (3) and Nagindas v. Bachoo (13).

As to Karuturi Gopalam v. Karuturi Venkataraghavulu (7)

[LORD SHAW.—Here we have a case which says that when we get to inheritance we should be guided by the paramount authority of the Mitakshara.]

I say this is a question of status and not of inheritance.

gama v. Atchma (4) establish the authority of Dattaka Chandrika.

There is really no conflict between the Mitakshara and the Dattaka Chandrika. One deals more specifically with the case of an adopted son. I say that the Mitakshara does not deal with the case of an adopted son in the case of Sudra. Here we have a book (Dattaka Chandrika) which deals with the case of an adopted son among Sudras, and which has been acknowledged as an authority.

Mr. J. M. Parikh (following):—The general rule is that the adopted son succeeds to an equal share. The exceptions must be proved. The Mitakshara specially lays down that among the twice born the adopted son takes $\frac{1}{2}$. This is an exception. But it mentions no such exception in the case of Sudras. Nagindas v. Bachoo (13) lays down the position of an adopted son.

Where there is a conflict between Dattaka Chandrika and Dattaka Mimansa, it is the Chandrika that is paramount in Madras.

The cases relied on in Karuturi Gopalam v. Karuturi Venkataraghavulu (7) are none of them cases of Sudras. The Bonibay case relied on was reversed on appeal: Raghabanand v. Sadhu Churn (6) cited there was not the case of a Sudra, this point was not touched.

Mr. L. DeGruyther, K. C. (with Messrs. Eddis and Dubé) for the Respondents.

[LORD BUCKMASTER.—You need not trouble about the general accounts, but with the special items.]

We have no evidence that Defendant or his wife was in possession of some of these funds. Evidence of the Defendant is that the monies belonged to his wife. There is other evidence as well. This is merely a question of fact.

The manager of a family has a perfect right to keep the money without interest. He cannot be charged for interest. The promissory notes do not prove that he got the interest. All that the Court could decide was a partition of joint family property.

Secs. 293 and 294 of Mayne's Hindu Law deal with the question of accounts. As to the share of the adopted son, the original authority is undoubtedly the Vedas, Smrities, etc. Then we get the commentaries thereon, the Mitakshara and Dayabhaga. These are now the law. All the other commentaries like Dattaka Chandrika, etc., are still merely commentaries. These cannot deviate from the Mitakshara which prevails in Madras. Refers to p. 426, sec. 12, para (2). There is no special rule about Sudras, on this point except as provided by sec. 12; Mayne para. 27 deals with the sources of Hindu law in Southern India. Of these I can place before you two. Setlur's collection of texts on Hindu Law of Inheritance at p. 274, Chap. X, para. 16; at p. 161. Stokes p. 301 (Dayabhaga). The Mayukha (Stokes, p. 66). All these take the same view. Again Stokes, p. 516. Mayne, p. 16, sec. 16. All these are based on the texts of Katyayana and Vashistha (cf Mayne, sec. 24); Mr. Shama Charan Sarkar's Vyavashta Chandrika, p. 169; the rule he lays down is that the adopted son might get an equal share in certain circumstances.

The only thing against me is this verse in Chandrika; it is not founded on any of the Smrities, etc. Case recently before the Board, where they were two brothers and one had an adopted son and the other a natural son, in a case of partition. The Board decided that the adopted son represented his father. Raja v. Subbaraya (5) was referred to.

Mr. A. M. Dunne, K. C., in reply. As regards accounts, see Abhoy Chandra v. Pcari Mohon (18). I have proved that interest has been received. The authority of Dattaka Chandrika has already been dealt with by this Board as well as the Calcutta High Court. In the case in Asita Mohon Ghosh Moulik v. Nirode Mohon Ghosh Moulik (19), the whole matter has been considered. One must not look at it from the Madras Court's point of view only. Mitakshara is a commentary only. It is a commentary on Yajnavalkya, a successor of Manu. But this general text is neither in Yajnavalkya nor in Manu, but is taken from Gautama. The only conflict, if any, is between these two commentaries, the Mitakshara and Chandrika. The dissenting judgment of Banerji, J., differing from Sir John Edge in Bhagwan Singh v. Bhagwan Singh (19) came to this Board in Bhagwan Singh v. Bhagwan Singh (4).

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by

SIR JOHN EDGE. These appeals raise a question of great and far-reaching importance with regard to the rights of succession in the Presidency of Madras, but this is associated with a series of relatively unimportant matters relating to questions of accounts that have arisen in these circumstances.

The first Plaintiff in the suit, who is the first Respondent to each appeal, was the manager for many years of a joint family estate which appears greatly to have prospered under his care. Distrust, however, arose, and was apparently well justified, as to his dealing with certain portions of the estate, and elaborate enquiries were set on foot outside the Courts for the purpose of ascertaining what the true position was. This first Respondent—uneasy, it is asserted, as to the prospect of proceedings being brought against him as the result of these enquiries—instituted proceedings himself, to which the Appellants were parties, alleging that they also had been in custody of part of the joint family estate, and asking for accounts and consequential relief, to which demand among other answers, a claim was put forward that the Plaintiff should render an account of the joint family properties and his management from 1898 onwards. The questions associated with these claims have been before the Subordinate Judge and before the High Court. Both these Courts refused the claim for the general account and decided the various questions in issue that were raised on the accounts. Apart from the dispute as to the rights of succession, the claim for the general account and the following items only are the subject of these consolidated appeals: First, the Appellants say that the Plaintiff should pay interest at 9 per cent. on the moneys misapplied in accordance with the direction of the Subordinate Judge, this direction being overruled by the High Court, who reduced it to 6 per cent.; secondly, they assert that the High Court was wrong in deciding that certain items of Sch. B and Sch. C of the Supplement Schedule B were the joint property of the family; and finally they assert that the High Court was wrong in excluding from the items on which interest was payable a sum of Rs. 7,000, which was the subject of a promissory note held by the Plaintiff.

With regard to the claim for the general account, this has been refused by both Courts. The High Court based their decision upon the ground that all the items in respect of which the Plaintiff was alleged to have been guilty of misconduct had been investigated and set out in the schedules which were before the consideration of the learned Judge, who had dealt with them item by item as appeared in his judgment. They continue in these words:—

"What more could be done, even if we direct general accounts, it is difficult to see."

Their Lordships are entirely in agreement with this view. The learned Subordinate Judge himself stated that it appeared that all possible items of collection by the first Plaintiff had been proved as far as possible by the indefatigable energy of the Defendants Nos. 1 and 3. He also added that he thought delay was a good reason for refusing the claim. Their Lordships think that the High Court rightly interpreted the judgment of the Subordinate Judge, and that in substance, if not in actual words, both Courts have decided that in effect the account asked for has already been taken and that it would be a needless prolongation of litigation and waste of cost if a further account were ordered. This conclusion is the one at which their Lordships have themselves arrived, and they therefore think that upon this point the appeal must fail.

With regard to the interest, the matter can be briefly dealt with. The High Court have considered that 6 per cent. simple interest is sufficient. It would require very special and unusual circumstances to induce this Board to vary such a decision, which rests upon discretion, even though in this matter the view of the High Court differed from that of the Subordinate Judge as to the way in which that discretion should be exercised. But they may add that if the matter were one upon which an independent judgment was required, they think that the judgment of the High Court was correct.

As to the items claimed by some of the Defendants as separate property this depends upon evidence and the Courts have differed as to its effect. Their Lordships think that the judgment of the High Court is correct as to its interpretation. The first Defendant asserts that the property was bought with moneys belonging to his wife, and he accounts for these moneys by stating :—

“My mother-in-law gave property to my wife just before her death. My wife told me of her gift of property to her. I was not present at the time.”

And this is supported by the evidence of the Defendant's brother-in-law, whose evidence is in these terms :—

“My sister sold away her husband's properties to which she succeeded. No; she obtained 4 acres from her husband's family for maintenance. She also purchased 10 acres. Subsequently she sold away all the 14 acres of land.”

The wife was not examined to support the claim. It appears that the learned Subordinate Judge based his judgment upon the view that there was nothing improbable in the Defendant's wife having inherited the amount necessary for the purchase of the property. That would be a potent reason if there were substantial evidence to show that such inheritance had in fact been acquired. In their Lordships' opinion such evidence is not forthcoming, and they think upon this point also the judgment of the High Court is correct, though it is liable to be misunderstood from the form of the judgment, which suggests as a reason that the first Defendant's story was contradicted by one of his own witnesses whose evidence was inadmissible. This would apparently leave the first Defendant's story unchallenged, but in truth his account was never sufficiently substantiated, and for this reason that claim fails.

With regard to the last matter of the Rs. 7,000, it is extremely difficult to extract the reasons why the High Court dealt with this sum differently from other amounts which appear in the same account, though in fact it was added as an additional item. There is, however, nothing to show their Lordships that it was so dealt with by the first Plaintiff as to render him liable to account for anything more than the actual interest that he received upon it; but to this extent he is accountable.

Their Lordships desire once more to repeat the warning they have often given against attempting to apply without qualification in India the rules applicable to strict accounts between trustees and cestui que trusts that exist in this country, because in truth there are a number of fiduciary relationships in India to which these rules cannot in their entirety apply. This does not mean that breach of established duty should be less severely dealt with in India than in this country, but that there are fiduciary relationships which do not involve all the duties which are imposed upon trustees here. The office of manager of a joint family estate affords an illustration of this difference. In the absence of proof of direct misappropriation or fraudulent and improper conversion of the moneys to the personal use of the manager, he is liable to account for what he received and not for what he ought to or might have received if the moneys had been profitably dealt with. Their Lordships cannot find in this case anything to render the first Respondent liable beyond the extent to which they have referred. On this point also, except to the extent above mentioned, the Appellants fail.

The next question which it is necessary to consider is that which is raised by the second of these two consolidated appeals in which the Defendants Arumilli Ramanna and his three sons, Arumilli Ragavudu, Arumilli Venkataratnan and Arumilli Subbarayadu are the Appellants, and the Plaintiffs are the Respondents. The parties are Sudras and belong to a family of Sudras, of the Presidency of Madras, which in general is governed by the law of the Mitakshara. Arumilli Ramanna was, as has been concurrently found by the Courts below, adopted by the Plaintiff, Subbarayadu, as his son when that Plaintiff was childless. Ramanna was by birth a son of Venkiah, who was a brother of that Plaintiff. After Ramanna had been adopted that Plaintiff's sons, Ramamurti and Periah, who are respectively the second and third Plaintiffs, were born, and the question to be considered in the second of these two appeals is whether in the Sudra caste in the Presidency of Madras an adopted son on partition of the family property shares equally with a son of his adoptive father born subsequently to his adoption. The question is an important one, and is by no means an easy one for this Board to decide. The question depends on a text of the Dattaka Chandrika and on the authority to be allowed in the Presidency of Madras to that text.

So far as ancient texts and recognised Sanskrit commentaries on Hindu law are concerned, the earliest authority for the proposition that amongst Sudras an adopted son, on a partition of the property of the joint family, shares equally with a legitimate son of the adoptive father, born subsequently to the adoption, is that of the Dattaka Chandrika. In sec. V of the Dattaka Chandrika ("Hindu Law Books" edited by Whitley Stokes, 1865) which deals with "the succession by inheritance of adopted sons lineally and collaterally," the commentator, after referring to rights of members of a Hindu joint family generally to share in a partition of the family property, said:—

"29. The mode, however, of partition between the son of the wife, the son given, and the rest and the legitimate son, which has been propounded in what preceded, does not apply to the Sudra tribe."

After some further observations, the commentator further said:—

"32. Accordingly, the text subjoined must be construed as referring merely to Sudras. 'A son given being thus adopted, if by any chance, a legitimate son should be born let them be equal partakers of the father's estate.' So also in the following text, the equal participation of all lawfully begotten Sudras having been first propounded, the succession to equal shares of the other sons likewise is subsequently declared by the sentence ('if there be an hundred sons') occurring therein. 'For a Sudra is ordained a wife of his own class and no other. Those begotten on her shall have equal shares; if there be an hundred sons (the same mode of partition shall obtain).’ If the sentence in question be referred to the real legitimate son only, the position contained in it being obtained from what preceded, its repetition would be unmeaning.”

For those statements as to the right amongst Sudras of the adopted son to share equally on partition with the subsequently born legitimate son of the adoptive father, the author of the Dattaka Chandrika did not state who his authority was. He quoted a text from Vridhdha Gautama to the effect that an adopted son and an after-born son share equally, which is not accepted by the Courts in India or by the followers of the Mitakshara or by the followers of the Daya Bhaga as a correct statement of the law applicable to all Hindus, and drew his inference that it was applicable to Sudras from texts which do not propound any such proposition, and, so far as their Lordships understand them, do not suggest the conclusion expressed on this subject by that commentator.

The Dattaka Chandrika has been treated by the Board as a high authority. As early as 1846 Lord Kingsdown, then Mr. Pemberton Leigh, in delivering the judgment of the Board in Ryngama v. Atchama (1), in reference to the Dattaka Chandrika and the Dattaka Mimamsa, said :—“ They are written on the particular subject of adoption; they enjoy, as we understand, the highest reputation throughout India.”

In The Collector of Madura v. Mootoo Ramalinga Sathupathy (2), which was an appeal from the High Court at Madras, Sir James Colville, in delivering the judgment of the Board, referring to the Dattaka Mimamsa and the Dattaka Chandrika, said :—“ Again, of the Dattaka Mimamsa of Nanda Pandita, and the Dattaka Chandrika of Davanda Bhatta, two Treatises on the particular subject of adoption, Sir William Macnaghten says that they are respected all over India; but that when they differ the doctrine of the latter is adhered to in Bengal and by the southern Jurists, while the former is held to be the infallible guide in the Province of Mithila and Benares.”

It has since then been ascertained that Davanda Bhatta was not the author of the Dattaka Chandrika. Sir James Colville, in the passage above quoted, was referring to the authority of the work itself.

In Sri Balusu Gurulingaswami v. Sri Balusu Humalakshamma (3), which was an appeal from the High Court at Madras, Lord Hobhouse in delivering the judgment of a Board consisting of himself, Lord Macnaghten and Sir Richard Couch, said : “ The date of the Dattaka Chandrika is not certain; but it is at all events very much later than the Smritis, and it stands only on the footing of a work by a learned man. Messrs. West and Bhüler in their valuable work on Hindu law, 3rd ed., p. 11, speak thus : ‘ The Dattaka Mimamsa and the Dattaka Chandrika, the latter less than the former, are supplementary authorities on the law of adoption. Their opinions, however, are not considered of so great importance but that they may be set aside on general grounds in case they are opposed to the doctrines of the Vyarahava Mayukha or the Dharmasindhu and Nirnayasindhu.’ This is spoken with special reference to Bombay and Western India. But both works have had a high place in the estimation of Hindu lawyers in all parts of India, and having had the advantage of being translated into English at a comparatively early period, have increased their authority during the British rule. Their Lordships cannot concur with Knox, J., in saying that their authority is open to examination, explanation, criticism, adoption or rejection like any scientific treatises on European jurisprudence. Such treatment would not allow for the effect which long acceptance of written opinions has upon social customs, and it would probably disturb recognised law and settled arrangements. But, so far as saying that caution is required in accepting their glosses where they deviate from or add to the Smritis, their Lordships are prepared to concur with the learned Judge."

"In Bhagwan Singh v. Bhagwan Singh (4), which was an appeal from the High Court at Allahabad, Lord Hobhouse in delivering the judgment of a Board consisting of himself, Lord Macnaghten, Lord Morris and Sir Richard Couch, in referring to the Dattaka Mimamsa and the Dattaka Chandrika said: "If there were anything to show that in the Benares School of Law these works had been excluded or rejected, that would have to be considered. But their authority has been affirmed as part of the general Hindu law, founded on Smritis as the source from whence all Schools of Hindu Law derive their precepts. In Doctor Jolly's Tagore Lecture of 1883, that learned writer says: 'The Dattaka Mimamsa and Dattaka Chandrika have furnished almost exclusively the scanty basis on which the modern law of adoption has been based.' Both works have been received in Courts of law, including this Board, as high authority. Lord Kingsdown's words in Bangama v. Atchama (1) have already been quoted and those of Sir James Colville in the case of The Collector of Madura v. Mootoo Ramalinga Sathupathy (2). As has been said, Sir James Colville quotes with assent the opinion of Sir William Macnaghten, that both works are respected all over India, that when they differ the Chandrika is adhered to in Bengal and by the Southern jurists while the Mimamsa is held to be an infallible guide in the Provinces of Mithila and Benares. To call it infallible is too strong an expression, and the estimates of Sutherland, and of West and Bühler, seem nearer the true mark: but it is clear that both works must be accepted as bearing high authority for so long a time that they have become embedded in the general law."

"There can be no doubt that the Dattaka Chandrika has been for long and still is accepted in the Presidency of Madras as a treatise on adoption of the highest authority. It is not primarily a work dealing with rights of inheritance or with rights of coparcenary in property acquired by birth or adoption, but it does necessarily deal with such subjects as the occasion requires. It is not known who was the author of the Dattaka Chandrika, and the doubt as to its authorship makes it impossible to fix with any certainty the date when it was written, but it is believed to be an earlier work than the Dattaka Mimamsa, which was written by Nanda Pandita, who is known to have lived about 300 years ago. When the Dattaka Chandrika was first accepted in Southern India as an authority on the law of adoption, it would probably be impossible now to ascertain. It, however, appears to their Lordships that it does not necessarily follow from the fact that the Dattaka Chandrika has been long accepted in Southern India as a high authority on the law of adoption that comments and propositions, apparently then novel, contained in it, if not based upon ancient texts which can with some certainty be identified, have been accepted by the Hindus of Southern India as part of the Hindu law. It thus becomes necessary to ascertain, if possible, whether the rule propounded for the first time, it is believed, in paras. 29 and 32 of sec. 5 of the Dattaka Chandrika, which have been quoted above, ever was accepted and acted upon by the Hindus of the Presidency of Madras as Hindu law.

Mr. W. Macnaghten in his "Principles and Precedents of Hindu Law," which was published at Calcutta in 1829 and is a recognised authority on Hindu law, said at p. 70 of Volume I: "Where a legitimate son is born subsequently to the adoption, he and the son adopted inherit together, but the adopted son takes one-third, according to the law of Bengal, and one-fourth, according to the doctrine of other Schools." In a note to that passage, Macnaghten stated: "It is laid down in the Dattakachandrika that in the case of Sudras, if a legitimate son be subsequently born, he is entitled to an equal share only with the adopted son, and this rule prevails accordingly in the Southern Provinces."

It has been suggested, in reference to his note which has been quoted, that Mr. William Macnaghten, when he wrote his book, had no special knowledge of the law affecting Sudras in the Presidency of Madras, but even if that suggestion is well founded, it cannot be suggested that Sir Thomas Strange, when he wrote his well-known book on Hindu law, which was published in 1830, did not know what was the then accepted law in the Presidency of Madras as to the rights of an adopted son amongst Sudras. Sir Thomas Strange had been Chief Justice of Nova Scotia; he commenced his judicial experience in India in 1798, when he was appointed Recorder of Madras, and became a celebrated Indian jurist. He was Chief Justice of the Supreme Court at Madras from 1800 until 1817. At page 99 of Volume 1 of his "Hindu Law" in reference to the right of inheriting on the death of a Hindu father, Sir Thomas Strange stated:—"Among Sudras in the same event (the death of the father), the after-born son and the adopted son share equally the paternal estate." That statement was doubtless based on the text of the Dattaka Chandrika which has been quoted. Sir Thomas Strange knew that according to Hindu law as applicable to the twice-born classes, the share to which an adopted son would be entitled on partition would be less than the share of the legitimate son born to the adoptive father subsequently to the adoption, and he would not have stated that amongst Sudras those sons would take equal shares if from his judicial experience in Madras he had any doubt that the rule propounded in the Dattaka Chandrika had not been accepted and acted upon in the Presidency of Madras.

The earliest reported case in the Presidency of Madras, so far as their Lordships are aware, in which this question as to the right amongst Sudras of the adopted son to share equally in the property of a joint family with the subsequently born legitimate son of the adoptive father was mentioned, came on appeal before the High Court at Madras in 1883. In that case [Raja v. Subbaraya (5)], the Plaintiff sued for partition and to recover from the Defendant one-half of certain movable and immovable properties on the ground that he was an adopted son of the deceased undivided brother of the deceased father of the Defendant. The parties were Sudras, and the Defendant contended that the Plaintiff was entitled to one-fifth only of the estate, and that he, the Defendant, was entitled to four-fifths under the Hindu law. In that case Turner, C. J., and Muttuswami Ayyar, J., on appeal, delivered the following judgment:—

"There is no valid ground for the contention that if the adoption be proved the Plaintiff should take but a fifth share. By representation the adopted son takes the share which his adoptive father would be entitled to take on partition. With all deference to the authority of the High Court of Calcutta in Raghubanund Doss v. Sadhu Churn Doss (6), we doubt whether the passage in Dattaka Chandrika, sec. 5, para. 25, even with the addition suggested, has been correctly interpreted. If there be such a special rule, as is suggested, it is not applicable at all events to Sudras, among whom the adopted son is declared entitled to take an equal share with a legitimate son who is born subsequently to the adoption. We agree with the Judge that the Plaintiff would take his father's share, a moiety, if he were really adopted."

ARUMILLI PERRAZU v. ARUMILLI SUBBARAYADU.

It has been objected, and correctly, that the dictum in that case that amongst Sudras an adopted son is entitled to take an equal share on partition with a legitimate son born subsequently to the adoption, was not necessary to the decision of the appeal then before the Madras Court, and that the opinion on that subject expressed by Turner, C. J., and Muttuswami Ayyar, J., must be regarded as obiter. Nevertheless it was the opinion of the then Chief Justice of Madras, who was an able and careful lawyer, and of Mr. Justice Muttuswami Ayyar, who was a member of a Brahmin family of the Madras Presidency, and who earned for himself the well-deserved reputation of being one of the most accomplished and reliable lawyers in India in cases involving a knowledge of Hindu law. That opinion of those learned Judges, although strictly it was an obiter dictum, was deserving of respect, and was probably expressed in answer to some argument of counsel in the case. If the rule propounded in the Dattaka Chandrika that amongst Sudras the adopted son and the subsequently born legitimate son shared equally had been seriously questioned in the Presidency of Madras, it is impossible to believe that Mr. Justice Muttuswami Ayyar should in 1888 not have been aware that the rule had not been accepted and acted upon in that Presidency as correct.

The next reported case relating to Sudras in the Madras Presidency, of which their Lordships are aware in which the rule in question here of the Dattaka Chandrika was considered, is that of Kuruturi Gopalani v. Kuruturi Venkata-raghavulu (7), which came on appeal before the High Court at Madras in 1915. In that case the parties were Sudras, and the Plaintiff, who was the Respondent to the appeal, had been adopted in 1898 by one Venkana, a Sudra, who died in 1902 leaving him surviving the Plaintiff, the first Defendant, who was the legitimate son of Venkana, born to him subsequently to the adoption of the Plaintiff, and his widow, who was the natural mother of the first Defendant, and was the second Defendant. During the minority of the Plaintiff and the first Defendant, the widow managed the estate. The Plaintiff attained majority in 1907, and brought the suit in 1910 for partition and delivery to him of half of the family estate, alleged mismanagement of the estate by her of portions of the estate for the benefit of the first Defendant, and claimed an account. The first Defendant, through his mother as his guardian, pleaded, amongst other things which are not material to the question to be considered here, that the Plaintiff, as an adopted son, was entitled only to a fifth share of the estate, and that he, the first Defendant, was entitled to the remaining four-fifths. The suit was tried by A. Sambamurti Ayyar, a Hindu, the then Subordinate Judge of Rajahmundry, who decreed to the Plaintiff a half share in all the family properties, and finding that there had been malversation of the estate by the second Defendant for the benefit of the first Defendant, made a decree for restitution.

It is to be observed that the learned Hindu Subordinate Judge, who tried that suit in or after 1911, must have believed that in the Presidency of Madras the rule of the Dattaka Chandrika, that amongst Sudras an adopted son was entitled to share equally on a partition with the subsequently born legitimate son of the adoptive father, was the rule to be applied in the Presidency of Madras in cases in which the parties were Sudras. The appeal from that decree of the Subordinate Judge of Rajahmundry came before Wallis, C. J., and Seshagiri Ayyar, J. Seshagiri Ayyar, J., wrote the judgment, with which Wallis, C. J., concurred. The learned Judges of the High Court held that they were not bound by the opinion on the question of the right amongst Sudras of an adopted son to share equally with the subsequently born son of the adoptive father in the property of the joint family which had been expressed by Turner, C. J., and Muttuswami Ayyar, J., in Raja v. Subbaraya (5) on the ground that the opinion was obiter and on the ground that the attention of those learned Judges had not been drawn to the case of Ayyavu Muppanar v. Nelayathakshi Ammal (8), and having considered some ancient texts and the Mitakshara came to the conclusion that the rule propounded on this subject in the Dattaka Chandrika was not binding upon them and that the dictum based on the authority of the Dattaka Chandrika should not be followed.

As the reference in the judgment of Seshagiri Ayyar, J., in Karuturi Gopalam v. Karuturi Venkataraghavulu (7) to the decision in Ayyavu Muppanar v. Nelayathakshi Ammal (8) suggests that if that decision had been brought, in 1883, to the attention of Turner, C. J., and Muttuswami Ayyar, J., in Raja v. Subbaraya (5), they would not have expressed the opinion that amongst Sudras the adopted son is entitled to take an equal share with a legitimate son who is born subsequently to the adoption, it is necessary to consider that case. The case of Ayyavu Muppanar v. Nelayathakshi Ammal (8) came on appeal to the High Court at Madras in 1862.

The parties to the suit were Hindus, but it does not appear whether the parties were Sudras; all that is stated is that "the parties were of a class not strictly bound by the requirements of the Hindu law." Probably they were Sudras. The Plaintiff had brought his suit for one-fourth of the estate of Ayyavu Muppanar, deceased; the Defendant, a minor appearing through his mother as guardian, was a son of Ayyavu Muppanar, born after the adoption. The main questions considered were whether the adoption had in fact been made; whether if made it was a valid adoption; whether a son, adopted or begotten, could claim maintenance until put in possession of his share of the ancestral estate; and whether as against an adopted son suing for his share of the ancestral estate the law of limitation does not begin to run until the allotment of such share has been demanded and refused. The question as to whether the adopted son was entitled to more than one-fourth share does not appear to have been raised or considered. Strange and Frere, JJ., considered Chap. I, sec. 11, para. 24, of the Mitakshara and decided that the estate should be divided into five portions of which the begotten son should have four and the adopted son one. The Dattaka Chandrika was not so far as appears alluded to. Even if it be assumed that the parties were Sudras their Lordships are unable to regard that case as an authority on the question which was before the High Court at Madras in Karuturi Gopalam v. Karuturi Venkataraghavulu (7) and which has to be considered in this appeal.

In the present case, the subject of this appeal, the suit was brought in the District Court of Godavari on the 26th November, 1909; it was transferred to the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Rajahmundry. The Subordinate Judge who tried the suit was A. Sambamurti Ayyar, and he delivered his judgment in it on the 13th December 1913. There were six issues framed, but the material question so far as the second of these appeals is concerned relates to the share to which the adopted son and through him his sons were entitled on partition of the family property. The Plaintiffs were Arumilli Subbarayadu and his two minor naturally-born sons. The Defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 3 were sons of Venkiah who had been the only brother of the Plaintiff Arumilli Subbarayadu; Defendant No. 5 was a son to Defendant No. 1; Defendant No. 6 was a son of Defendant No. 2; Defendant No. 4, was the adopted son of the Plaintiff Arumilli Subbarayadu, but was described in the plaint as a son of Venkiah, and Defendants Nos. 7, 8 and 9 were the minor sons of Defendant No. 4. The other Defendants are immaterial so far as the second of these two consolidated appeals is concerned. In the plaint the adoption by the Plaintiff Arumilli Subbarayadu of Arumilli Ramanna, Defendant No. 4, was ignored, and it was alleged in the plaint that the "Plaintiffs are entitled to a half-share in the entire family property and the Defendants Nos. 1 to 9 are entitled to a half-share." In the written statement of the Defendants Nos. 1, 2, 3, 5 and 6 it was alleged that the Plaintiff Arumilli Subbarayadu had adopted the Defendant No. 4, A. Ramanna, as his son in 1896. In the written statement of the Defendants Nos. 4, 7, 8 and 9, who are the Appellants in the second of these consolidated appeals, it was alleged that the Plaintiff Arumilli Subbarayadu had adopted the Defendant No. 4, Arumilli Ramanna, in 1896 and that as an adopted son he was entitled to an equal share along with the Plaintiffs.

The fact and the validity of the adoption were disputed, but the Subordinate Judge, on the clearest evidence, found that the adoption was proved and was valid, and having so found that issue he in the thirtieth paragraph of his judgment recorded his finding as to the share in the family property which the Defendant No. 4 as an adopted son in the Sudra family was entitled to, thus:—

"30. As regards the share to which the fourth Defendant should be entitled according to law, there is practically no dispute. The parties belong to the Sudra caste and the law is clear that amongst the Sudras the adopted son shares equally with the subsequent born Aurasa sons [see Raja v. Subbaraya (5) and Ramasami v. Sundarlingasami (9)]. Thus, the first Plaintiff's branch consisting of Plaintiffs Nos. 1 to 3 and the fourth Defendant will have to divide amongst themselves a half share of the family property and the fourth Defendant's share therein would, therefore, be one-eighth of the whole property. This is my finding on issue I (a)."

It may be mentioned that their Lordships have been unable to ascertain what was the case which the Subordinate Judge referred to as Ramasami v. Sundarlingasami (9). That judgment of the Subordinate Judge was delivered on the 13th December 1913, and it is to be noticed that up to that date the Plaintiffs do not appear to have contended that amongst Sudras an adopted son was not entitled to share on partition of the family property equally with the legitimate sons of the adoptive father born subsequently to the adoption. They apparently raised that point for the first time in their memorandum of appeal to the High Court on the 24th March 1914. The judgment of the High Court appears to have been delivered on the 13th October 1916. Their Lordships do not know when the appeal to the High Court in Karuturi Gopalam v. Karuturi Venkataraghavulu (7) was presented, but the appeal to the High Court in that case was heard in August and September 1915. That was an appeal from a decree of the same Subordinate Judge.

The learned Judges, Ayling and Srinivasa Aiyangar, JJ., who heard the appeal to the High Court in this present suit, briefly dealt with the rights of an adopted son amongst Sudras as follows:—

"As to the share of the adopted son, it has been decided now that the fact of the adopted son being a Sudra does not give him an equal share with the natural-born sons. [Karuturi Gopalam v. Karuturi Venkataraghavulu (7)]. The dictum in Raja v. Subbaraya (5), which has been followed by the lower Court has been disapproved in that case. The fourth Defendant's share will, therefore, be altered to one-thirteenth of one half of the family property."

From the decree of these learned Judges this appeal has been brought.

The inference which their Lordships draw from the materials before them is that the rule of the Dattaka Chandrika that on a partition of the joint family property of a Sudra family an adopted son is entitled to share equally with the legitimate son born to the adoptive father subsequently to the adoption had been accepted and acted upon for at least more than a century in the Presidency of Madras, as the law applicable in such cases to Sudras until the law on that subject was disturbed in 1915 by the decision of the High Court at Madras in Karuturi Gopalam v. Karuturi Venkataraghavulu (7). It also appears to their Lordships that that rule of the Dattaka Chandrika, although not supported by any ancient text of the Smritis or by the Mitakshara, is not inconsistent so far as Sudras are concerned with the Smritis or the Mitakshara.

What has been said in the preceding paragraph is sufficient to dispose of the second of these consolidated appeals from the High Court at Madras, but as the Dattaka Chandrika is considered in Bengal as a high authority it will be satisfactory to consider what view has been expressed by the High Court at Calcutta about the rule of the Dattaka Chandrika as to the right of an adopted son in a Sudra family to share equally on a partition of the joint family property with a legitimate son of the adoptive father born subsequently to the adoption. case of which their Lordships are aware in which the subject was discussed in the High Court at Calcutta was that of Asita Mohon Ghosh Moulik v. Nirode Mohon Ghosh Moulik (10), which came on appeal before Chaudhuri and Newbould, JJ., from a decree of the 30th March 1912, of Babu Kunja Behary Gupta, Additional Subordinate Judge of Birbhum, who, having found that the parties were Sudras, held that the adopted son was entitled to share equally with the after-born natural son. The learned Judges of the High Court say: "Clear authority for the proposition (the right of a Sudra's adopted son to share equally with the after-born legitimate son) is to be found in the Dattaka Chandrika (see V, secs. 29 to 32). The Dattaka Chandrika is a work of undoubted authority in Bengal . . . In Baramanund Mahanti v. Krishna Charan Patnaik (11) a Bench of this Court accepted the law as laid down in the Dattaka Chandrika on this point . . . There are no other decided cases exactly on the point (in the High Court at Calcutta). We feel bound to attach great weight to the fact that those decisions have remained unchallenged for over thirty years." The learned Judges then considered some texts of Mann, Yajnavalkya and the Mitakshara, and some other commentaries and concluded as follows: "Having regard to the above we cannot say that the Dattaka Chandrika has in any way deviated from the Smritis." The judgment is a long one as it also dealt with several other matters which do not affect the question here.

The result is that interest actually received on the sum of Rs. 7,000 must be allowed, and to this extent the decree must be varied, but subject thereto the first appeal must be dismissed. The slight alteration does not deprive the Respondents, who appeared, of their right to the costs.

The second appeal (No. 19 of 1919) must be allowed. The decree of the High Court must be set aside with costs so far as it varied the declaration in the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge as to the shares to which the parties are entitled, which last-mentioned decree must to that extent be affirmed and restored.

The Appellants in the first appeal will pay the costs of the first three Respondents who alone appeared, and the Respondents in the second appeal will pay the Appellants' costs of that appeal.

Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly.

This was an appeal against the decree of Babu Sarat Chandra Bosu, Subordinate Judge of Zillah Bankura, dated the 23rd of June 1919, reversing the decree of Babu Thakurdas Banerjee, Munsif, Second Court at Bistupur, dated the 1st of February 1918.

The facts of the case will sufficiently appear from the judgment.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

SANDERSON, C. J.—This is an appeal by the Plaintiff against the judgment of the learned Subordinate Judge of Bankura. The suit was brought for a declaration of the Plaintiff's jote title in certain land, for recovery of possession thereof and for Rs. 15 as the price of paddy alleged to have been wrongfully taken by the Defendant No. 1. The learned Judge stated the respective cases as follows :—

“The Plaintiff's case is that in Mouza Chuamasina, he held 11 bighas of land with occupancy rights at a jama of Rs. 5. This jama was held formerly by him under the malik Hridoy Nath Sirkar : after his death under his son Ashutosh Sarkar and then under Ashu's vendee Haridas Choudhury. Out of these 11 bighas, 5 bighas form the subject of the suit. The Plaintiff alleges that he was in possession of the disputed land through his bhagchasi, Defendant No. 2 and got his share of naon paddy of 1 bigha in 1323 and that his share of the heet paddy grown on the remaining 4 bighas was stocked in the house of Defendant No. 2, but Defendant No. 1 forcibly took it away on the allegation that the lands had been made khas by Defendant No. 3, the Moharaja of Burdwan, by purchasing the same in execution of a decree for arrears of rent against the maliks and had been settled with him.”

“The substantial defence of the Defendants Nos. 1 and 3 is that the interest of Ashutosh Sarkar and Haridas Choudhury in the lands was that of occupancy raiyats which was purchased by Defendant No. 3 on 2-11-14 in a rent sale, that a notice under sec. 167 having been given to the Plaintiff, among other persons, on 7-5-15 he became entitled to khas possession and that he has accordingly taken the paddy from Defendant No. 2.”

“The lower Court” (i.e., the first Court) “decreed the suit on the finding, that the status of the Plaintiff's landlord was that of a tenure-holder and that the Plaintiff is a raiyat with rights of occupancy which being a protected interest under sec. 160, Bengal Tenancy Act, his right was not annulled by service of notice under sec. 167.”

The first question, with which the lower Appellate Court dealt, was the status of the Plaintiff's landlord : The lower Appellate Court agreed with the Court of first instance that Hridoy Sirkar was a tenure-holder, and that his right of an occupancy raiyat, as alleged by the Defendant, had not been proved.

That finding, therefore, so far as it went, was in favour of the Plaintiff. The learned Subordinate Judge then proceeded to consider the status of the Plaintiff, and on this question he disagreed with the finding of the Court of first instance.

The learned Munsif had decided that the Plaintiff held the land in suit as a raiyat for more than 12 years continuously, that under the provisions of sec. 20 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, he had become a settled raiyat of the village and that under the provisions of sec. 21 of the same Act he had acquired a right of occupancy in the land in suit. Consequently the learned Munsif held that the Plaintiff had a protected interest under sec. 160 of the Bengal Tenancy Act which could not be annulled by the service of notice under sec. 167 of that Act. The learned Munsif decreed the suit.

(1) 13 C. W. N. 1025 (1909).

(3) S. A. No. 847 of 1913. Dated 26th May 1915. Unreported.

The lower Appellate Court overruled this last mentioned finding and held that although the Plaintiff, who was a raiyat at fixed rate, had occupied the lands for more than 12 years, he did not acquire a right of occupancy, which was protected under sec. 160.

The learned Subordinate Judge further held that notice had been properly served on the Plaintiff, that the Plaintiff's interest not being a protected one, it became annulled and that the Defendant No. 3 was entitled to take khas possession of the disputed land. He therefore held that the Plaintiff had no cause of action, allowed the appeal and dismissed the Plaintiff's suit.

The question in this appeal is whether the decision of the lower Appellate Court on this point is correct.

The facts, which it is necessary to state for the purpose of my judgment, are as follows: The land in question was settled to the Plaintiff by Hridoy Sirkar in 1301 B. S. at a jama of Rs. 5 per annum and he had regularly paid rent for it since the year 1303 B. S.

The Plaintiff reclaimed the lands, which he himself cultivated in the first instance, and subsequently the land was cultivated by the Plaintiff's "bhagchasis." The quantity of land is far below 100 bighas.

Consequently, as held by both the lower Courts, the Plaintiff is a raiyat.

The lower Appellate Court has found that the Plaintiff's jama was "darmokarari" which merely meant a jama "at a fixed and permanent rate of rent." This is a finding which this Court, on second appeal, must accept, and indeed it has not been called in question by either side in this Court.

It must be taken therefore that the Plaintiff from the beginning of his tenancy was a raiyat holding at a fixed and permanent rate of rent. It is also clear that the Plaintiff held the lands in suit as a raiyat for more than 12 years continuously. On behalf of the Plaintiff Appellant it was contended that in view of the abovementioned facts the Plaintiff was by reason of the terms of sec. 20 of the Bengal Tenancy Act a settled raiyat of the village, and by reason of sec. 21 of the Bengal Tenancy Act he acquired a right of occupancy in the land in suit, that such right of occupancy was protected by sec. 160 of the Bengal Tenancy Act and could not be annulled by notice under sec. 167.

On the other hand it was contended on behalf of the Respondents (1) that the right claimed by the Plaintiff is not protected under sec. 160 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, because the Plaintiff is not a mere occupancy raiyat. (2) That a raiyat at a fixed rent has a higher status than a mere occupancy raiyat and that a raiyat, holding from the inception of the tenancy at a fixed rent, cannot subsequently acquire a right of occupancy, so as to obtain a protected interest under sec. 160.

Several cases were referred to during the course of the argument. The first in order of date was Bhut Nath Naskar v. Surendra Nath Dutt (1) which was decided in 1909. In that case Doss, J., held that it was not possible for a raiyat of a holding at a fixed rate to have in the same holding a right of occupancy at the same time, the incidents of the two holdings being so diverse in their character.

There was an appeal from the learned Judge's judgment which was heard by Jenkins, C. J. and Mookerjee, J., Jenkins, C. J., held that the appeal should be dismissed on the ground that the interest of the Defendant was a tenure and therefore not a protected interest within the meaning of sec. 160 of the Bengal Tenancy Act: the learned Chief Justice expressly refrained from discussing the above-mentioned question which was considered by Doss, J.: as it was unnecessary for the decision of the case. The other learned Judge, Mookerjee, J., did deal with that question and stated the point as follows:— "As regards the second contention of the Appellants that if they are raiyyats holding at a fixed rate of rent they have also acquired a right of occupancy, I am unable to hold that the argument is well founded," and after stating his reasons in respect thereof the learned Judge held that the view taken by Doss, J., was correct.

It was urged by the learned Vakil for the Appellant that this decision of the learned Judge was not necessary for the disposal of the case, that it was not the judgment of the Court, but of one Judge only and was not binding upon this Court. This position was not denied by the learned Vakil for the Respondent: I agree that, having regard to the fact that the learned Chief Justice decided the case on the ground that the Defendant's interest was a tenure and expressly refrained from giving any opinion on the point now under consideration, the case cannot be held to be binding on this Court though, it goes without saying, that the observations of the learned Judge who did deal with this question, are entitled to much weight and consideration.

The next case in order of the date was Abdul Goni Chowdhury v. Makbul Ali (2) decided by Holmwood and Chapman, JJ., on 28th July 1914. At p. 748, the learned Judges are reported to have said:—"It may be argued that a person who takes the tenancy originally as a raiyat at fixed rates does not thereby acquire an occupancy right. But that does not imply that a man who has already obtained occupancy rights can by obtaining a grant of fixed rent lose that occupancy right. That appears to us to be neither in accordance with equity nor common sense of the wording of the law."

Reference was then made to an unreported case decided by Woodroffe and Newbould, JJ., [Akhil Ch. Sen v. Tripura Ch. Chaudhury (3).] In that case Woodroffe, J., said as follows:—"From this it appears that what was given was a permanent ryoti interest described as Istemrari Kaimi ryoti and Istemrari daimi kaimi pottah. If this was the grant of a permanent interest, and, if, as admitted, at the date of this grant, there was no occupancy right which had matured, then it seems to me not possible that an occupancy right could be acquired after the date of the grant. But if we read this document in reference to this permanency as relating solely to the fixity of rent, then I think the argument of the learned pleader for the Respondents avails, that the Appellants would in that case be in the position of a raiyat at fixed rates. It is not every raiyat who is protected, but only an occupancy raiyat, and I think the distinction on which he has relied and which is that set out in the Bengal Tenancy Act distinguishing occupancy raiyats from raiyats at fixed rates and non-occupancy raiyats must be borne in mind and on this point he has referred to the case Panchi Dassi v. Bala Das, 13 Calcutta Weekly Notes 1025. I must hold therefore that the Appellants were not occupancy raiyats. They were therefore not protected from eviction in respect of the dags covered by Group I." I think that in the above judgment the name of the case Panchi Dassi v. Bala Das is a mistake: the reference, 13 Calcutta Weekly Notes 1025, is that of the case of Bhut Nath Naskar v. S. N. Dutt, which is evidently the case the learned Judge intended to mention: Panchi Dassi v. Bala Das is reported at p. 1031, and does not seem to be material to the question which was being considered by the learned Judge. This judgment on the face of it appeared to be a decision directly in point; but on reference to the record it appeared that the Plaintiff had purchased the Taraf at a Revenue sale, and the question was whether the Defendants had a protected interest under sec. 37 of the Revenue Sale Law, Act XI of 1859.

The next case is a decision in the opposite direction, Lakhi Ch. Saha v. Mokal Ali (4) which was decided in February 1917 by Fletcher and Richardson, JJ.

The head-note is as follows:—

"A settled raiyat holding land which was sold for arrears of revenue, in the same village as the village of which he is a settled raiyat under the terms of a permanent lease at a fixed rate of rent, has a protected interest within the meaning of the proviso to sec. 37 of the Revenue Sale Law."

The material part of the judgment is as follows:—

"The facts found are these:—First of all, it has been found that the contesting Defendant is a settled raiyat of the village within the meaning of the Bengal Tenancy Act.. Secondly, it has been found that he holds the land in suit which is in the same village as the village of which he is a settled raiyat under the terms of a permanent lease at a fixed rate of rent. Whatever may be the law as regards other classes of raiyats, it is quite clear on the terms of sec. 21 of the Bengal Tenancy Act that, contract or no contract, every raiyat who is a settled raiyat of a village and obtains a raiyatee interest in other lands in that village acquires a right of occupancy in those other lands; and, if that is so, the present Defendant seems to me clearly to have a right of occupancy in the land in dispute. If he has a right of occupancy, he comes clearly within the proviso to sec. 37 of Act XI of 1859, and has an interest which has not been annulled by the sale for arrears of revenue."

It was contended on behalf of the Respondent that this case was not binding on this Court, in respect of the present point, for although sections of the Bengal Tenancy Act were referred to, the question for decision was whether the Defendant had a protected interest within the meaning of the proviso to sec. 37 of Act XI of 1859.

If this be so, then the previous decision of Woodroffe and Newbould, JJ., is in the same position. In my judgment this contention is right. These decisions are not binding on this Court in respect of the point now under consideration although the reasoning of the learned Judge may be of assistance. The reason is that the Court in both these cases was deciding whether the Defendants had a protected interest under sec. 37 of Act XI of 1859. In this case we have to consider whether the Plaintiff had a protected interest under sec. 160 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. Personally, I should have been glad if this matter could have been referred to a Full Bench by reason of the importance of the question, but in view of the conclusion at which I have arrived, that neither of the two last mentioned cases is a decision on the point now before us, it is not permissible for us to refer the question to a Full Bench.

The last case to which I need refer is Lakhi Charan Saha v. Hamid Ali (5), which was decided in August 1917. Chatterjea and Richardson, JJ., there held that a person who has already acquired an occupancy right does not by obtaining a grant of a fixed rent lose that occupancy right, and such a person is protected from ejectment under sec. 37 of the Revenue Sale Law. In the judgment reference was made to Abdul Gani v. Makbul Ali (2) and the following passage occurs :—

“The case of Abdul Gani v. Makbul Ali (2) in so far as it holds that a person who has already acquired an occupancy right does not by obtaining a grant of fixed rent lose that occupancy right, and that such a person is protected from ejectment, under sec. 37, supports the view we take and to that extent we agree with that decision. If the opposite view were taken, raiyats who might be holding lands for generations and who might have acquired rights of occupancy, would be liable to be ejected by a purchaser at a revenue sale, simply because they may come under the description of raiyats holding at fixed rates under the Bengal Tenancy Act, by reason of their rent being fixed in perpetuity by contract, or by reason of their holding at the same rent from the time of the Permanent Settlement or by reason of a presumption arising under sec. 50 of the Bengal Tenancy Act that they have been so holding, when the clear intention of the legislature is to protect such raiyats from ejectment at the hands of a purchaser at a revenue sale.”

It therefore appears, that there is no decision of this Court in respect of the point now before us which is binding on this Court and consequently, it is necessary to consider the question with reference to the facts and the sections of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

The learned Vakil for the Respondents did not dispute the proposition laid down in Lakhi Charan v. Hamid Ali (5), so that it must now be taken that if a raiyat has acquired an occupancy right, he does not lose that occupancy right, by subsequently having the rent fixed by grant, or by one or other of the ways mentioned in that judgment, and inasmuch as there is no merger, of the two statuses, as was admitted by the learned Vakil for the Respondent, it follows that the two statuses, viz., that of the occupancy raiyat and that of the raiyat holding at a fixed rate would exist in the same person and at the same time.

It follows, therefore, from this that it is not impossible for one person to have in respect of the same land and at the same time a right of occupancy, and the right of a raiyat holding at a fixed rate. In other words the two status may exist in the same person at the same time, even though the incidents of the two kinds of holdings may be diverse in character.

It was, however, contended, as already stated, that if the status of the raiyat was that of a raiyat at a fixed rate from the inception of his tenancy, as in this case, he could not subsequently acquire a right of occupancy so as to be protected under sec. 160 of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

It seems to me, however, that if a right of occupancy can be acquired by a raiyat, who already holds as a raiyat at a fixed rate, there is no reason why he should not be protected as to his right of occupancy under sec. 160, just as much as a person who has acquired a right of occupancy in the first instance and, who subsequently obtains a grant at a fixed rate. The difference is merely in the method of acquisition. In the case of a person acquiring the right of occupancy in the first instance and obtaining the right of a raiyat at a fixed rate subsequently, it is admitted that he has a protected interest under sec. 160, so far as the right of occupancy is concerned. If then the raiyat has in the first instance the right of a raiyat at a fixed rate, and if he subsequently can acquire and does acquire a right of occupancy, I see no reason why he should not be equally protected under sec. 160.

But it was urged on behalf of the Respondents, and this was the real point of the learned Vakil's argument, that a raiyat having the higher status of a raiyat at a fixed rate, cannot subsequently acquire the lower status of a right of occupancy. In my judgment this argument should not be accepted.

Sec. 20 is part of the Chapter dealing with occupancy raiyats; but it is to be noted that the word "raiyat" is used in that section without any qualification. Under that section, if a person has held land situate in the village for a period of twelve years before or after the commencement of the Act continuously "as a raiyat" he is to be deemed to have become on the expiration of that period a "settled raiyat of the village."

What are the rights of a "settled raiyat of the village?"

That is made clear by sec. 21, which provides as follows:—

"Every person who is a settled raiyat of a village within the meaning of the last foregoing section shall have a right of occupancy in all land for the time being held by him as a raiyat in that village."

So that when a raiyat becomes a settled raiyat of a village he has a right of occupancy in all land for the time being held by him as a raiyat in that village.

It is not disputed that these sections apply to the land in question in this suit but as already stated, it was urged that inasmuch as the Plaintiff's interest was in its inception that of a raiyat at a fixed rate, he could not obtain a right of occupancy under sec. 21. I see no reason for limiting the general words of secs. 20 and 21 in this way and in my judgment by reason of the terms of these sections and the Plaintiff's undoubted holding of the lands in question for more than 12 years continuously, the Plaintiff did acquire a right of occupancy therein.

Reference was made to cl. (f) of sec. 160. It does not seem to have been considered in any of the previous cases. It provides as follows:—"Any right conferred on an occupancy raiyat to hold at a rent which was a fair and reasonable rent at the time the right was conferred."

It was admitted by both the learned Vakils that "the rent" referred to in this clause must be a "fixed" rent. This clause therefore is material as showing that the legislature did contemplate that a person might have at the same time not only a right of occupancy but also the right of a raiyat at a fixed rent, and that provided the rent was a fair and reasonable rent at the time the right was conferred not only the right of occupancy would be protected, but the right to hold at that fixed rent also would be protected.

Each of the learned Vakils relied on the clause as being in his favour.

The learned Vakil for the Respondent, while admitting that the clause went to show that the legislature had recognised the possibility of the existence of a right of occupancy and the right of a raiyat to hold at a fixed rent in one and the same person at the same time, contended that if the legislature had intended to protect any part of the interest of a raiyat at a fixed rate, who had subsequently become an occupancy raiyat, it would have stated so expressly and therefore it was only the raiyat, who could bring himself within the express words of cl. (f), who would be protected.

On the other hand, the learned Vakil for the Appellant urged that the intention of the legislature was that every right of occupancy, no matter how it was acquired should be protected, and that it was further intended to protect not only the right of occupancy but also the right of the occupancy raiyat to hold at a fixed rent, provided it could be shown that such rent was fair and reasonable at the time the right to hold at the rent was conferred. In my judgment the latter is the preferable construction to place upon the clause; it seems to be an intelligible and reasonable construction.

This however is not conclusive of the case and I do not base my judgment thereon. For the reasons hereinbefore mentioned and on the above-mentioned facts, in my judgment, the Plaintiff had acquired, in addition to his right to hold at a fixed rent, a right of occupancy, and such right of occupancy was protected under sec. 160 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The result therefore is, in my judgment, that the learned Munsif was right in holding that so far as the Plaintiff's right of occupancy was concerned, it was a protected interest and could not be annulled by the notice which was given by the Defendant No. 3. The Plaintiff consequently had not lost his right of occupancy in the land in suit, and the Defendants Nos. 1 and 3 had no right to deprive the Plaintiff of his share of the crops in question.

In my judgment this appeal should be allowed, the decree of the lower Appellate Court should be set aside and the decree of the learned Munsif should be restored: The Respondent must pay the Appellants' costs in this Court and in the lower Appellate Court.

RICHARDSON, J.—I agree. The subject over which discussion has ranged is whether and to what extent the interest of a raiyat at a fixed rate, who has occupied his holding for a continuous period of more than twelve years, is a "protected interest" within the meaning of sec. 160 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. It is not denied that such an interest, except so far as it is protected, is an "incumbrance" within the meaning of sec. 161. Under sec. 159, a purchaser of a tenure sold under the Act in execution of a decree for arrears of rent takes subject to "protected interests" but with power to annul "incumbrances." The protected interests specified in sec. 160 include:—

"(f) Any right conferred on an occupancy raiyat to hold at a rent which was a fair and reasonable rent at the time the right was conferred."

The principal question in dispute is whether a raiyat at a fixed rate may become a settled raiyat of the village under sec. 20 of the Act and thus acquire a right of occupancy within the meaning of sec. 21.

The discussion must begin with the fact that a raiyat holding at a fixed rate is a "raiyat" and is so classified in sec. 4 of the Tenancy Act. Raiyats are there divided into three classes, the first being "(a) raiyats holding at fixed rates, which expression means raiyats holding either at a rent fixed in perpetuity or at a rate of rent fixed in perpetuity." The other two classes are "(b) occupancy raiyats, that is to say, raiyats having a right of occupancy in the land held by them" and "(c) non-

Chap. IV of the Act is entitled "raiya's holding at fixed rates" and consists of one section, sec. 18, which marks out the two special incidents of the status of such a raiyat. Firstly, he is to be "subject to the same provisions with respect to the transfer of, and succession to, his holding as the holder of a permanent tenure" and secondly, he "shall not be ejected by his landlord, except on the ground that he has broken a condition consistent with this Act, and on breach of which he is, under the terms of a contract between him and his landlord, liable to be ejected."

Now, stopping there, in my opinion, it might plausibly be contended that the second incident amounts in itself to a statutory right of occupancy, because it protects the raiyat at a fixed rate from eviction except on one specified ground. What is the statutory right of occupancy unless it is the protection from eviction which the Act gives to a raiyat? The status of an occupancy raiyat in respect of his right of occupancy is similarly described in sec. 25. The occupancy raiyat is merely protected from eviction except on two specified grounds, the first of which is "that he has used the land comprised in his holding in a manner which renders it unfit for the purposes of the tenancy" and the second is the very ground on which a raiyat at a fixed rate may be evicted. The latter, therefore, would seem to enjoy under the Act a superior right of occupancy. He can be evicted only on one ground while the occupancy raiyat may be evicted on either of two grounds.

It is true that a permanent tenure-holder is also protected from eviction save on the one ground on which a raiyat at a fixed rate may be evicted (sec. 10). But a tenure-holder cannot claim a right of occupancy: the term is applicable only to raiya's, raiyats being regarded as the actual occupiers and cultivators of the soil. A non-occupancy raiyat also receives some measure of protection (sec. 44) but has no permanent right. The right of occupancy is a permanent right which the law guarantees to certain raiyats. Prima facie it seems anomalous that raiyats of a superior status should not, while raiya's of an inferior status should, possess that right.

If it be that a raiyat at a fixed rate has a right of occupancy under sec. 18, the discussion ends there. But it would be unsafe to act on a view which, so far as I am aware, has not previously been suggested and is, contrary to the assumption generally made. The point as I have said was not argued nor is it necessary for the purpose of the present case to say that a raiyat at a fixed rate has ipso facto a right of occupancy, inasmuch as the Plaintiff has continuously held his land for a period of more than twelve years.

I will assume therefore that while the Bengal Tenancy Act by sec. 19 saves rights of occupancy acquired before November 1885, when the Act came into force, since that date a right of occupancy in the strict or statutory sense can only be acquired (apart from custom) in the manner provided by secs. 20 and 21. Those sections with sec. 19 will be found at the beginning of Chap. V under the heading "occupancy raiyats" and the sub-heading "general."

Now, reverting to the classification of raiyats in sec. 4, no doubt when a non-occupancy raiyat acquires a right of occupancy as he undoubtedly may, he ceases to be a non-occupancy raiyat. That must be so by force of the terminology. But inasmuch as it is conceded that an occupancy raiyat may (without losing his right of occupancy) become a raiyat at a fixed rate, there appears to be no reason why a raiyat at a fixed rate, if he has not already a right of occupancy, should not be able to acquire such a right in addition to his other rights. I am not convinced that the status of a raiyat at a fixed rate cannot be satisfactorily or logically combined with that of an occupancy raiyat. The higher status would supersede so much of the lower as might be inconsistent with it and either status might be used as a shield so far as it extended. For instance, as regards eviction, an attempt to evict a raiyat possessing the combined rights on the ground that he had used the land so as to make it unfit for the purposes of the tenancy would be met by the plea of "raiyat at a fixed rate." The same answer would be given to a claim by the landlord to enhance the rent. No objection can be taken to the transfer of the holding of a raiyat at a fixed rate, on the ground that the consent of the landlord has not been obtained, though the question might arise whether the transferee has obtained in virtue of the transfer a right of occupancy. It may well be that under the Tenancy Act a raiyat at a fixed rate is for all purposes other than a sale of the tenure under which he holds for arrears of rent, sufficiently protected whether he has a right of occupancy or not. But I fail to see why merely on account of the other rights which he possesses he should be denied the protection which a right of occupancy would give him in the event of such a sale.

If there is nothing inherently contradictory or impossible in the combination of the two statuses, then, if we turn to secs. 20 and 21, we find it provided, in sec. 20, that "every person who for a period of twelve years . . . has continuously held as a raiyat land situate in any village . . . shall be deemed to have become on the expiration of that period, a settled raiyat of that village," and, in sec.

21, that "every person who is a settled raiyat of a village . . . shall have a right of occupancy in all land for the time being held by him as a raiyat in that village."

The language is certainly wide enough to cover the case of a raiyat at a fixed rate. No doubt, these sections occur in a Chapter headed "occupancy raiyats," but they deal with the acquisition of rights of occupancy. The expression "land held as a raiyat" in sec. 20 must include land held as a non-occupancy raiyat. Why should it not include land held as a raiyat at a fixed rate? It is nothing to the purpose to say that the word "raiyat" in sec. 85 does not include a raiyat at a fixed rate. The Act has to be construed as a whole and in the case of a raiyat at a fixed rate, sec. 85 has to be read with sec. 18 and construed accordingly. Apart from the rights of transfer conferred or recognised by sec. 18, the word "raiyat" in sec. 85 would include a raiyat at a fixed rate.

Then, if a raiyat at a fixed rate may and does acquire a right of occupancy under secs. 20 and 21, he will become for certain purposes at any rate an occupancy raiyat and will be entitled to protection as such under sec. 160 of the Act.

Otherwise a raiyat at a fixed rate would be entitled to no protection at all under sec. 160 unless he was entitled to a right of occupancy acquired before the Bengal Tenancy Act came into force. He does not hold an under-tenure and cannot claim the protection given to under-tenures. As Banerjee, J., said in Nilmani v. Mathura (6), sec. 18 "does not make all the incidents of a permanent tenure applicable to a raiyat's holding at fixed rates, but makes only the provisions with respect to transfer and succession applicable."

SARBESWAR PATRA v. MAHARAJAH SIR BHOJ CHAND MOHATAP.

In any case, the protection which sec. 160 gives a raiyat at a fixed rate is a qualified protection. Assuming that his status does not as such entitle him to a right of occupancy, then, unless, he otherwise has, or until he has acquired a right of occupancy, he is not protected at all. If he has a right of occupancy, that right is protected by cl. (d) while his right to hold at a fixed rate, if protected at all, is only protected to the extent indicated in cl. (f).

Cl. (f) does not appear to have been considered in any previous case. The question was put in the course of the argument whether the clause has any meaning unless it refers to the rent of a raiyat at a fixed rate who is also an occupancy raiyat. No satisfactory reply was received. It was suggested for the Respondent landlord that the words referred to an ordinary occupancy raiyat who has acquired the right to hold at a fixed rate. But, as already stated, if an occupancy raiyat can acquire the status of a raiyat at a fixed rate and keep his right of occupancy, there can be no reason why a raiyat at a fixed rate should not acquire a right of occupancy, and, if so, it would seem to be an unduly narrow construction to say that the clause only applies where the right to hold at the rent was conferred on a person who was at the time an occupancy raiyat and has no application where the raiyat at a fixed rate subsequently acquires a right of occupancy.

It was suggested also that an occupancy raiyat who acquires the right to hold at a fixed rate occupies a position midway between that of an occupancy raiyat and that of a raiyat at a fixed rate. But if that is not the previous suggestion in another form, I can find no justification for it or for saying that the classification in sec. 4 is not a complete classification. An occupancy raiyat who acquires the right to hold at a rent or rate of rent fixed in perpetuity is a raiyat at a fixed rate.

In the absence of all previous discussion on the topic, I am not prepared to say that cl. (f) can only refer to a rent which has been permanently fixed. It has occurred to me that inasmuch as the interest of an occupancy raiyat so far as it is not protected, is an incumbrance and apart from cl. (f) only the right of occupancy is protected, the words would cover the case of an ordinary occupancy raiyat, holding at a rent which apart from the sale for arrears could not have been altered for fifteen years from the date on which it was fixed (See secs. 29 (c), 37 and 40-A). It is also conceivable that an occupancy raiyat might by agreement have the right to hold for a limited period at a stated rent.

However that may be, if a raiyat at a fixed rate may and does acquire a right of occupancy and become for some purposes an occupancy raiyat, the words, whatever other application they may have, seem capable of being understood as protecting his rent provided it was a fair and reasonable rent at the time the right to hold at that rent was conferred.

This question of rent, however, does not arise in the present case in which the raiyat is the Plaintiff in an action sounding in tort and I refrain, therefore from expressing a final opinion on the meaning of cl. (f). I will only add that in the view of its meaning which I have indicated as a possible view, cl. (f) would be the counterpart of such a saving clause as that contained in sec. 11 of the patni taluks Regulation (Regulation VIII of 1819) and in sec. 16 of the Bengal Rent Recovery (Under-tenures) Act of 1865 (Bengal Act VIII of 1865). Sec. 16 lays down that "the purchaser of an under-tenure sold under this Act shall acquire it free from all incumbrances" subject, inter alia, to the proviso (which follows the third clause of sec. 11 of the Regulation) "that nothing herein contained shall be held to entitle the purchaser to eject khudkast raiyats or resident and hereditary cultivators nor to cancel bond fide engagements made with such class of raiyats or cultivators aforesaid by the late incumbent of the under-tenure or his representatives except it be proved, in a regular suit, to be brought by such purchaser for the adjustment of his rent that a higher rent would have been demandable at the time such engagements were contracted by his predecessor."

In the old days the khudkast raiyat, or resident cultivator, holding at the customary pergana rate, was distinguished from the paikasht raiyat, or non-resident cultivator, who was a tenant-at-will or tenant from year to year. The distinction was largely obliterated by the Bengal Rent Act (Act X of 1859) which introduced the new division of occupancy and non-occupancy raiyats and enabled the paikasht raiyat to acquire the privileges of the khudkast raiyat. The khudkast raiyat, however, still survives in the enactments to which I have just referred and no doubt at the present day every occupancy raiyat would be regarded as a khudkast raiyat [cf. Sheikh Mahomed Assanoollah v. Shamshir Ali (7)].

The Bengal Tenancy Act merely evolves the policy of Act X of 1859 and the question occurs whether there is anything in the history of the subject to suggest that a raiyat at a fixed rate should be disabled from acquiring the right of occupancy.

It is clear from secs. 3 to 6 of Act X that the Act regarded raiyats who had held their land at a rent unchanged from the time of the permanent settlement as occupancy raiyats. Under sec. 3, "Raiyats who hold lands at fixed rates of rent which have not been changed from the time of the permanent settlement" were to receive pattas at those rates. Sec. 4 was a provision corresponding to cl. (2) of sec. 50 of the Tenancy Act. Under sec. 5, "Raiyats having rights of occupancy but not holding at fixed rates, as described in the two preceding sections" were to receive pattas at fair and equitable rates. Sec. 6 provided:—"Every raiyat who has cultivated or held land for a period of twelve years has a right of occupancy in the land so cultivated or held by him so long as he pays the rent payable on account of the same." That includes raiyats of the class mentioned in sec. 3.

It was then found that in improving the condition of the paikasht raiyat some injustice had been done to the khudkast raiyat. Before Act X the latter would have had what I will call a permanent right of occupation in respect of all land held by him in his village irrespective of the period during which he had held any particular parcel. As sec. 6 was worded the right of occupancy could only be acquired in land which had been actually occupied for the period of twelve years [Sarat Chandra Roy Choudhuri v. Asiman Bibi (8)].

This grievance was remedied by secs. 20 and 21 of the Tenancy Act under which the raiyat has a right of occupancy in all lands in the village of which he is a settled raiyat and he is a settled raiyat of the village if for a period of twelve years he has continuously held as a raiyat land situate therein.

Now the Tenancy Act does in sec. 50 cl. (1) recognize that where a "raiyyat and his predecessors-in-interest have held at a rent or a rate of rent which has not been changed from the time of the permanent settlement" the rent cannot be increased except on the ground of an alteration in the area of the tenure or holding. That corresponds to sec. 3 of Act X, while cl. (2) of sec. 50 corresponds, as I have said, to sec. 4 of Act X. A raiyat who proves that he holds at a rent unchanged since 1793 is under the Tenancy Act, as under Act, X, a raiyat holding at a fixed rate [See Dulhin Golab Koeri v. Bulla Kurmi (9)]. But he is not specially protected under sec. 160 of the former Act. If the correct view be that a raiyat at a fixed rate cannot acquire a right of occupancy under the Tenancy Act, the raiyat holding at a rent unchanged since 1793 is only protected because his right of occupancy was acquired under Act, X of 1859 and is preserved by sec. 19 of the Tenancy Act. Sec. 19 is a section of the kind which legislature inserts out of caution to preserve existing rights. I can see no reason for saying that though a raiyat holding at a rent unchanged since 1793 had a right of occupancy under Act X, nevertheless under the Tenancy Act, apart from sec. 19, he has no right of occupancy.

It is true that Act X put on the same footing all raiyats who did not hold their land at a rent unchanged from the time of the Permanent Settlement, treating them all (whether holding at a fixed rent or not), as occupancy raiyats after twelve years of possession, liable to pay a fair and equitable rent [See Dinoobundho v. Ramdhone (10)]. But it must be remembered that ever since Regulation V of 1812 Zamindars in permanently settled districts have been considered competent to grant leases to raiyats at a fixed rent for any term or in perpetuity, and that since then such leases have been binding upon the grantors, their heirs and assigns though not upon a purchaser under a sale for arrears of revenue [Isshur Ghose v. Hills (11)]. Presumably while such a lease was in force the fair and equitable rent would have been the rent payable under the lease. The fact, therefore, that under the Tenancy Act raiyats who hold at fixed rates but not under tenancies dating from 1793 are included in the definition of raiyats holding at fixed rates seems to furnish no reason why such raiyats should be excluded from the benefit of secs. 20 and 21. Here again there are raiyati tenancies created after 1793 the holders of which are entitled to rights of occupancy acquired under Act, X and preserved by sec. 19 of the Tenancy Act [Lakhi Charan Saha v. Hamid Ali (5)].

Suppose this case: A raiyat holds land in a village as a settled raiyat with the right of occupancy. He surrenders the land and takes other land in exchange as a raiyat at a fixed rate. Is he to lose the right of occupancy which he would otherwise have in the land taken in exchange?

Having referred to the repealed Act, X of 1859, I should perhaps explain that I quite appreciate that the right of occupancy is a creature of statute and that at the present time the solution of any question as regards the scope or incidents of that right must be sought within the four corners of the Bengal Tenancy Act. But where that Act speaks with an uncertain or ambiguous voice, I apprehend that resort may be had to the previous history of the subject for light and guidance in construing its provisions.

If Act X of 1859 has been repealed, Act XI of that year (the Bengal Land Revenue Sales Act) is still in force and questions have arisen in regard to the meaning of the proviso to sec. 37. One at least of these questions is germane to the present discussion and some reference to the section must therefore be made. Under sec. 37 a purchaser of an estate sold for arrears of land-revenue acquires it free from all incumbrances with certain exceptions and subject to the proviso which protects from ejectment "any raiyat having a right of occupancy at a fixed rent or at a rent assessable according to fixed rules under the laws in force." The proviso goes on to say that the purchaser is not "to enhance the rent of any such raiyat otherwise than in the manner prescribed by such laws, or otherwise than the former proprietor, irrespectively of all engagements made since the time of settlement, may have been entitled to do."

The language of the proviso seems to reflect the provisions contained in secs. 3 to 6 of Act X of 1859. All raiyats having a right of occupancy under that Act were protected from ejectment. Where the rent of a holding had not been changed since 1793, it was protected from enhancement but the rent of occupancy raiyats including occupancy raiyats at a fixed rate holding under "engagements made since the time of settlement" became liable to enhancement under the laws in force irrespectively of those engagements. That result was also consistent with the state of things brought about by Reg. V of 1812 referred to above.

No difficulty occurred till Act X was repealed and the Bengal Tenancy Act was passed. The proviso had then to be construed with reference to the provisions of the latter Act.

It was held in Saifuddin's case (8) to which I have already referred, that the right of occupancy mentioned in the proviso must now be equated with the right of occupancy defined in the Tenancy Act. (See per Mitra, J., at page 731 and per Geidt, J., at page 736). There are not two rights of occupancy, one created by Act X and a separate and different right created by the Bengal Tenancy Act. The Bengal Tenancy Act enlarges the mode of acquisition but it is in part a consolidating Act and the right when acquired is identical with the right of occupancy created by Act X. Mitra and Geidt, JJ., therefore held that the ordinary occupancy raiyat was entitled under the proviso to protection for all the lands held by him as a settled raiyat. The decision is an interpretation with reference to the Bengal Tenancy Act of the words "any raiyat having a right of occupancy at a rent assessable according to fixed rules under the laws in force" and is now accepted law.

The more difficult question remained as to the meaning with reference to the Bengal Tenancy Act of the words "any raiyat having a right of occupancy at a fixed rate."

As I said at the outset, personally I am tempted to hold that every raiyat at a fixed rate has a right of occupancy as an incident of his status, however, the status be acquired. But if that is inadmissible, the reasonable conclusion seems to me to be this, that the words now include every raiyat at a fixed rate who apart from his status as such possesses or has acquired a right of occupancy. That would include every settled raiyat of a village who in respect of the holding in connection with which the question arises is a raiyat at a fixed rate. Such a raiyat would be protected from ejectment but might be liable under the laws in force to enhancement of rent on the ground that he holds "under an engagement made since the time of settlement."

The concession to which I referred earlier in this judgment—that an occupancy raiyat who becomes a raiyat at a fixed rate has a right of occupancy protected by cl. (d) of sec. 160 of the Bengal Tenancy Act—was probably made in view of the terms of the proviso to sec. 37. The argument is that an ordinary occupancy raiyat who acquires the status of a raiyat at a fixed rate does not lose his right of occupancy because there is no merger, and that his right of occupancy is therefore protected both by cl. (d) of sec. 160 and by the proviso to sec. 37. In my opinion, however, for the reason already stated, it is impossible to stop at any such half-way house.

The question whether a raiyat at a fixed rate whose tenancy began after the Bengal Tenancy Act came into force and has lasted for twelve years or more has or has not a right of occupancy which is protected by the proviso to sec. 37 is in substance much the same as the question which arises in the present case, whether such a raiyat has a right of occupancy protected by cl. (d) of sec. 160. Both questions depend on the further question whether such a raiyat can or cannot become a settled raiyat of the village within the meaning of secs. 20 and 21 of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

It will be apparent from what I have said that I am disposed to answer this last question in the affirmative. The cases have already been referred to by the learned Chief Justice and in my opinion there is no authority which precludes me from giving effect to the view which I have formed.

The principal difficulty is caused by the observations of Mookerjee, J., in Bhut Nath Naskar v. Surendra Nath Dutt (1). Those observations are entitled to great respect and naturally make me much more doubtful as to the correctness of my own view than I should otherwise have been. The case, however, was actually decided on another ground and for the present purpose therefore is not conclusive.

(1) 12 C. W. N. 1025 (1909).

Akhil Ch. Sen v. Tripura Ch. Chaudhury (3), turned on the proviso to sec. 37 of Act XI of 1859 and the case does not appear to have been presented in argument to the learned Judges on the lines on which the present case has been presented to us.

In the result I agree that the appeal should be allowed.

Hindu law—Right of succession of young widowed daughter in a caste where widow remarriage is permitted—Necessity of proof of custom entitling the widowed daughter to succeed equally with a married daughter.

A Hindu was succeeded by his widow, and on her death the contest for succession was between a childless widowed daughter aged 16 or 17 and a married daughter having a son. In the caste to which the parties belonged widow remarriage is permitted:

Held—That though widow remarriage is a custom in the caste, that does not by itself predicate the further custom that the widowed daughter, because it is open to her to remarry, is entitled to succeed equally with the married daughter. There must be clear proof of custom entitling the widowed daughter to succeed equally with the married daughter.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

The question involved in this case is, one of inheritance to a person of the name of Dwarika Nath Hazra who was the father of the Plaintiff and also of Defendant No. 1. On the death of Dwarika he was succeeded by his widow and on the death of the widow the contest is between the two daughters. One daughter, the Plaintiff, at the time when the succession opened out was married and had a son. The other daughter, Defendant No. 1, was childless widow. But it has been found and in fact it is not disputed that in the caste to which the parties belong widow remarriage is permitted. At the time when the succession opened out Defendant No. 1, the widowed daughter, was only 16 or 17 years of age. She being thus of child-bearing age and it being open to her at any time to marry, it has been held by the District Judge that she was a daughter likely to have male issue and therefore entitled to succeed along with the Plaintiff who is a married daughter having a son.

We think that in the absence of any proof of custom entitling this widowed daughter to succeed equally with the married daughter the learned District Judge has fallen into an error. Widow remarriage is a custom in the caste, but that does not by itself predicate the further custom that the widowed daughter, because it is open to her to remarry, is entitled to succeed equally with the married daughter. So far from there being any proof of the existence of any such further custom the decision of the District Judge is in fact contrary to the pleadings in the case. The Plaintiff in her pleadings alleged that the Defendant No. 1 as a childless widow was not entitled to succeed. The Defendant No. 1 herself accepted this position and pleaded that the true heir was neither her sister nor she, but the only son of a third sister who had apparently predeceased her father.

In this view of the matter we set aside the decree of the District Judge, and restore the decree of the Munsif with costs in all Courts.

BATA KRISHNA
PRAMANIK, Petitioner,
v.

A. K. Roy,
Opposite Party.

Calcutta Improvement Tribunal—Power of President to execute order for costs.

The President of the Calcutta Improvement Tribunal is a Civil Court with power to make an order for costs and as such has an inherent power to execute an order for costs made by him.

This was a Rule granted on the 19th May 1921 against an order of the President of the Calcutta Improvement Tribunal (Mr. S. C. Banerjee), dated 15th April 1921.

The facts of the case will sufficiently appear from the judgment.

Babu S. Chandra Madhab Mallick for the Petitioner.

Babu T. N. Choudhuri for the Opposite Party.

BATA KRISHNA PRAMANIK v. A. K. ROY.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

This Rule is directed against an order of the President of the Calcutta Improvement Tribunal refusing to execute an order for costs passed by him on the ground that he had no power to execute such an order.

The Petitioner applied to the President of the Tribunal under sec. 18 of the Rent Act for revision of an order of the Rent Controller fixing the standard rent of certain premises which the Opposite Party occupied as tenant. The President fixed the standard rent and awarded costs amounting to Rs. 89-8 annas to the Petitioner against the Opposite Party. The Petitioner thereupon applied to the President of the Tribunal for execution of the order awarding costs. The learned President held that he had no power to execute the order for costs awarded by him.

It appears that two contentions were raised by the Opposite Party namely, first, that the President had no jurisdiction to pass the order about the payment of costs and, secondly, that he had no jurisdiction to execute such an order.

So far as the first question is concerned, the learned President held, and we think rightly, that he is a Court and that the jurisdiction exercised by him under sec. 18 of the Rent Act is civil jurisdiction, so that in proceedings under that section the President is a Court of civil jurisdiction within the meaning of the Code of Civil Procedure and under sec. 141 of that Code, as well as under the specific provision of sec. 24 of the Rent Act the procedure laid down in the Code in regard to suits apply, as far as may be, to such proceedings.

Sec. 24 of the Calcutta Rent Act lays down that in revising the decisions of the Controller, the President of the Tribunal, or the principal Civil Court, all follow as nearly as may be, the procedure laid down in the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, for the regular trial of suits. R. 4 of the Rules framed by the Local Government also provides that in making enquiries under the Act, the Controller or the President of the Tribunal shall follow, as nearly as may be, the procedure laid down in the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, for the regular trial of suits, the substance only of the evidence being recorded as in unappealable cases: and r. 24 lays down that in all proceedings before them under the Act, the Controller and the President of the Tribunal shall have all the powers possessed by a Civil Court for the trials of suits.

Now the Tribunal being vested with all the powers of a Civil Court for the trial of suits has certainly power to award costs, as the power possessed by a Civil Court for the trial of suits also includes the power of awarding costs. So far as the power to award costs is concerned, it is not disputed before us that the President has such power. But the learned President was of opinion that he had no power to execute the order for costs and that is also the contention of the Opposite Party before us.

The learned President relied upon the provisions of sec. 4 of the Code of Civil Procedure. That section lays down that in the absence of any specific provision to the contrary, nothing in this Code shall be deemed to limit, or otherwise affect, any special or local law now in force, or any special jurisdiction or power conferred, or any special form of procedure prescribed by or under any other law for the time being in force.

But that section only means that the provisions of the Code would not apply if they are inconsistent with the provisions of such special or local law nor affect any special jurisdiction or special procedure prescribed by any other law.

DATA KRISHNA PRAMANIK v. A. K. ROY.

The learned President points out, that under sec. 77, sub-sec. (2) of the Calcutta Improvement Act, every award of the Tribunal, and every order made by the Tribunal for the payment of money shall be enforced by the Calcutta Small Cause Court as if it were a decree of that Court. That merely shows that the special Act, viz., the Calcutta Improvement Act, has made a special provision for execution of decrees of the Tribunal by some other Court, namely, the Calcutta Small Cause Court. It may be said that if the Tribunal is not to execute its order under the Improvement Act, it is not likely that the Legislature intended that it should execute its orders under the Rent Act. Possibly it was a case of omission but, in the absence of any provision that the orders of the President of the Tribunal under the Rent Act are to be enforced by the Calcutta Small Cause Court, we must hold that the President of the Tribunal has the power of enforcing his own order passed under that Act.

On behalf of the Opposite Party we are referred to the case of Gobordhan Das Deora v. Doolae Chand Sethia (1). We do not think, however, that that case has any bearing on the present case. In that case the question raised was whether r. 4 framed by the Local Government which makes the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code applicable to enquiries made under the Act by the President was ultra vires in so far as an enquiry into an offence under sec. 20 of the Rent Act is concerned. Here no such question arises as the Local Government has power to frame rules for regulating the procedure for the President of the Tribunal in matters like the present.

It is contended that sec. 24 of the Act, and r. 24 make some portions only of the Civil Procedure Code, viz., that relating to regular trial of suits applicable to proceedings under the Act, and not those relating to execution. But r. 24 lays down that the President shall have all the powers of a Civil Court for the regular trial of suits. It is to be observed that under sec. 18 of the Calcutta Rent Act, the application for revising the order of the Rent Controller in respect of premises outside Calcutta is to be made to the principal Court of original jurisdiction in the district. R. 24 does not lay down the procedure to be adopted in such Civil Court because no provision is necessary to be made with respect to proceedings in a Civil Court. Such Court can surely execute its own orders and it would be anomalous that an order for costs under sec. 18 when passed in a case relating to premises outside Calcutta can be executed, whereas such an order with respect to a case relating to premises inside Calcutta cannot be executed.

In Nilmongy Singh Deo v. Tara Nath Mukherjee (2), the question arose whether a Collector under Act X of 1859 could transfer a decree for rent for execution to a Civil Court in another district, there being no provision in that Act for such a transfer. The Judicial Committee in deciding the question in the affirmative observed that the Rent Court was a "Civil Court in the sense that it is deciding on purely civil questions between persons seeking their civil rights" and being a Civil Court in that sense it falls within the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code, and further that "there is nothing in the Act X of 1859 which provides for any execution beyond his (Collector's) jurisdiction, and there is nothing to forbid the conclusion that such executions are left to the operation of Act XXXIII of 1852, or the corresponding portion of Act VIII of 1859." In Chattopadhyay v. Manjima Behary (3), the learned Judges referring to the above observations of the Judicial Committee in Nilmony Singh's case (2) observed: "this and the other reasons given for the decision seem to leave no room for doubt that their Lordships thought that except upon points expressly provided for by Act X 1859, the procedure of the Revenue Courts when trying questions arising under that Act must be governed by the Civil Procedure "

It may be said that Act X of 1859 laid down a procedure relating to execution although it did not provide for transfer of decrees to another district, whereas r. 24 under the Calcutta Rent Act merely provides for the procedure for trial of suits. It is unnecessary, however, to discuss the matter further, because even if no provision is made in the Act or in the rules for execution of orders, under the Rent Act, once it is held that the President is a Court of civil jurisdiction and has power to award costs, we think it must be held that the Court has inherent power to enforce the order for (costs) passed by it. In the case of Jogendra Chandru Sen v. Wazidunnessa Khatun (4), Sir Francis Maclean, C. J., observed as follows:— "But it is now urged that the Court has no jurisdiction to do this, which means in effect that the Court has no power to enforce its own orders. I hope that is not so, and I do not think that it is so. There is apparently no section in the Code of Civil Procedure which applies directly to the case. But the Code is not exhaustive and it seems to me that when the Court had jurisdiction, as it undoubtedly had, to make the order as to costs, there is an inherent power in the Court to have that order carried into effect; otherwise the order would be a farce."

We think the principle is above,

viz., that a Court has inherent powers to execute its own orders is applicable to the present case.

We accordingly hold that the President of the Tribunal has power to execute the order for costs passed by him.

The Rule is accordingly made absolute.

We make no order as to costs.

Del carrying interest— Payment without specific appropriation— Creditor's right to apply payment in discharge of interest first.

Where a debt is due which carries interest, and monies are received without a definite appropriation on the one side or on the other, the rule which is well established in all cases is that the money is first applied in payment of interest and then when that is satisfied in payment of the capital.

PARR'S BANKING COMPANY v. YATES (1) referred to.

This was an appeal from a decision of the High Court at Madras.

The facts of the case will sufficiently appear from their Lordships' judgment.

Mr. L. DeGruyther, K. C. (with Messrs. Bhugwandin Dubé, K. V. L. Narasimham and R. Palat) for the Appellants referred to Civil Procedure Code, sec. 144. Respondent had applied the money to various payments carrying high rates of Sir Earle Richards, K. C. (with Mr. J. M. Parikh) for the Respondents.—There is no rule one way or other as to appropriation of moneys paid by a debtor. Cases cited are all of contract. The debtor is not bound to appropriate towards interest. Each case to be decided on considerations of equity and justice: Thompson v. Hudson (4).

The matter is for the discretion of the Court. The cross-appeal is on two points:—

(1) Sub-Judge said interest was chargeable on the principal amount decreed and High Court, on the whole amount including interest.

(2) Interest must be at 4 per cent, the bank rate and not at 6 per cent, as the Defendant would only have got 4 per cent.

Appellants not called on to reply.

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by

LORD BUCKMASTER.—Their Lordships do not desire to hear Counsel for the Appellants in reply, nor do they need further time to consider the advice that they will tender to His Majesty, for in their opinion this case is quite plain. It appears that in 1899 the Respondent instituted a suit the Defendants to which are represented by the present Appellants; he claimed partition of two estates, known as the Nidadavole Estate and the Medur Estate, asserting that he was entitled to a one-third share in each. The District Judge, by whom the action was first heard, decreed in the Plaintiff's favour with regard to the first estate, but against him with regard to the other. An appeal was taken from that decree to the High Court who varied it by declaring that the Plaintiff was entitled to one-third of the second estate as well as of the first. A receiver having been appointed of the rents of both estates on the 14th February 1907, the Plaintiff obtained an order enabling the receiver to pay over to him his interest on the Medur Estate under the judgment of the High Court as it then stood. Unfortunately for him the uncertainties of litigation resulted in a decree of His Majesty in Council on the 19th December 1913, restoring the judgment of the District Judge and it consequently followed that the share of the property in the Medur Estate which he had received from the receiver was money which he was bound to restore. The representatives of the original Defendants accordingly appealed to the District Court for restitution, asking for repayment out of the moneys in the receiver's hands, representing the Plaintiff's share in the Nidadavole Estate and against him personally for the balance. The matter came before the District Judge, who decided that the Defendants were entitled to the relief they claimed and made an order on the 31st August 1915, directing that the interest at the rate of 9 per cent, with yearly rests was to be charged against the Plaintiff, and that so much of the amount due as represented principal should carry simple interest from the date of the order at the rate of 9 per cent.

On the 19th October 1916, the High Court varied their order by declaring that the amount so received should only bear simple interest at 6 per cent., and on the 15th December 1916, the matter being again before them they directed that the whole amount should carry interest from the date of the order, but that the moneys received should be treated as though they had been received in respect of the principal moneys and not of the interest. An order was accordingly drawn up embodying the decision of the 19th October 1916: that order has been accepted by the Appellant, but from the direction given on the 15th December as to appropriation this appeal has been brought. The reason given by the learned Judges for their judgment was that they regarded the payments already made as shown in an account filed by the Defendants in the District Court on the 25th August 1915, as payments that had in fact been appropriated by the Defendants as against principal and that from such appropriation there was no opportunity for them to recede. The account referred to is set out in the record in these proceedings and it shows that as each sum of money was received it was charged with interest at the rate of 9 per cent. and carried forward until the end of the year, when the total amount so found was credited as against the total amount which was due. At no time did the sums so credited do more than cover the claim for interest, and it therefore seems impossible to understand why it was that the money received was regarded as definitely appropriated in respect of the principal. Nothing has been pointed out to their Lordships to lead them to the conclusion that the High Court was right in the assumption that they then made in that respect.

The question then remains as to how, apart from any specific appropriation, these sums ought to be dealt with. There is a debt due that carries interest. There are moneys that are received without a definite appropriation on the one side or on the other, and the rule which is well established in ordinary cases is that in those circumstances the money is first applied in payment of interest and then when that is satisfied in payment of the capital. That rule is referred to by Lord Justice Rigby in the case of Parr's Banking Company v. Yates (1) which is reported in these words :—

“The Defendant's Counsel relied on the old rule that does, no doubt, apply to many cases, namely, that, where both principal and interest are due, the sums paid on account must be applied first to interest. That rule, where it is applicable, is only common justice. To apply the sums paid to principal where interest has accrued upon the debt, and is not paid, would be depriving the creditor of the benefit to which he is entitled under his contract.”

Their Lordships can find nothing in this case to take the question outside the general principle referred to by the learned Lord Justice. They therefore think that the money received must be applied in the ordinary way, first in the reduction of the the money received must be applied in the reduction of the principal. So far therefore as the Appellants' appeal is concerned this means that the High Court have been mistaken in the view that they took and that the appeal should be allowed, but there is before their Lordships a cross-appeal which first of all raises the contention that the interest ought not to be higher than the bank rate. Their Lordships are not prepared to accede to that contention. They think that the High Court were fully qualified to exercise the discretion which they did in the matter, and they will not lightly interfere with the exercise of such a power. Finally the Respondent contends that the District Judge was right in dividing the amount to be repaid under the order of the 31st August 1915, into the component parts of which it was originally made up, so much as to principal and so much as to interest, and to declare that the interest only runs on such part of the judgment debt as flowed from the principal sum. Their Lordships agree with the High Court in thinking that no such distinction can be made.

They will therefore humbly advise His Majesty that the appeal should be allowed with costs, that the cross-appeal should be dismissed with costs, and that in taking the account the moneys received should be applied first towards the payment of the interest and when that is satisfied towards the payment of the capital sum.

[CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION.]

APPEAL FROM ORIGINAL DECREE

No. 153 of 1919.

MOOKERJEE, J.
BUCKLAND, J.

14, June.

BEPIN KRISHNA ROY,
Defendant No. 8,
Appellant,

v.

PRIYA BRATA BOSE and ors., Plaintiffs,
Respondents.

Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), sec. 31—Suit for rectification of mortgage deed after issue of sale proclamation in execution of mortgage decree—Grounds on which rectification justifiable—Passing of decree if bar to rectification—Notice, necessity of, when knowledge proved—Notice to purchaser by title papers, nature and effect of—Purchase of mortgaged property during pendency of execution proceedings—Lis pendens—Misdescription of property, if prevents its application.

After the sale proclamation was issued in execution of a mortgage decree a suit was brought for the rectification of the mortgage bond so far as the description of the property mortgaged was concerned. The mortgaged property, it appeared, had been purchased by a third party during the pendency of the execution proceedings:

Held—That in order to justify rectification of a contract or other instrument in writing there must be proof of a common intention different from the expressed intention and a common mistaken supposition that the intention was rightly expressed in the instrument; it matters not by whom the actual oversight or error was made which caused the expression to be wrong.

The conception of notice was introduced into law and the rules concerning it were established from considerations of policy and expediency based upon the common experience of mankind. Notice even when actual is not necessarily equivalent to knowledge, but the same effect must be attributed to it which would naturally flow from knowledge. Notice being thus a representative of, or substitute for, actual knowledge, whenever a party has obtained a full knowledge, although not in accordance with the rules which define the nature of notice and regulate the mode of its being given and received, there is no longer any need of invoking the legal conception of notice.

Notice to a purchaser by his title papers in a transaction will not be notice to him in an independent subsequent transaction in which the instruments containing the recitals are not necessary to his title; but he is charged constructively with notice merely of that which affects the purchase of the property in the chain of title of which the paper forms a necessary link.

Held, further—That the fact that a decree had already been made on the mortgage bond was no bar to the rectification of the bond itself.

It may be held as a general rule that if there is a mutual mistake in a mortgage in the description of property and the same mistake is reproduced in the decree, equity may go back to the original transaction and reform both the mortgage and the decree so as to make them conform to the intention of the parties concerned, but in a case where the decree has been executed and title has passed to a purchaser, fresh considerations may arise.

The contesting Defendant having purchased the property during the pendency of the execution proceedings would be bound thereby, for in the case of a mortgage suit the lis pendens does not terminate till the security has been realised for the satisfaction of the judgment debt.

The principle of the decision in LOKE-NATH v. ACHITANANDA (42), that misdescription of the property involved in a litigation is sufficient to render the doctrine of lis pendens inapplicable cannot be invoked by a person who has either knowledge or notice of the true state of things.

This was an appeal against the decree of Babu Krishna Kumar Sen, Additional Subordinate Judge, of Zillah Hooghly, dated the 3rd of March 1919.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

MOOKERJEE, J.—The subject-matter of the litigation which has culminated in this appeal is a share of an estate which bore Touzi No. 93 on the revenue roll of the Collector of Hooghly about the middle of the last century and was held by two proprietors Ram Sundar Bose and Hara

Chandra Bose. The amount of revenue originally payable was fixed at Rs. 2,998-1-0; this was subsequently reduced to Rs. 2,971-1-11 when part of the estate was acquired for public purposes under the Land Acquisition Act. On the 29th September 1864, upon an application made under sec. 10 of Act XI of 1859, the share of Hara Chandra Bose which amounted to 8 annas 16 gandas of the entire estate (treated as 16 annas) was formed into a separate account and was described in the books of the Collector as Touzi No. 93-A, with proportionate amount of revenue payable fixed at Rs. 1,648-15-5. Thenceforward Touzi No. 93 became what is termed the residuary share and included only a 7 annas share of the original estate which was vested in Ram Sunder Bose. To put the matter briefly, before the separate account had been opened under sec. 10 of the Revenue Sale Law, the expression Touzi No. 93 would be the fitting description of the entire estate, but since the opening of the separate account was sanctioned by the Collector, the term Touzi No. 93 could be appropriately used to specify only the residuary share 7 annas 4 gandas of Ram Sunder Bose, while the term Touzi No. 93-A could be properly used to designate only the separated share 8 annas 16 gandas of Hara Chandra Bose. It is necessary to mention at this stage that Hara Chandra Bose left four sons, Kailas Chandra, Makhan Lal, Beni Lal and Braja Lal, each of whom inherited one-fourth of his properties, that is, each took a 2 annas 4 gandas share out of the 8 annas 16 gandas share which belonged to their father. It also transpires that these four brothers acquired from the representatives of Ram Sunder Bose, 1 anna 13 gandas 1 kara 1 krant share (out of the 7 annas 4 gandas share), namely, 1 anna 1 ganda 1 kara 1 krant share by a conveyance, dated 19th September 1862, and 8 gandas share by another conveyance, dated 9th September 1873 and a 4 gandas share at an execution sale. Each of the four sons of Hara Chandra Bose thus acquired, in addition to his ancestral share, 2 annas 4 gandas in Touzi No. 93-A, one-fourth of 1 anna 13 gandas 1 kara 1 krant share that is, an 8 gandas 1 kara 1 krant share in Touzi No. 93. The shares thus vested in Beni Lal Bose (the third son of Hara Chandra Bose) in the two Touzis mentioned passed on his death to his son Ram Chandra Bose, the predecessor-in-interest of the first seven Defendants in the present litigation. We now come to three transfers effected by Ram Chandra Bose, which are of vital importance in the determination of the questions in controversy in this suit.

BEPIN KRISHNA ROY v. PRIYA BRATA BOSE.

On the 7th February 1903, Ram Chandra Bose executed in favour of Jagadiswar Roy the predecessor-in-interest of the Plaintiffs in the present litigation, a mortgage bond to secure a loan of Rs. 5,999; the property hypothecated was described as his own share of 2 annas 4 gandas, which his father had possessed in "Touzi No. 93." It will be observed that although the share inherited by the mortgagor from his father was originally included in Touzi No. 93 (which comprised the whole estate), at the date of the mortgage that Touzi had been broken up into two fragments, namely, Touzi No. 93-A (which was the separate account and included the ancestral share of the mortgagor) and Touzi No. 93 (the residuary estate which included only the share of Ram Chandra Bose) consequently, if what was intended to be mortgaged was the ancestral 2 annas 4 gandas share of the mortgagor, the description that it was a share of "Touzi No. 93" (which at the date of the transaction, had not the same connotation as it had prior to the opening of the separate account) might well lead to confusion; indeed, as will presently appear, this has been the root of the present litigation.

The next document executed by Ram Chandra Bose which deserves attention is a conveyance, dated the 11th April 1911 in favour of Bepin Krishna Roy the eighth Defendant in the present litigation. This deed of absolute sale recites in full the history of the estate No. 93 and explains how the separate account Touzi No. 93-A was carved thereout and the residuary estate Touzi No. 93 was brought into existence. The document not only sets out the successive steps whereby the vendor had acquired an interest in both the Touzis—in the former by right of inheritance and in the latter by right of purchase, but further mentions that on the 20th April 1868 a patni settlement was taken by Beni Lal Bose (one of the representatives of Hara Chandra Bose, the holder of the separate account Touzi No. 93-A) in respect of 1 anna 1 ganda 1 kara 1 krant share out of the 7 annas 4 gandas share which constituted the residuary estate; this lease, though taken in the name of Beni Lal Bose, was apparently for the benefit of himself and his three brothers. The deed finally recites two incumbrances created by the vendor, namely, first, a simple mortgage to Jagadiswar Roy of the 2 annas 4 gandas share inherited by him from his father and comprised in Touzi No. 93-A, and, secondly, a conditional mortgage, dated 14th November 1909 in favour of J. F. Duncan of Calcutta, with respect to an 8 gandas 1 kara 1 krant share of his zemindary interest and 5 gandas 1 kara 1 krant share of his patni interest: these, as we have seen were comprised in the residuary estate Touzi No. 93. The conveyance after these recitals, proceeds finally to transfer to the purchaser, for a consideration of Rs. 1,000, the zemindari right in 8 gandas 1 kara 1 krant share of the original Touzi No. 93, deducting the 2 gandas share out of the 8 annas 16 gandas share of Touzi No. 93-A, and the patni right in the 5 gandas 1 kara 1 kranj share, together with a 2 annas 17 gandas 2 karas 2 krants share in certain resumed chaukidar chakran (service lands). It is plain from the elaborate recital in this document that the vendor did not keep back from the purchaser any relevant information relating to the history of the title to the estate conveyed by him, and the purchaser was apprised how the original Touzi No. 93 had been broken up into the separate account, Touzi No. 93-A, (which was subject to the mortgage in favour of Jagadiswar Roy) and the residuary estate Touzi No. 93 which was transferred in part to the purchaser, subject to the patni lease in favour of Beni Lal Bose and the mortgage in favour of Duncan.

The third document executed by Ram Chandra Bose which requires examination is a conveyance, dated 19th September 1911, in favour of Bepin Krishna Roy the eighth Defendant in this suit and the transferee under the conveyance, dated 11th April 1911 whose provisions we have just analysed. This second conveyance purported to transfer the 2 annas 4 gandas share inherited by the vendor from his father and included in the separate account recorded as Touzi No. 93-A comprising the 8 annas 16 gandas share originally held by Hara Chandra Bose (the grandfather of the vendor). The consideration was stated to be Rs. 5,000 and the vendor declared that he had not encumbered the subject-matter of the sale by mortgage or otherwise. This is remarkable in view of the statement in the previous conveyance of the 11th April 1911 that this ancestral share of 2 annas 4 gandas had been mortgaged with Jagadiswar Roy. We shall now proceed to describe the succession of events which have brought the contesting parties into Court.

On the 13th August 1909, the executors to the estate of Jagadiswar Roy (who had taken the mortgage of the 7th February 1903) instituted a suit against the mortgagor Ram Chandra Bose to enforce the security. The original mortgage bond was filed along with the plaint and in a schedule thereto the properties hypothecated were described as appertaining to lot Srerampore "bearing Touzi No. 93; of the 16 annas share thereof Defendant's own share is 2 annas 4 gandas and the proportionate annual revenue Rs. 412, for the said 2 annas 4 gandas share is payable into the Collectorate," as the annual revenue of the said Mahal is Rs. 2,972-1-10 payable into the collectorate of Hooghly. The suit was not defended, and on the 16th December 1909 the usual mortgage decree was made, directing the sale of the mortgaged properties; the description copied from the mortgage deed and inserted in the schedule to the plaint was reproduced in the schedule to the decree. The decree-holders applied in due course for execution of the mortgage decree, the sale proclamation was issued and the bid of Rs. 5,000 offered by the decree-holders was accepted on the 18th September 1911. At that stage, the decree-holders appear to have discovered that the property sold had been described in the sale proclamation as Touzi No. 93 and they seem to have apprehended that this might lead to future dispute as to what had actually been sold. They did not accordingly deposit the poundage fee and applied to the Court to resell the mortgage property after a fresh sale proclamation had been duly published. The petition embodied the following prayer.

"Be it declared that the property which had been mortgaged by the judgment-debtor was a 2 annas 4 gan-

the share of Touzi No. 93 of the Collectorate of this District and the judgment-debtor having opened a separate account, the said 2 annas 4 gandas share is now included within Touzi No. 93-A. For this, the above 2 annas 4 gandas share of Touzi No. 93-A belonging to the judgment-debtor is liable to be sold by auction for the mortgage debt. The decree-holders pray that the sale proclamation to that effect may be published. On the 27th October 1911, the judgment-debtor lodged his objection against the issue of a fresh sale proclamation in an amended form and urged that as Touzi No. 93-A had been formed not after but before the mortgage, the proposed amendment would be contrary to the terms of the mortgage decree which was in exact conformity with the mortgage deed, whereby the mortgagor had hypothecated, not his interest in Touzi No. 93-A, but only such interest as he possessed at the time of the transaction in the residuary estate Touzi No. 93. On the 3rd February 1912, the matter came up for consideration before the execution Court. Meanwhile, the mortgagor had, as we have already seen, executed in favour of Bepin Krishna Roy the conveyance of 19th September 1911, which purported to transfer to him the 2 annas 4 gandas share of the vendor in Touzi No. 93-A described as free from encumbrance. Bepin Krishna Roy accordingly intervened in the execution proceedings; he contended that his position could not be prejudiced by a summary order for amendment of the decree and the sale proclamation, and claimed the protection accorded to a bona fide purchaser for value without notice. The execution Court held that the remedy of the decree-holders was to obtain a rectification of the mortgage instrument and of the mortgage decree and that an amended sale proclamation could not be issued until such rectification had been made. The result was that on the 3rd February 1912, the Subordinate Judge dismissed the application for sale of 2 annas 4 gandas share in Touzi No. 93-A on the basis of an amended sale proclamation. On the 27th February 1914 the executors to the estate of the mortgagee instituted the present suit for rectification of the mortgage, dated 7th February 1903, and for incidental reliefs. The first seven Defendants were the representatives of the mortgagor Ram Chandra Rose who had died in the interval in the early part of the year 1913, and the eighth Defendant was Bepin Krishna Roy who had taken a conveyance from the mortgagor on the 19th September 1911. The representatives of the mortgagor did not enter appearance and the claim was contested by the eighth Defendant alone. The nature of the objections raised by him is indicated in the issues which were framed in the following terms:—

1. Is the suit maintainable in its present form and have the Plaintiffs any cause of action for the suit?
2. Is the suit within time?
3. Is the suit bad for misjoinder of parties and causes of action as well as non-joinder of necessary party?
4. Are the Plaintiffs estopped from asserting any lien of Touzi No. 93-A?
5. Was the purchase by Defendant No. 8 bona fide and for valuable consideration and are the Plaintiffs estopped from questioning the validity of his purchase?
6. Was the mortgage of the 24th Magh 1309 legally executed and for valuable consideration and was Touzi No. 93-A mortgaged or intended to be mortgaged by the said deed? and was the Defendant No. 8 aware of the said mortgage?
7. Has the Plaintiffs' lien been merged in the mortgage deed and has the lien been extinguished by the sale in execution of that decree?

8. Can the Plaintiff get a decree for rectification as prayed for?

9. What relief, if any, are the Plaintiffs entitled to?

The Subordinate Judge who tried the case in the first instance dismissed the suit as barred by limitation and did not express an opinion upon the merits. Upon appeal to this Court, Fletcher and Huda, JJ., held that as the question of limitation was not apparent on the face of the record, the case should go to trial on all the issues that had been framed in the suit between the parties. The appeal was accordingly allowed and the case was remanded for reconsideration. The Subordinate Judge has now held that the 2 annas 4 gandas share of Ram Chandra Bose which at the date of the mortgage transaction was comprised in Touzi No. 93-A was really intended to be mortgaged; and that the contesting Defendant was not a bonâ fide purchaser of that share for value without notice. In this view, the Subordinate Judge has decreed the claim in the following terms:—

“It is declared that the 2 annas 4 gandas share in the Mouzahs Nij Serampur, Gangarambati and Habra in lot Serampore comprised in Touzi No. 93-A of the Hooghly Collectorate owned by the deceased Ram Chandra Bose was charged with the principal and interest on the mortgage bond, dated 24th Magh 1309 and that the description of the property in the bond was erroneous and the property really intended to be mortgaged by it was the said share in Touzi No. 93-A; the mortgage bond and the decree in Suit No. 103 of 1909 be rectified accordingly.”

The contesting Defendant has on the present appeal assailed the decision of the Subordinate Judge as erroneous both on the facts and the law. On his behalf, we have been pressed to hold that there is no satisfactory evidence to show that what was intended to be hypothecated by the mortgagor and to be accepted as security by the mortgagee was the 2 annas 4 gandas share held by the borrower Ram Chandra Bose in the separate account Touzi No. 93-A. It has further been urged in support of the appeal that even if the alleged contract be established, the mortgage instrument cannot be rectified at this stage, after the security had merged in the decree and the property had passed into the hands of a stranger who claimed to hold it as a bonâ fide purchaser for value without notice. The principles to be borne in mind in the determination of the question thus raised are set out in sec. 31 of the Specific Relief Act.

“When, through fraud or a mutual mistake of the parties, a contract or other instrument in writing does not truly express their intention, either party, or his representative in interest, may institute a suit to have the instrument rectified; and if the Court clearly find that there has been fraud or mistake in framing the instrument, and ascertain the real intention of the parties in executing the same, the Court may in its discretion rectify the instrument so as to express that intention, so far as this can be done without prejudice to rights acquired by third persons in good faith for value.

The first point for consideration is whether through a mutual mistake of the parties, the mortgage instrument in this case does not truly express their intention; in other words, the Plaintiffs who seek the assistance of the Court for the rectification of the written instrument must clearly prove that there was a prior complete agreement which according to the common intention was embodied in writing, but by reason of mistake in framing the writing, this did not express or give effect to the agreement. As James, V. C., tersely expressed the substance of the matter in Mackenzie v. Culson (1), "Courts of Equity do not rectify contracts, they may and do rectify instruments purporting to have been made in pursuance of the terms of contract." To the same effect are the observations of Chelmsford, L. C., in Fowler v. Fowler (2): "The power which the Court possesses of reforming written agreements where there has been an omission of insertion of stipulations contrary to the intention of the parties and under a mutual mistake, is one which has been frequently and most usefully exercised. But it is also one which should be used with extreme care and caution. To substitute a new agreement for one which the parties have deliberately subscribed ought only to be permitted upon the evidence of a different intention of the clearest and most satisfactory description. Lord, Thurlow's language is very strong on the subject; he says, 'the evidence which goes to prove that the words taken down in writing were contrary to the concurrent intention of all parties must be strong, irrefragable evidence.' [Lady Shelburne v. Lord Inchiquin (3)]. And this expression of Lord Thurlow is mentioned by Lord Eldon in Marquis of Townshend v. Stangroom (4) without disapprobation. If, however, Lord Thurlow used the word 'irrefragable' in its ordinary meaning, to describe evidence which cannot be refuted or overthrown, his language would require some qualification; but it is probable that he only meant that the mistake must be proved by something more than the highest degree of probability, and that it must be such as to leave no fair and reasonable doubt upon the mind that the deed does not embody the final intention of the parties. It is clear that a person who seeks to rectify a deed upon the ground of mistake must be required to establish in the clearest and most satisfactory manner, that the alleged intention to which he desires it to be made conformable continued concurrently in the minds of all parties down to the time of its execution, and also must be able to show exactly and precisely the form to which the deed ought to be brought. For there is a material difference between setting aside an instrument and rectifying it on the ground of mistake. In the latter case you can only act upon the mutual and concurrent intention of all parties for whom the Court is virtually making a new written agreement." The true position then is that in every case where rectification is sought, it must clearly and satisfactorily appear that the precise terms of the contract had been orally agreed upon and that the writing afterwards signed failed to be as it was intended, an execution of such previous agreement, but on the contrary expressed a different contract. Tested from this point of view, the case for the Plaintiffs is abundantly made out. In the first place, there is reliable oral evidence of the negotiations antecedent to the execution of the mortgage instrument, which shows that what was intended to be offered and accepted as security was the 2 annas 4 gandas ancestral share of the mortgagor in the original Estate Touzi No. 93 which at the time of the mortgage was part of the separate account Touzi No. 93—A; oral evidence was plainly admissible for this purpose; Balkishan v. Legge (5) and Jioraj v. Norwich Assurance Co. (6). In the second place, we have the admission of the mortgagor in the conveyance executed by him on the 11th April 1911, that he had mortgaged to Jagadishwar Roy the 2 annas 4 gandas share obtained by him from his father in Touzi No. 93-A. In the third place the surrounding circumstances point to the same conclusion. At the date of the mortgage, the mortgagor did not possess a 2 annas 4 gandas share in what was then Tauzi No. 93, that is, the residuary estate. To hold that notwithstanding this circumstance, he professed to hypothecate a share in excess of what he owned in fact, would be to attribute to him a design to defraud the mortgagee; there is no indication that he harboured such intention; on the other hand the subsequent admission contained in the conveyance of the 11th April 1911, militates against a possible theory of fraud. Consequently, if we look at the surrounding circumstances existing when the contract was entered into, the situation of the parties, the subject-matter of the contract, the provisions and expressions of the instrument, and if further, we call in aid the acts done under the instrument and contemporaneous writing made between the parties near or subsequent to the time when the deed was executed, we cannot but come to the conclusion that the evidence is clear and convincing that the mortgage instrument does not correctly describe the property which the mortgagor and mortgagee agreed should be given and accepted as security. Here then is an instance, not of mistake as to the identity of the property itself, but of a misdescription of it in the written instrument. This precisely is the class of cases where reformation is decreed provided the mistake was mutual, Walden v. Skinner (7) and Adams v. Henderson (8), and examples are by no means rare where correction has been made in the description of the premises in deeds, mortgages, conveyances, particularly mistakes in the number of the township, section, lot, block, boundary, line, or street. That the mistake was mutual in this case cannot we think be seriously disputed. Both parties as is amply clear on the evidence, had the common intention that the 2 annas 4 gandas share of the mortgage inherited by him from his father should be hypothecated. That share, at the time of the transaction, was included in Tauzi No. 93-A and not in Tauzi No. 93. The writer of the deed, however, described it as included in Tauzi No. 93. There is no direct evidence to show how this error was brought about, nor is it necessary to indulge in speculation on that point. The only question is, whether, the mistake was mutual, that is, a mistake reciprocal and common to both parties, in other words, whether each alike laboured under the same misconception in respect to the terms of the written instrument. To put the matter concisely, was there a common intention different from the expressed intention and a common mistaken supposition that it was rightly expressed. The answer must be in the affirmative; for this, it is not necessary to hold that a mutual mistake of the agents of the parties is always necessarily a mistake of the parties; but undoubtedly it would be in the case where the error was committed by a writer who acted as common agent of both parties in drafting the instrument. The essence of the matter is that mutuality of mistake might arise from the fact that the mistake was made by a writer who acted as mutual agent of both parties in reducing the contract to the form of a written instrument. Where there is unilateral mistake, rectification is refused on the ground that if the Court were to reform the writing to make it accord with the intent of one party only to the agreement, who averred and proved that he signed it, as it was written by mistake, when it exactly expressed the agreement as understood by the other party the writing when so altered would be just as far from expressing the agreement of the parties as it was before, and the Court would have engaged in what would be a singular task for a Court of Equity to undertake, namely, doing right to one party at the expense of a precisely equal wrong to the other. No such consideration obviously arises in the cases of the type now before us for it cannot be urged here that in granting relief to the Plaintiff on the ground of his mistake, the Court would be imposing upon the other party the erroneous conception of his opponent. It may further be added that if the theory be adopted that the mistake was brought about deliberately by the mortgagor his conduct might be deemed fraudulent, so that on establishment of fraud the mortgagee might claim rectification, mistake or no mistake. Consequently where the Defendant is shown to have been aware not only that the instrument did not express the real agreement but also that the Plaintiff was ignorant of the discrepancy between the instrument and the agreement, the case is clearly one for reformation, Clark v. Girwood (9), Lorsey v. Smith (10), Coreley v. Stafford (11), Tucker v. Bennett (12). There is thus no escape from the conclusion that the circumstances of the case before us attract the operation of the rule that in order to justify rectification there must be proof of a common intention different from the expressed intention and a common mistaken supposition that the intention is rightly expressed in the instrument; it matters not by whom the actual oversight or error was made which caused the expression to be wrong.

(8) 168 U. S. 573.

We have next to consider, whether the Court should refuse to rectify the mortgage instrument on the ground that, such rectification will prejudice the rights acquired by a third person in good faith and for value. The Subordinate Judge has answered this question against the eighth Defendant. In his view, the purchase of the mortgage property by the contesting Defendant was made neither in good faith nor for value. The evidence as to the payment of consideration has been placed before us and the judgment of the Subordinate Judge has been criticised on the ground that he has rejected positive testimony on mere suspicion, a course emphatically disapproved by the Judicial Committee on more than one occasion; as was observed by Sir Lawrence Jenkins in Mina Kumari v. Bejoy Singh (13) and by Lord Shaw in Mohammed Mahbub Ali v. Bharat Indu (14), the decision of the Court should rest, not upon suspicion but upon legal grounds established by legal testimony; this follows the earlier dicta of Lord Westbury in Sriman v. Gopal (15) and Lord Hobhouse in Uman v. Gandharp (16). There is considerable force in this contention. The evidence of payment of consideration by cheque on the Chartered Bank cannot be brushed aside, and there is no solid foundation laid in the evidence to support the hypothesis that the purchaser received back the money from the vendor. If that theory had been satisfactorily made out, there would be no real transfer at all; the transaction could then have been branded as fictitious, brought about by conspiracy between the vendor and the purchaser with a view to throw an effective obstacle in the way of the mortgagee. But the evidence does not prove conclusively that the sale was colourable, although the genuineness of the transfer is undoubtedly open to grave suspicion. It is needless, however, to discuss further, whether the transfer was for value, because there is no room for serious controversy that the purchase cannot be deemed to have been made in good faith. There is no satisfactory evidence that the eighth Defendant made the usual enquiries at the time of his alleged purchase. We have further the significant fact that the conveyance which he had taken five months earlier, on the 11th April 1911, actually contained a recital that this ancestral share of Ram Chandra Bose have been mortgaged to Jagadishwar Roy. Direct evidence is not available to prove that he remembered this recital when he took the second conveyance on the 19th September 1911. If there had been such evidence, the proof of knowledge would have been at least as effective as notice and would thus have been completely destructive of the plea of purchase in good faith. The conception of notice was introduced into law and the rules concerning it were established, from considerations of policy and expediency based upon the common experience of mankind. Notice, even when actual is not necessarily equivalent to knowledge; but the same effect must be attributed to it which would naturally flow from knowledge. It is treated as a representative of, or substitute for, actual knowledge, and is therefore in its essential nature inferior to knowledge. It necessarily follows that whenever a party has obtained a full knowledge, although not in accordance with the rules which define the nature of notice and regulate the mode of its being given and received, there is no longer any need of invoking the legal conception of notice; the rules concerning it no longer apply; the very fact for which it is intended as substitute has been more accurately accomplished in another manner. To sum up in one statement, if the party has in any way obtained the full knowledge, those same results must necessarily and even in a higher degree, be attributed to it—the very substance itself—which are, from motives of general policy, attributed to notice as its representative and substitute. But it is not necessary in the present case to establish that the contesting Defendant had actual knowledge of the existence of the mortgage, for it is plain that the recital in the conveyance accepted by him on the 11th April 1911 did in law constitute constructive notice. I am not unmindful that the conveyance of the 11th April 1911 related to a share of Touzi No. 93 whereas the conveyance of the 19th September 1911 was in respect of a share of Touzi No. 93-A. The two Touzis, however, were not essentially distinct properties within the meaning of the well-known principle enunciated by Lord Redesdale in Hamilton v. Royce (17) and quoted with approval by Smith M. R. in Tressilian v. Carriffe (18). "If a man purchases an estate under a deed, which happens to relate also to other lands not comprised in that purchase and afterwards purchases the other lands to which an apparent title is made, independent of that deed; the former notice of the deed will not of itself affect him in the second transaction, for he was not bound to carry in his recollection those parts of a deed which had no relation to the particular purchase he was then about, nor to take notice of more of the deed than affected his then purchase." The principle in essence is that notice to a purchaser by his title papers in one transaction will not be notice to him in an independent subsequent transaction, in which the instruments containing the recitals are not necessary to his title; but that he is charged constructively with notice, merely of that which affects the purchase of the property in the chain of title of which the paper forms a necessary link. Consequently, where one is purchasing a particular piece of real estate, and his title deeds recite a charge upon, or equitable interest in, another piece in favour of a third party, such recitals would not affect him with notice of such charge or interest, in the event of his subsequent purchase from the holder of the legal title to the other property. He is not presumed to carry the knowledge thus imputed to him in the first transaction in his memory until the second purchase has been effected. The reason and limits of this rule were lucidly put by Rogers, J., in Boggs v. Varner (19), when he was asked to receive in evidence recitals in the title papers to a different piece of property from that in suit with a view to charge a purchaser with notice of an antecedent unregistered instrument or an equitable interest: "The evidence would lead to dangerous consequences, for it is impossible for any one to recollect the recitals in deeds under which he may claim. Let this be held to be admissible and competent to affect a subsequent purchaser with notice, it would follow that no man can safely purchase until a most careful examination and inspection of every deed to which he may be a party and under which he claims." The case before us is obviously distinguishable and is not affected by these considerations. Under the Revenue Sale Law, notwithstanding that a separate account has been opened, the separate account and the residuary estate continue ultimately liable to the State for the entire revenue, and in certain specified contingencies the entire estate is liable to be exposed for sale by the revenue authorities for the realisation of arrears. Consequently, in order to trace the history of either fragment of the estate, an examination of the antecedent dealings in respect of both would be undertaken by the prudent investor. Thus, under ordinary circumstances, knowledge acquired in course of transactions with regard to either fragment of the estate may well be deemed as acquired "in course of transaction with regard to the same property" or "in the investigation of the same chain of title." The conclusion thus appears inevitable that the contesting Defendant is not entitled to the protection extended to a purchaser in good faith and for value.

(18) [1855] 4 Ir. Ch. Rep. 399.

BEPIN KRISHNA ROY & PRIYA BRATA BOSE:

Finally, it has been urged as a last resort on behalf of the contesting Defendant that even though it should be clearly established that through the mutual mistake of the parties to the mortgage contract, the instrument in writing did not truly express their real intention, the Court cannot at any rate, the Court should not, in its discretion, rectify the mortgage deed, inasmuch as a decree has already been made thereon by a competent Court. Such decree, it has been argued, has extinguished the mortgage security, and reformation at this stage would in essence be a rectification of the decree of one Court by another, contrary to well-established principles. In support of this argument, reference has been made to the decisions of the Judicial Committee in Hetram v. Shadilal (20) and Mathu Mal v. Durga Kunwar (21), and of this Court in Sadho

Misser v. Golab Singh (22), Jogeswar v. Ganga Bishnu (23), Chandmia v. Asimabanu (24), Bhandi Singh v. Daulat Roy (25) and Kusodhaj v. Braja Mohan (26). Not one of these decisions, it has been conceded, is directly in point, and the events which led up to the litigation in each of these cases bear no analogy to those antecedent to the present suit; but an attempt has been made to invoke the aid of the general principles which, it is said, may fairly be extracted from the cases mentioned. In Hetram v. Shagilal (20), Viscount Maiddane observed that the effect of a decree made under sec. 89 of the Transfer of Property Act for the sale of mortgage property is to substitute the right of sale thereby conferred upon the mortgagee for his rights under the mortgage which are thereupon extinguished. This principle which was also recognised in Mathu Mal v. Durga Kunwar (21), clearly does not touch the question before us, namely, the competence of a Court to direct rectification of a mortgage instrument when the elements specified in sec. 31 of the Specific Relief Act have been established. No doubt, when such rectification has been made by order of Court, what the effect thereof may be on the decree previously made is a question which we shall presently have to consider. In Sadho Misser v. Golab Singh (22), it was ruled that the only ways in which a decree may be set aside by a party thereto are by appeal, by proceedings under sec. 108, C.

P. C. (1882) and similar sections, and by application for review; if the decree is not tainted by fraud, no suit lies to set it aside. In that case, an amendment had been made in the pleadings without notice to a party who had not entered appearance in the suit, and a decree was ultimately made in accordance with the amended pleading. The absent Defendant thereupon instituted a suit to set aside the decree on the ground that as he had not been served with notice of the application for amendment of the plaint, he was not bound by the decree and was entitled to treat it as not affecting his rights. Trevelyan and Beverley, J.J., held that as no attempt had been made to set aside the decree as provided by law, the suit could not be maintained. In Jogeswar v. Ganga Bishnu (23), it was held that a suit lies in a Civil Court to rectify a mistake in a decree. It appears that in a previous mortgage suit, a property which was correctly described in the plaint as property No. 4 was by mistake described as property No. 3 in the written statement. This property was ultimately released as not liable to be foreclosed, but was described as property No. 3 in the judgment, and the error was reproduced in the decree. A suit was thereupon instituted for rectification of the error. The Subordinate Judge dismissed the suit. On appeal to this Court, Mitra, J., was pressed to follow the rule recognised in Ainsworth v. Wilding (27), and to hold that the suit could be maintained for rectification of the error. This contention was overruled. On appeal under the Letters Patent, Maclean, C. J. (Pargiter, J., concurring) reversed this decision and held that the suit lay to rectify the mistake in the decree. The Chief Justice pointed out that the suit was of a civil nature within the meaning of sec. 11, C. P. C. (1882) and was cognizable by a Civil Court, as there was no enactment in force to bar the suit. In Chand Mia v. Asimabonu (24), Ghose and Pargiter, JJ., referred to the decisions in Sadho v. Golap (22) and Jogeswar v. Ganga Bishnu (23) and held that it could not be broadly laid down that any error in a decree may be challenged by a separate suit. There a decree for ejectment had been made in a suit for rent, though there was no prayer for ejectment in the plaint. The Defendant applied for review of judgment, but was unsuccessful. He then instituted a suit to set aside the decree. The Court held that, in these circumstances, a separate suit was not maintainable to set aside a decree not tainted by fraud, obtained in the presence of both parties and apparently conclusive between them. In Bhandi Singh v. Daulat Roy (25), Brett and Carnduff, JJ., referred to the earlier cases just analysed and held that a suit was not maintainable in a Civil Court for amending the judgment and decree, previously passed in a suit between the same parties by another Civil Court of competent jurisdiction, on the ground that a mistake had been made by the Judge in his judgment and decree. It was observed that as the Court had jurisdiction and authority to make the decree actually passed, another suit could not be instituted to set aside or modify that decree on the ground that the Judge had committed an error; in support of this view, reference was made to the remarks of the Judicial Committee in Srigopal v. Prithi Singh (28). In Kusodhaj v. Braja

Mohan (26), Jenkins, C. J., held that though a decree can be set aside by suit on proof of fraud of the required character, a suit does not lie to set aside a decree in a previous suit on the ground that the Judge in passing that decree had made a mistake. The decision in Jogeswar v. Ganga Bishnu (23) was distinguished; it was also explained that the case of Ainsworth v. Willing (27), was an instance of a consent decree and consequently belonged to the class of decisions typified by Huddersfield Banking Co. v. Lister (29) Willing v. Sanderson (30). These cases show that an order made in an action by consent and based upon and intended to carry out an agreement come to between the parties, can be set aside on the ground (such as mistake) on which an agreement in the terms of the order could be set aside. But these cases do not show that a decree after contest can be set aside or rectified in a fresh suit on the ground that the Judge was mistaken though his decree accurately expressed his intention [Preston Banking Co. v. Allsup (31)]. Jenkins, C. J., added that if the alleged mistake of a Judge is to furnish a disappointed litigant with a fresh starting point for keeping his opponent in Court, then his misfortune would be gravely increased to the public detriment. These principles are clearly inapplicable to cases of the type now before us. Here the question of fundamental importance, stripped of all technicalities is, whether the mutual mistake of the parties to the mortgage transaction manifested in the mortgage deed, which has extended into Judicial proceedings, automatically as it were, without mistake on the part of the Judge, is still capable of rectification. On principle, the answer should clearly be in the affirmative for as Neville, J., observed in Thompson v. Hickman (32), to grant relief by way of rectification where the error has crept into one document and refuse it where it is embodied in two, is inconsistent with equitable principles, for equity regards the substance rather than the form of a transaction. There is no substantial reason, for instance, why we should not hold that where the same mutual mistake has been repeated in each one of a chain of conveyances, under such circumstances as to entitle any one of the purchasers to a reformation as against his immediate vendor, equity may work back through all, and entitle the last purchaser to a reformation against the original grantor. Similarly, it may be held as a general rule that if there is a mutual mistake in a mortgage in the description of property and the same mistake is reproduced in the decree, equity may go back to the original transaction and reform both the mortgage and the decree so as to make them conform to the intention of the parties concerned; and this view was actually adopted in Bala Prosad v. Kanoo (33). We do not overlook, however, that if the decree has been executed and title has passed to a purchaser, fresh considerations may arise, and questions of some nicety which require examination from a new standpoint may present themselves for solution. It may be contended, for instance, in such a case where the purchaser did not intend to buy land other than that described erroneously in the mortgage, that it would not be fair to rectify the sale certificate. In such a contingency, comprehensive relief by reformation of the description running through all the papers in the judicial proceeding may well have to be refused; the proper course for the party aggrieved may be to obtain reformation of the mortgage and to institute new proceedings for the enforcement of the rectified instrument. Cases of this description may give rise to questions of great complexity and have led to a marked divergence of judicial opinion in the Courts of the United States, as is amply indicated by the notes to the decisions in Stewart v. Wilson (34), Dillart v. Jones (35) and Fisher v. Villamil (36). It is not necessary, however, for our present purpose to attempt an exhaustive formulation of the principles which may have to be invoked when the mutual mistake has been reproduced from the mortgage deed into the mortgage decree and thereafter into the certificate granted on the consequent public sale. The case before us is fairly simple. The parties have not yet reached beyond the state of the mortgage decree and the commencement of execution proceedings thereon. We are thus not called upon to rectify the sale certificate granted to a purchaser; and it cannot be urged that a decree granting such drastic relief as rectification of the sale certificate would invest the purchaser with title to property which was never advertised, offered for sale, or sold to him and which might have been purchased by others at a higher figure, had it been correctly described in the sale proclamation. We are consequently of opinion that the mortgage instrument should be rectified and that on the basis thereof similar rectification should be made in the pleadings in the mortgage suit, in the mortgage decree and in the proceedings for execution thereof which were suspended as a result of the order of the 3rd

February 1912 and will now stand revived and after amendment will be continued in accordance with law. [Cf. Kamardin v. Jawahir Lal (37) and Rameshwar Singh, Maharaja of Darbhanga v. Homeswar Singh (38)]. As the contesting Defendant has purchased the mortgaged property during the pendency of the execution proceedings, he will be bound thereby, for in the case of a mortgage suit the lis pendens does not terminate till the security has been realised for the satisfaction of the judgment debt. [Surjiram v. Barhamdeo (39), Purshottam v. Chedlal (40), Faiyaz Hossein v. Pragnarain (41) and Lokenath v. Achitananda (42)]. The Appellant cannot have any legitimate grievance against the application of the doctrine of lis pendens, because the principle of the decision in Lokenath v. Achitananda (42), namely, that misdescription of the property involved in a litigation is sufficient to render the doctrine of lis pendens inapplicable cannot be invoked by a person who has either knowledge or notice of the true state of things (Bennett on Lis Pendens, pp. 154-159).

The conclusion follows that the decree made by the Subordinate Judge is substantially correct and this appeal must be dismissed with costs.

RULE No. 839 OF 1920.

SANDERSON, C. J.	MAHABIR PRASAD SINGH, Petitioner,
RICHARDSON, J.	v.
1921,	JOGENDRA NATH MONDAL and anr.,
18, July.	Opposite Parties.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), Or. XXI, r. 58—Mortgage decree, for sale—Claim to mortgaged property, if lies—Claim once allowed but disallowed upon fresh application for execution—Revision—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), sec. 115.

A claim is not entertainable under Or. XXI, r. 58 of the Civil Procedure Code to property which has been ordered to be sold under a mortgage decree; and where such a claim was once allowed, but subsequently the decree-holder having again applied for execution of the decree by sale of the property, a further claim to the property by the successful claimant was disallowed by the executing Court:

Held, on an application for revision under sec. 115 of the Civil Procedure Code, that in view of the authority of the case, DEEFHOLTS v. PETERS (2), the High Court could not interfere.

This was a rule granted against the order of the Subordinate Judge of Howrah, dated the 27th November 1920, disallowing a claim preferred under Or. XXI, r. 58 of the Civil Procedure Code.

The facts appear sufficiently from the judgment.

Babu Bejin Behari Ghose (with Babu Baranashibashi Mukerjee) for the Petitioner submitted that the previous order upholding the claim could not be ignored by the lower Court which acted without jurisdiction or at any rate illegally in the exercise of its jurisdiction in disallowing the claim.

MAHABIR PRASAD SINGH v. JOGENDRA NATH MONDAL.

Babu Rani Chandra Majumdar (with Babu Nagendra Nath Ghose) for the Opposite Party, submitted that the argument at most amounted to saying that the Court should have held that the previous order was res judicata. That is no ground for interference in revision, Amir Hassan v. Sheo Buksh (3). There was and can be no attachment in execution of a mortgage decree and a claim under Or. XXI, r. 58, C. P. C., is not entertainable, Joy Prokash Singh v. Abhoy Kumar Chund (1) and Deefholts v. Peters (2). The previous order was itself without jurisdiction and made without notice to the decree-holder.

Babu Bepin Behari Ghose in reply.

THE JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

SANDERSON, C. J.—This is a Rule granted by my learned brother and myself calling upon the Opposite Party to show cause why a certain order should not be set aside. The order in question is an order of the 27th of November 1920 made by the learned Subordinate Judge. The facts of this case which it is necessary for me to state are as follows: It is alleged in the petition that the Petitioner purchased the property in question on the 30th of November 1915 at a sale in execution of a decree for rent and obtained possession through the Court. It is then alleged that the judgment-debtor borrowed money from the decree-holder, and, it now appears that the money was borrowed before the sale of 1915 on a promissory note; and it is also stated that there was an equitable mortgage; the decree-holder obtained his decree on the 17th of January 1917 for the sale of the above-mentioned property and for the realization of the money. There was an application for execution in March 1918 and the sale was fixed for the 18th of July 1918. Then a claim was put in by the Petitioner, a claim to the properties in question. In the order-sheet of that case appears this passage.

“18-6-18—One Mahabir Prasad Singh prefers claim of the entire properties attached. Register it. Put up on 22nd June next for orders.” I need not go through all the orders in the case but the decree-holder appears to have taken no steps, and the result was that the execution case was dismissed for default. It is not clear whether the properties had in fact been attached. I should infer from the previous orders in that execution case that the properties had not been attached, because I find on the 8th of May, there was an order directing proclamation of sale to issue. However, in my judgment, it is not material to come to any final decision upon that point in this case. The first execution case having been dismissed, a second execution case was instituted in 1920, and a sale proclamation was issued fixing the sale for the 13th of December 1920. But prior to that the Petitioner lodged a petition on the 17th of November 1920. We are informed by the learned Vakil that the petition was lodged under the provisions of Or. XXI, r. 58 of the Civil Procedure Code. When the application was heard by the learned Subordinate Judge he declined to entertain the claim and to register it; and, his judgment which is very short is as follows: “The execution is of a mortgage decree, and no attachment has been effected; and so no claim is competent: That there was a claim before, which was allowed, does not I think stand in the way; for, there might have been attachment in the other execution, treating it as a money decree: Joy Prokash Singh v. Abhoy Kumar Chund (1) may be cited in support of this view, and so I decline to entertain this claim and decline to register it." The strongest way, it seems to me, the case could be put up for the Petitioner is that the learned Subordinate Judge had jurisdiction to adjudicate upon this matter, and he declined to exercise his jurisdiction: and, consequently we should have power to interfere under sec. 115 of the Civil Procedure Code. The circumstances of this case, I admit, do seem to lead to a curious result, looking at them from one point of view: In the first execution case the claimant lodged a claim to this property protesting against the execution of this decree, and upon such claim being considered by the Court the claimant succeeded and the first execution case was dismissed. Now the decree-holder has again applied for execution of the decree and the Court has declined to entertain the petition of the Petitioner. In my judgment, however, we are bound to discharge this Rule on the authority of the case Deefholts v. Peters (2). There the proceedings by way of claim were taken under sec. 278 of the Code of Civil Procedure which was then in force and which corresponded to Or. XXI, r. 58 of the present Code of Civil Procedure. There the learned Judges distinctly held that the procedure under that section was not applicable to a mortgage decree which contained a provision that the property in question should be sold. In this case there is no doubt that the decree was what is called a mortgage decree, and contained a provision that this property should be sold. Consequently it was not open to the execution Court to entertain and adjudicate upon a claim, which was presented by the Petitioner under Or. XXI, r. 58. The learned Judges in that case said as follows: "We think that proceedings by way of claim are not applicable to a case of this kind. Proceedings by way of claim are applicable only in cases of money decrees where property of the judgment-debtor has been attached; that is, where some property of the judgment-debtor is attached for the purpose of satisfying any general money claim. In that kind of claim it is clear that there should be some speedy remedy for the purpose of ascertaining whether the property claimed is the property of the judgment-debtor at all; but in a case like this where the property has been dealt with in a solemn way by the decree of the Court, and has been declared liable to sale under the mortgage, that remedy would not be applicable." Then they proceeded to point out that the Petitioner would have other remedies. On the authority of that case, which, to my mind, covers this case, we have no option but to direct that this Rule should be discharged, with costs—hearing-fee, one gold mohur.

KALI DAS v. KANAI LAL DE.

Party did not set up the invalidity of the tenancy but invited the Court to fix the standard rent at a certain amount :

Held—That in the circumstances of the case the Rent Controller should have entered the application.

That an application in revision against the order of the Rent Controller made under sec. 15 lies on the Appellate Side of the High Court.

This was a Rule granted on the 20th June 1921 against an order of the Controller of Rents, Calcutta (Babu Bangshidhar Banerjee), dated the 9th May 1921.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

Babu Bepin Chandra Mullick for the Petitioner.

The Advocate-General for the Government.

Dr. D. N. Miller and Babu Narain Chandra Kar for the Opposite Party.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

This is a Rule calling upon the Opposite Party as well as upon the Controller of Rents, Calcutta, to show cause why the order dismissing an application under sec. 15 of the Calcutta Rent Act (for fixing the standard rent), on the ground that the Petitioner had no locus standi to make the application, should not be set aside.

The order of the Rent Controller was as follows :—“ From the evidence on the record it appears evident that the applicant is a woman of the town and that the sub-tenants to whom she has sublet the different rooms comprised in the premises are also women of the town. The applicant has therefore no locus standi to make this application and I dismiss it.”

It is unnecessary, to consider the contention that the rent of a house let out to a prostitute cannot be standardized under the Rent Act, because the contract of ten-any is void, as in the present case the Opposite Parties, who are the landlords, did not set up the question of invalidity of the tenancy. They admitted the Petitioner to be their tenant in their written statement in the case. They stated that they had sued her in the Calcutta Small Cause Court for ejectment; and that she was allowed to reside in the house on payment of rent at the rate of Rs. 85 per month under the decree of that Court, provided she paid the rent regularly. They went further and invited the Rent Controller to fix the standard rent of the premises at Rs. 150 per month.

It is also stated in the petition before us, and not denied by the Opposite Party, that they had sued the Petitioner for rent and obtained decrees several times, and that at the time when this Rule was granted, a suit for rent against the Petitioner was pending in the Calcutta Small Cause Court, and we are informed that the suit has since been decreed, which must have been on the footing that there was relationship of landlord and tenant between the parties. The Opposite Party are not estopped from pleading that the contract of tenancy is void, but they have not set up the invalidity of the tenancy. There is no doubt upon the authorities that the rent of a house knowingly let out to a prostitute where she carries on her trade is not recoverable. That is because the object of the agreement being unlawful the contract is void. But in the supplementary written statement the Opposite Party merely said that the Petitioner is a public woman and nothing else was stated. It is true that the Petitioner admitted that she was a public woman, and her sub-tenants were the same. The latter fact has no bearing upon the present question. Her admission about herself might perhaps have been sufficient, but having regard to the fact that the Opposite Party

The complainant Mon Mohan Mandal was a member of a firm of general dealers and had known the Appellant for a long time. The Appellant came to him one day and asked him whether he would like to buy a motor car which the owner was anxious to dispose of cheaply. After some discussion Mon Mohan finally made up his mind that he would like to see the car and took Rs. 1,600 with him in case he decided to buy. The Appellant took him to a house in Lansdowne Road which was about 15 minutes' walk from Mon Mohan's house. As the car was not there the Appellant suggested that they might wait till it returned. It was then about half past four and they spent sometime in watching a cricket match close by. When it was getting dark Mon Mohan said, as the car had not come he would have a look at it next day. The Appellant asked him to wait and returned saying that the car had arrived.

ASHUTOSH DUTT v. THE KING-EMPEROR. •

Mon Mohan returned to the house but saw no car. The Appellant said the car had gone out again but would be back shortly. Mon Mohan waited a little longer and then decided to go home. Instead, however, of going down the Lansdowne Road the Appellant suggested that they should take a short cut and go by the new road, which was a lonely road, and passed over a field. Mon Mohan consented and after they had gone a little way they met an up-country man whom the Appellant hailed as the owner of the car. The up-country man said that he was tired of dealing with the penniless people whereupon the Appellant indignantly protested that it was not so in Mon Mohan's case and Mon Mohan supported him by pulling out Rs. 1,200 in notes from his pocket. The Appellant took the notes and handed them to the up-country man. Then all of a sudden a man appeared with his face covered, struck the Appellant with his umbrella and then he, the Appellant, and the up-country man all took to their heels leaving Mon Mohan standing there dumbfounded. He ran after the Appellant but could not find him. He then went home and told his brothers what had happened. They decided that the best chance of getting the money back was to get hold of the Appellant as soon as possible and make him give it up. So they did not inform the police. The same night they found the Appellant at the house of his mistress and took him to their house. He told them that if they did not beat him he would tell them where the money was and eventually said that one Dukhi Goala had Rs. 400 and one Bishnui of Jorasanko had the rest. Early in the morning Mon Mohan and others took the accused in a car to Jorasanko to look for Bishnui but he could not be found. On the way back the Appellant said that he wanted to have some tea and would come back shortly. He however did not return. Mon Mohan then informed the police at 11 o'clock. They searched Dukhi's house and found Rs. 370. Bishnui however had disappeared.

• Mr. J. C. Hazra and Babus Probodha Ch. Chatterjee and Promada Kumar Ghose for the Petitioner.

• The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :— •

This Rule is directed against an order of the Magistrate of Alipore convicting the Petitioner Ashutosh Dutt under sec. 379, I. P. C.

The point in this Rule is whether a certain statement made by the Appellant was admissible in evidence having regard to the provisions of sec. 24 of the Evidence Act. The complainant's story is that after the theft he went home and told his brother what had happened and they decided that the best chance to get back the money was to get hold of the Appellant soon and make him give it up, so that they did not inform the Police. When they found the Appellant he told them that if they did not beat him he would tell them where the money was and eventually gave them certain information. The learned Sessions Judge held that sec. 24 was not admissible because the persons to whom the statement was made had no authority over the Appellant. But it is settled law that the words "person in authority" in sec. 24 include the prosecutor.

As regards the question whether the making of the confession was caused by any inducement the evidence on the record does not clearly show exactly what was said. But in the case of Queen v. Thompson (1), the Court of Crown Cases Reserved held that it was the duty of the prosecution to prove in a case of doubt that the prisoner's statement was free and voluntary and the following dictum in the case of R. v. Warringham (2) was cited with approval; that the Judge will require the prosecutor to show affirmatively to his satisfaction that the statement was not made under the influence of improper inducement and in the event of any doubt subsisting on this head will reject the confession. On this authority we hold that if in the circumstances of the case it appears to the Court that there is reason to suspect that the confession was obtained by inducement so as to bring it under the provisions of sec. 24, the prosecution must show that the confession was freely made. In this case having regard to the admission of the complainant that he was willing to drop the Police proceedings if he got his money back we are bound to suspect that some such offer was made to the accused and that it was this that induced him to confess. We also find that in the cross-examination the complainant said, "we spoke to him, that is, the Appellant in flattering terms, so he said he would realize the money after dawn." Having regard to the state of the evidence we think that the admission made by the Appellant ought not to be proved as it was inadmissible under sec. 24 of the Evidence Act. The case against the Appellant depends mainly on the evidence of the complainant. Whether his evidence should be believed without strong corroboration, or whether there is other evidence sufficient to corroborate him apart from this admission, we express no opinion.

We set aside the conviction and sentence passed on the Petitioner and direct that he be retried.

Police Act, Calcutta Suburban (II, B. C., of 1866), sec. 18—Place of public resort, stall where aerated water is sold not for consumption on the premises, if.

A stall where soda water is sold not for consumption on the premises is not a place of public resort within the meaning of sec. 18.

This was a Rule granted against an order of the Sub-Deputy Magistrate of Alipur (K. C. Mukherjee, Esq.), dated the 17th February 1921, convicting the Petitioner under sec. 18, Act II of 1866, and sentencing him to pay a fine of Rs. 5, in default to suffer simple imprisonment for two days, an appeal from which order was dismissed by the Additional District Magistrate of the 24-Parganahs on 19th April 1921.

The facts of the case sufficiently appear from the judgment.

Babu Bir Bhusan Dutt for the Petitioner.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

The Petitioner has been convicted under sec. 18 of the Calcutta Suburban Police Act, II (B. C.) of 1866, and sentenced to pay a fine Rs. 5. The Petitioner has a stall on the Kalighat Road wherefrom he sells soda water and other aerated water and non-intoxicating beverages. The only question that arises in this Rule is whether that place is a "place of public resort and entertainment" within the meaning of sec. 18 of Act II (B. C.) of 1866. In sec. 51 of the Act, "a place of public entertainment" is defined as "a place whether enclosed or open to which the public are admitted and where any kind of food, drink or drug is supplied for consumption on the premises for the profit or gain of any person owning or having an interest in or managing such place and shall include a refreshment room, eating-house, coffee-house, tea-shop, liquor-house, boarding-house, lodging-house, hotel, restaurant, tavern, wine-shop, beer-shop, spirit-shop, arrak-shop, toddy-shop, ganja-shop, bhang-shop and opium-shop." The shop kept by the Petitioner does not come within this definition because there is no place to which the public are admitted nor are the drinks supplied to the public supplied to them for consumption on the premises. We do not think that, if it is not a place of public entertainment, it can be held to be a place of public resort within the meaning of sec. 18 of the Act. The words used in that section are "or other place of public resort and entertainment" and they followed the words "keeps any coffee-house, boarding-house, eating-house, lodging-house." Applying the principle of ejusdem generis to these words, we hold that a stall on which soda water is sold not for consumption on the premises cannot be held to be a place of public resort within the meaning of sec. 18 of Act II (B. C.) of 1866. Taking this view it follows that the Petitioner committed no offence in selling these articles without a license for the sale thereof. We accordingly make this Rule absolute, set aside the conviction of the Petitioner and direct that the fine, if paid, be refunded.

S. C. M. Rule made absolute.

[PRIVY COUNCIL.]

VISCOUNT HALDANE.] MURUGA GOUNDAN, LORD DUNEDIN. Appellant,
SIR JOHN EDGE. v.
1921, THE KING-EMPEROR,
9, March. Respondent.

Privy Council—Criminal appeal, when entertained.

The King, in Council is not a Court of Criminal Appeal and the power in the Sovereign to entertain appeals of this character is only to be exercised when there has been such a gross denial of the principles of natural justice as has been defined in numerous cases.

This was an appeal by special leave from a judgment, dated the 7th January 1920, of the High Court of Judicature at Madras, which confirmed the conviction of the Appellant for the offence of abetment of murder, under sec. 302 read with sec. 109 of the Indian Penal Code, and the sentence of death passed upon the Appellant therefor by the Court of Sessions of the Coimbatore Division, on the 14th November 1919.

The Appellant was tried by the said Sessions Judge with the aid of two Assessors, both of whom found the Appellant guilty of having abetted the murder of one Mondianan on the 27th July 1919.

The case for the prosecution was that the Appellant carried on an intrigue with the wife, Rangammal, of the murdered man, and that the Appellant hired two men of bad character belonging to a registered criminal tribe, namely, Palani Koravan and Koona Koravan, to kill the deceased Mondianan, promising to pay to each of them a sum of Rs. 50. The said Palani Koravan and Rangammal were also tried along with the Appellant, and the said Koona Koravan gave King's evidence. The Court of Sessions found the accused Palani Koravan guilty of the offence of murder, and sentenced him to death, and Rangammal was found guilty of abetment of murder, and was sentenced to transportation for life. The High Court confirmed the conviction and sentence of Palani Koravan, but reversed the conviction and sentence of Rangammal and acquitted her.

The criminal proceedings started in the following manner : On the 28th July 1919, the village Magistrate of Kalikulam—a village situate in the District of Coimbatore in Madras—sent the following report to the Subordinate Magistrate and to the Police Sub-Inspector of Satyamangalam :

“Hearing through rumour that the unidentifiable dead body of a murdered person was lying to the east of the road between the Reserve and Patta land, I went about 1 p.m. and saw. The throat has been cut with knife. The two eyes and the forehead have been stabbed with knife. There are five or six injuries. The two ears have been slightly cut off and there is nothing in them. The dead body cannot be identified and there are no claimants.”

On receipt of the above information the Sub-Inspector of Police went on the following morning to the place where the dead body was lying and as the body was in an advanced state of decomposition a photograph of the body was taken, and impressions from the fingers of both hands of the body were also taken. On the afternoon of the 29th July the body was examined by the Sub-Assistant Surgeon of Satyamangalam who made his report on the 30th July. It was to the effect that the lungs, heart, stomach, intestines, liver, spleen, kidneys, urinary bladder and brain substance were all decomposed, and that the body was swollen and offensive, and that the cuticle was peeled off from almost the whole body, and that the lips were absent, and the bones of the right side of the face and nose were devoid of flesh, and that the eyes were decomposed, and the skin of the head peeled off, and the lobes of both ears were cut, and all the blood vessels on both sides of the neck were cut, and the vertical column was visible. The opinion as to cause of death was “probably shock and hæmorrhage result of wound in front of neck.”

From the 28th July to the 3rd August 1919 no clue was discovered, but on the 3rd August the said Koonal Koravan was alleged to have furnished some information to the Police Sub-Inspector of Satyamangalam. It was admitted that throughout the period from the 27th July 1919 (the date of the alleged murder) up to the 3rd August 1919 the said Koonal Koravan slept at the Police Station of Satyamangalam.

On the 11th August 1919 the Superintendent of Police made a request that a pardon might be tendered to the said Koonal Koravan, and by an order dated the 14th August 1919 of the District Magistrate of Coimbatore the Sub-Magistrate of Satyamangalam was directed to tender a pardon to the said Koonal Koravan under the provisions of sec. 337 of the Code of Criminal Procedure 1898. On the 19th August following a pardon was tendered to the said Koonal Koravan and he made a statement on solemn affirmation on the same date before the said Sub-Magistrate.

The preliminary enquiry into the alleged offence was conducted by the Second-class Magistrate of Satyamangalam who committed the three accused above named, including the Appellant, for trial to the said Court of Sessions. As already stated, the said Palani Koravan (accused No. 1) was charged with murder under sec. 302 of the Indian Penal Code and Appellant (accused No. 2) and Rangammal (accused No. 3) were charged with abetment of murder, under sec. 302 read with sec. 109 of the Indian Penal Code. All the accused persons pleaded not guilty.

The chief witness for the prosecution was the accomplice Koonā Koravan who gave evidence on solemn affirmation on the 11th November 1919. The substance of his evidence was that on the 27th July 1919 which was a Sunday, the said Palani Koravan instigated him to follow the deceased Mondianan and his wife Rangammal who were going on a journey from the village of Satyamangalam by road to Ukkaram; that when they reached within a few yards of the Perur toddy shop, Palani Koravan gave Rs. 10 to him; that each drank toddy worth 8 annas at the shop and that after drinking toddy they resumed their pursuit of Mondianan and his wife. He added that on leaving the toddy shop "I asked accused 1 why he was taking me so far. He said that accused 3 was being kept by accused 2 who had promised to pay Rs. 100 if accused 3's husband were murdered. He added that we should each have Rs. 50 to-morrow. I said nothing. We reached the grazing ground, accused 2 sat under a tree saying that accused 3's husband would run away if he saw him. He told us to go on and cut him and return."

The said approver further narrated how he and Palani Koravan murdered Mondianan, and how they were ferried over on their return journey by a boatman who asked them why they had blood on their body, and who was told in reply that they had been killing a hare that evening.

The prosecution also examined two witnesses to prove that a report of the existence of an immoral intimacy between the Appellant and Rangammal had been made to the caste fellows of Mondianan two or three months before the date of the murder.

The prosecution also examined the following—Palaniandy (witness No. 7), Kali Mooppan (witness No. 8), Sinna Naicken (witness No. 9), Kuppa Koravan (witness No. 10), and Kali (witness No. 11). The substance of the evidence of these witnesses will appear from the following observations made by the learned Sessions Judge in his judgment :—

"P. W. 7 is Pujari in a Temple close to the toddy shop. He says that on the day of the occurrence, he saw 3rd accused and a man going along the road, 2nd accused close to the toddy shop and accused No. 1 and P. W. 1 in the toddy shop. He states that no one else was in the toddy shop, whereas the seller (P. W. 8) swears that there were 10 other persons. I am not satisfied that the evidence of either of them is true."

"P. W. 9 states that he met P. W. 1, accused Nos. 1, 3 and another man on the day of the occurrence south of the temple. Shortly afterwards he saw 3rd accused running back and 1st accused and P. W. 1 running to the west. I venture to doubt whether 1st accused would have committed the murder so soon after meeting and talking to him."

"The story told by P. W.s 10 and 11, I altogether decline to believe. 1st accused must have had plenty of opportunities in the jungle of getting rid of the blood of his victim, and I cannot believe that he would have gone back to his village in daylight with his face, body and cloth covered with blood."

On the 11th November 1919 the Assessors delivered their opinion. The first Assessor found Palani Koravan (Accused No. 1) guilty of murder and the Appellant (Accused No. 2) guilty of abetment of murder, and found the third accused not guilty. The second Assessor found all the three accused guilty of the charge laid against them. The Sessions Judge delivered judgment on the 14th November 1919, agreeing with the opinion of the second Assessor. He rejected as untrue all the material evidence directed to proving the commission of the offence except the evidence of the said accomplice. He concluded his judgment in the following terms :—

“ Although I am not satisfied as to the truth of the corroborative evidence, I am, like the Assessors, prepared to accept the uncorroborated story of P. W. 1. No doubt, he admits that 1st accused's brother once gave evidence against him, but that was many years ago and I see no reason to suppose that he has any motive to implicate any of the accused falsely. Stress is laid on the fact that he did not go to the second accused to claim his reward but I attach no significance to the omission. Probably he discussed the matter with his father and came to the conclusion that it was safer to confess.”

“ In the result, I convict the accused of the offences with which they have been charged. Accused Nos. 1 and 2 I sentence to death, subject to the confirmation of the High Court, to which they should appeal in seven days. Third accused was doubtless acting under the influence of second accused. For that reason and on account of her sex I sentence her to transportation for life.”

Against the said conviction appeals were filed in the High Court of Judicature at Madras, which delivered judgment on the 7th January 1920. The learned Judges of the High Court acquitted Rangammal and dismissed the appeal of the Appellant and the other accused. They observed as follows :—

“ We cannot fail to attach considerable weight to the impression made by the demeanour of the witness on the minds of the Judge and Assessors and in spite of the approver's futile attempt to deny his prior knowledge of what was to happen and represent himself as acting under coercion, we are not prepared to take a different view of his evidence as a whole. We are, however, glad to fortify our conclusion by the corroborative evidence above referred to which seems to us to have been rejected by the Sessions Judge on altogether inadequate grounds. These are entirely unconnected with the demeanour of the witnesses and consist of supposed improbabilities and inconsistencies, which impress us very little.”

The Appellant appealed to His Majesty in Council by special leave.

Mt. DeGruyther, K. C. (with Messrs. Bhugwandin Dubé and R. M. Palat) for the Appellant.—There is no evidence as to the identity of the second accused (the Appellant). He is condemned on the sole evidence of the approver and the approver is a member of a criminal tribe.

[SIR JOHN EDGE.—I was on the Board when this appeal was admitted and I can tell you that if I were trying this case in India, I would not have convicted the accused.]

[LORD HALDANE.—We are going on the footing whether we have jurisdiction or not.]

Sir Earle Richards, K. C. and Kenworthy Brown for the Respondent were not called upon.

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by

VISCOUNT HALDANE.—Their Lordships have made it plain during the argument what the ground is on which they are compelled to advise His Majesty to reject this appeal. The rule which has prevailed in recent years is that the King in Council is not a Court of criminal appeal and that the power in the Sovereign to entertain appeals of this character is only to be exercised when there has been such a gross denial of the principles of natural justice as has been defined in numerous cases. Looking at the evidence in this case it is obvious that the appeal cannot be brought within those limits. Therefore, on the simple ground that it would be outside the jurisdiction of the Crown to entertain it, this appeal must be dismissed, and their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly.

Roy, Plaintiff,

Respondent.

Suit for accounts against a rent collector—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Arts. 89, 115 and 116, applicability of—Omission to render accounts, when amounts to a refusal.

A rent-collector, employed under a registered agreement, was called upon to render accounts up to 12th April on or before the 13th May 1914. No accounts were rendered as demanded, and on 11th October 1915 the said rent-collector was dismissed and ordered to render accounts up to date. Subsequently a suit for accounts was instituted on the 27th August 1918:

Held—That Arts. 115 and 116 of the Limitation Act did not apply to the case. In order to make them applicable it must be shown that the suit was not specifically provided for in the schedule. Art. 89 applied to the case, as the term "moveable property" includes money, and consequently excludes the operation of Arts. 115 and 116.

That there having been a demand for accounts, non-compliance with the demand amounted to a refusal and the suit in so far as it claimed accounts up to 12th April 1914 must be deemed barred by limitation as it was instituted after the lapse of three years from the date of refusal, i.e., 13th May 1914.

MADHUSUDAN v. RAKHAL (1), NABIN v. CHANDRA (4) and BHABATARINI v. SHEIK BAHADUR (8) and other cases referred to.

That the agency having been terminated by the dismissal on the 11th October 1915, and the suit having been brought within three years from that date, the Plaintiff was entitled to accounts from the Defendant other than the accounts demanded in April 1914. The suit was thus in time for the accounts from 13th April 1914 to 11th October 1915.

AGAPPA v. CHIDAMBARAM (10) and MUTHIA v. ALAGAPPA (11) and other cases referred to.

This was an appeal against the decree of Babu Surendra Krishna Ghose, Subordinate Judge of Zillah Dinajpur, dated the 30th of April 1920.

The material facts will appear from the judgment.

the Defendant in a suit for accounts. The case for the Plaintiff was that the Defendant was employed as his rent-collector from the 12th December 1907 to the 11th October 1915, although no written agreement was executed and registered till the 5th October 1909. He prayed that a preliminary decree might be passed directing the Defendant to submit a correct account during his term of office and that a final decree might be passed for the amount found due from the Defendant on examination of the accounts. The substantial defence was two-fold, namely, first, that the claim was barred by limitation and, secondly, that in so far as the claim might be found to be not barred by limitation, the accounts had been duly rendered. The Subordinate Judge has decreed the suit and has directed the Defendant to render accounts for the period between the date of his appointment and the date of his dismissal. He has further directed that a commissioner be appointed to determine, on the examination of the accounts, for what amount the Defendant would be liable to the Plaintiff. On the present appeal, the Defendant, has contended that the claim is barred by limitation, and that in any event, the Subordinate Judge should have held that accounts had been duly rendered.

Art. 89 of the schedule to the Indian Limitation Act provides that a suit by a principal against his agent for moveable property received by the latter and not accounted for must be instituted within three years from the date when the account is, during the continuance of the agency, demanded and refused or, where no such demand is made, when the agency terminates. Art. 11 provides that a suit for compensation for the breach of any contract, express or implied, and not in writing registered and not herein specially provided for, must be instituted within three years from the date when the contract is broken or (where there are successive breaches) from the date when the breach in respect of which the suit is instituted occurred or, where the breach is continuing from the date when it ceases. Art. 116 provides that a suit for compensation for the breach of a contract in writing registered must be instituted within six years from the date when the period of limitation begins to run in respect of a suit brought on a similar contract not registered. It was argued at one stage that inasmuch as the contract of agency in the present case was in writing registered, Art. 116 was applicable. But there is no foundation for this contention. To make Art. 116 applicable, it must be shown as provided in Art. 115, that the suit is of a nature not specifically provided for in the schedule. Art. 89, however, plainly applies to a suit of this description, as the term "moveable property" includes money [Madhusudan v. Rakhal Chandra (1), Venkatachalam v. Narayanan (2) and Bishu v. Secretary of State (3)] and consequently excludes the operation of both Arts. 115 and 116. This view is supported by the decision of the Judicial Committee in Nobin Chandra Barua v. Chandra Madhub Barua (4) which reversed the decision of this Court in Chandra Madhub Barua v. Nobin Chandra Barua (5). A similar view had been taken in the cases of Shib Chandra v. Chunder Mohan (6), Hafizuddin v. Jadunath (7), Madhusudan v. Rakhal (1) and Venkatachalam Chetty

PRAM RAM MOOKERJEE v. JAGADISH NATH ROY.

v. A. N. Narayanan Chetty (2). This principle is applicable as appears from the decision of the Judicial Committee in Nobin v. Chandra (4), as also from that of this Court in Bhabatarini v. Sheikh Bahadur (8), even though the contract provides that the accounts are to be rendered from year to year. No doubt, where immoveable property is hypothecated to secure the performance of an obligation undertaken by an agent, a suit by the principal may in essence be regarded as a suit to enforce a charge on immoveable property within the meaning of Art. 132 of the schedule to the Indian Limitation Act and may consequently be governed by the period of 12 years provided by that article. The present case, however, is not of that description, and the question of limitation must be answered with reference to the terms of Art. 89, which contemplates two distinct starting points, namely, first, when the account is during the continuance of the agency, demanded and refused, time runs from the date of refusal, and secondly where no such demand is made, time runs from the date of termination of agency. It is plain that there may be cases where only one of these contingencies has happened. On the other hand, there may be cases where both the contingencies may have happened. It is plain from the evidence that both the contingencies have happened here; there has been a demand and refusal and there also has been a termination of the agency. The results which may be reached in such a case by the application of the two tests would not necessarily be identical. In the case before us, it is clear that on the 21st April 1914 the Plaintiff demanded accounts from the Defendant. The demand was embodied in a letter addressed by the officer of the Plaintiff to the Defendant in the following terms: "You will clear your account by submitting to the Sadar Office the account papers relating to your works up to 1320 B. S. within 30th Baisack. In default take notice that fine will be imposed from the 1st Jhishtha." The demand in essence was for accounts to be submitted up to the 12th April 1914 on or before the 13th May 1914. The evidence makes it abundantly plain that the accounts were not rendered as demanded. Consequently there was a refusal, because as was pointed out in Madhusudan v. Rakhal Chandra (1) which was followed in Bhabatarini v. Sheikh Bahadur (8) an omission to render account where the account is demanded may operate as refusal. It need not be disputed that as pointed out in Madhusudan v. Rakhal (1) and Bhabatarini v. Sheikh Bahadur (8), where the agent in answer to the demand promises to submit the accounts later, his conduct cannot be deemed to amount to refusal. But in the case before us, there was a demand made by the Plaintiff on the Defendant to render accounts, and the Defendant did not comply with the demand; his conduct consequently amounted to refusal. The first contingency mentioned in the third column of Art. 89 consequently happened and the suit in so far as it claims accounts from the Defendant up to the 12th April 1914 must be deemed barred by limitation as it has been instituted after the lapse of three years from the date of refusal, that is, the 13th May 1914.

The second contingency mentioned in the third column has also happened, because the agency has been terminated. This is a question of fact, as explained in

PRAM RAM MOOKERJEE v. JAGADISH NATH ROY.

Nagappa v. Chidambaram (9), Muthiah v. Chidambaram (10), Venkata v. Narayanan (2), Muthiah v. Alagappa (11) and Kuppa-swami v. Verappa (12) and is proved beyond doubt by the letter of the 11th October 1915 which was addressed by an officer of the Plaintiff to the Defendant and was in the following terms: "You are dismissed from the post of Tahsildar of Purganas Pustail and Savraha and Dakhina Ranjan Basu is transferred from the post of Tahsildar of Kushi-danga and is placed in charge of your office, and you are hereby ordered to make over the charge of the original papers, etc., in your custody to the said Basu, to submit the charge sheet signed by both of you and the cash found at your disposal to the Sadar Katchery at head quarters Kumartalah and to render your accounts up to date. Remember that you do not fail in this." The suit was instituted on the 27th August 1918, that is, within three years from the date of dismissal, consequently the Plaintiff is entitled to accounts from the Defendant other than the accounts demanded on the 21st April 1914. The suit is thus in time for the accounts from the 13th April 1914 to the 11th October 1915. In this connection we have to consider whether the Defendant can be called upon to pay to the Plaintiff money which might have been found due if accounts could have been ordered up to the 12th April 1914. In our opinion, the answer must be in the negative. No doubt as was pointed by this Court in the case of Sures Kanta v. Nawab-ali Sikdar (13) when a suit for accounts is decreed the accounts are not necessarily restricted to the three years preceding the institution of the suit or three years preceding the termination of the agency. But in the present case we have already held that by reason of events which have happened the claim for accounts up to the 12th April 1914 had become barred by limitation at the date of the institution of the suit. Consequently the Defendant can be called upon to render accounts only in relation to transactions which took place after the 12th April 1914 up to the 11th October 1915 when he was dismissed from service.

The result is that this appeal is allowed in part and the decree of the Subordinate Judge varied. The decree will direct that the Defendant do render accounts from the 13th April 1914 to the 11th October 1915. We may add that in this view it is not necessary to discuss the question whether the accounts had been rendered for the period antecedent to the 12th April 1914. But the Respondent admitted that accounts had been rendered and adjusted up to the 13th April 1909. So that in any event the claim for accounts from the 12th December 1907 to the 13th April 1909 was bound to fail. The Appellant is entitled to his costs in this Court, but the order for costs made by the Court below will stand, such costs as may be incurred after remand will abide the result.

No. 16 of 1920.

MOOKERJEE, J.
BUCKLAND, J.

21, June.

JAGANNATH MARWARI
and ors., Defendants
Nos. 1 to 3, Appellants,
v.
SM. CHANDNI BIBI and anr., Plaintiffs,
Respondents.

Adverse possession by co-owner—Evidence necessary to establish such adverse possession—Co-owner not precluded from showing his possession adverse—Special evidence necessary in such cases—Conditions to be fulfilled where no notice given—Presumption that co-owner's user not adverse—Substantial building by co-owner, if adverse user—Equity in his favour, on partition—Unregistered deed of gift of property of value exceeding Rs. 100 executed before passing of Transfer of Property Act, effect of—Indian Registration Act (XV of 1877), secs. 17, 49—Adoption, proof of—Hindu law.

An unregistered deed of gift affecting property of value exceeding Rs. 100 executed before the passing of the Transfer of Property Act could not under sec. 49 of the Registration Act affect any immovable property comprised therein or be received in evidence of any transaction affecting such property, though it would be admissible in evidence for a collateral purpose, and might also, if accompanied by delivery of possession, have been validated under the Hindu law which was then in force.

It is not necessary to produce direct evidence of the fact of adoption; where it has taken place long since and where the adopted son has been treated as such by the members of the family and in public transactions, every presumption will be made that every circumstance has taken place which is necessary to account for such a state of things as is proved or admitted to exist.

In order to establish adverse possession as between co-sharers there must be evidence of an open assertion of a hostile title by one of them to the knowledge of the others; mere non-participation in the profits by one party and exclusive occupation by the other is not conclusive.

If possession may be either lawful or unlawful, it must, in the absence of evidence be assumed to be the former, and until something occurs of which the other co-tenants must take notice and which indicates the contrary, the possession taken and held by one co-tenant is the possession in law of all the co-tenants and not adverse to any of them.

Although the possession of one co-tenant is not deemed adverse to the other co-tenants the existence of the relation of co-tenants does not preclude one co-tenant from establishing an adverse possession in fact as against the other co-tenants and though the co-tenant enters in the first instance without claiming adversely his possession afterwards may become adverse.

The evidence to show adverse possession by one co-tenant must be much clearer than between strangers to the title and the hostile intent of the co-tenant in possession must be shown by unequivocal conduct. But the ouster of the other co-tenants in order to render the possession adverse need not be by violence or intimidating expulsion or repulsion; nor need notice of the adverse holding be actually brought home to the other co-tenants by personal or formal communication; it is sufficient if the contrary is not proved that the circumstances show that such knowledge may reasonably be presumed.

If no notice is given to the co-sharer of the denial of his right the occupant must make his possession so visibly hostile and notorious and so apparently exclusive and adverse as to justify the inference of knowledge on the part of the co-owner sought to be ousted and of laches if he fails to discover and assert his rights.

The erection of a substantial building on joint property by one co-owner cannot be regarded as conclusive evidence of ouster.

JAGANNATH MARWARI v. SM. CHANDNI BIBI.

If a joint tenant has in good faith effected valuable improvements upon the common property at his own expense, equity takes that fact into consideration upon a partition and in some suitable way makes an allowance to him therefor, in addition to his rateable share of the property.

This was an appeal against the decree of Babu Bijoy Gopal Chatterjee, Subordinate Judge of Zillah Burdwan at Asansole, dated the 17th of December 1919.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

MOOKERJEE, J.—The subject-matter of the litigation which has resulted in this appeal consists of two parcels of land situated in the town of Raniganj. The Plaintiffs claim an one-fourth share of a lease-hold interest in the land created by the Bengal Coal Company, the admitted landlords. The contesting Defendants deny the alleged title of the Plaintiffs and claim an independent right in themselves in the entire property. The Subordinate Judge has found in favour of the Plaintiffs on the question of title: he has also held that such title was in subsistence at the date of the commencement of the suit and had not been extinguished by adverse possession on the part of the Defendants. In this view, the trial Court has made a decree for possession upon declaration of title and has further directed partition by metes and bounds. On the present appeal, the decree of the Subordinate Judge has been assailed substantially on two grounds, namely, first, that the Plaintiffs have failed to prove the existence at any time of the specific title set up by them; and, secondly, that even if the Plaintiffs had such title at some remote period of time, it had been extinguished long before the date of the suit by adverse possession on the part of the Defendants. For the determination of the questions in controversy which are closely connected and may be conveniently discussed together a brief recital of the history of the devolution of the title to the disputed property is essential.

On the 14th August 1855, the Bengal Coal Company granted a permanent building lease in respect of two plots of land in the town of Raniganj, at an annual rent of Rs. 24, to one Ram Singh Chaudhury. There was some controversy in the Court below upon the question, whether the two plots covered by this lease are identical with the two parcels now in dispute. The schedule attached to the lease sets out the boundaries of the two plots, but, as might have been anticipated, the Subordinate Judge found it difficult to identify all the boundaries after the lapse of sixty years; there can, however, be little room for reasonable doubt as to the identity of the land. Ram Singh Chaudhury continued in possession upon payment of rent to the Bengal Coal Co., till 1864 when he transferred his lease-hold interest to Mungal Chand Baldeodas, who took a half share, Jainarain, who took an one-fourth share, and Panna Lal, who took the remaining one-fourth share. These persons continued in occupation, upon payment of rent to the superior landlords at the rate of Rs. 24 annually for at least a quarter of a century. As there is no indication whatever that they held other lands under the Bengal Coal Co., at the same rate, the Subordinate Judge has, in our opinion, correctly held notwithstanding the difficulty in the identification of boundaries that the land now in dispute is precisely the same.

land as is covered by the lease of the 14th August 1855 granted by the Company.

We have next to consider the history of the share of Panna Lal which form the subject-matter of this litigation. The relationship of the members of his family is set out in the following genealogical table.

The evidence leaves no room for doubt that Mangal Chand Baldeodas, Jainarain and Panna Lal were jointly in enjoyment of the lease-hold property from 1865 till 1882. In the later year, Panna Lal who had lost his son Surajmul and had taken Mahadeo in adoption, retired to Benares. With a view to make provision for the maintenance of his widowed daughter-in-law, Lachmi Bibi, he executed on the 25th June 1882, a deed of gift whereby he gave her a life interest in his share of the disputed property, he further directed that his adopted son Mahadeo would become full owner upon the death of Lachmi Bibi. The document was not registered though it transferred interest in immoveable property of value exceeding Rs. 100. The transaction took place, it will be observed, shortly before the Transfer of Property Act came into force on the 1st July 1882, and was consequently not affected by the operation of sec. 123 which provides that for the purpose of making a gift of immoveable property, the transfer must be affected by a registered instrument, signed by or on behalf of the donor and attested by at least two witnesses. The deed of gift was, however, compulsory registrable under sec. 17 of the Indian Registration Act, 1877, and consequently could not under sec. 49 affect any immoveable property comprised therein or be received as evidence of any transaction affecting such property. It was however admissible in evidence for a collateral purpose, namely, to explain the reason why Lachmi Bibi received the income as if she were a joint owner in possession of the property; Lalla Gopee Chand v. Liakhat Hossain (1), Thakore v. Bamanji (2), Venkatachari v. Rangasam (3) and Varada v. Jeevratnammal (4). It may also be added that if there had been evidence of delivery of possession, the intended gift might have been validated under the Hindu law which was then in force. Kali Das v. Kanaiyahalal (5), Dharamadas v. Nistarini (6), Lakshimoni v. Nityananda (7) and Ramchandra v. Ranjit (8). The true position then was that the intended gift by Panna Lal in favour of his widowed daughter-in-law Lachmi Bibi did not take effect in law. But the evidence makes it abundantly clear that the first Defendant Jagannath (the son of Mangal Chand), who managed the property on behalf of the joint owners, regularly, paid to Lachmi Bibi the surplus income in the one-fourth share of Panna Lal. This continued unquestionably during the life-time of Panna Lal who died as we have seen, in 1892. It is, we think, also indisputable that, as the Subordinate Judge finds, Lachmi Bibi continued to receive the income also during the life-time of Mahadeo who might, before his death on the 12th September 1896, have repudiated the unregistered deed of gift but there is no indication that he took such a step, on the other hand, he apparently acquiesced in the arrangement which his father had made for the maintenance of his sister-in-law. In this connection, we may add that the Subordinate Judge had before him ample materials to justify the conclusion that Mahadeo had been duly adopted by Panna Lal and that Ramnibas had in his turn been validly adopted by Mahadeo. As has been repeatedly ruled, it is not necessary to produce direct evidence of the fact of adoption; where it has taken place long since and where the adopted son has been treated as such by the members of the family and in the public transactions, every presumption will be made that every circumstance has taken place which is necessary to account for such a state of things as is proved or admitted to exist: Rajendra Nath v. Jogendra Nath (9), Lal Achhal Ram v. Kazim Hosain (10), Rup Narain v. Gopal Dhur (11), Sabo Bewa v. Nubodhun (12), Hurdwal v. Raj Kristo (13) and Vyas v. Vyas (14). The Subordinate Judge has further found that Lachmi Bibi continued to receive from Jagannath one-fourth share of the surplus income for several years after the death of Mahadeo, down to 1901. He has, however, held that there is no satisfactory proof that thereafter Lachmi Bibi received the income, but under what circumstances, payment came to be discontinued has not been explained by Jagannath, who is the first Defendant in this suit. We next find that dispute broke out between Lachmi Bibi and Ghandni Bibi, that is, the widows of Surajmul and Mahadeo, and the daughters-in-law of Panna Lal. Matters in difference were referred to arbitration on the 14th July 1909, and the arbitrators made their award on the 12th June 1912. The substance of the award was that Chandni Bibi and Ramnibas would pay to Lachmi Bibi for her life Rs. 12 per month and Lachmi Bibi would, for a consideration of Rs. 1,000, release whatever right or claim she might have to the Ranigunj property under the deed of gift of the 25th June 1882. This award was confirmed and embodied in a formal memorandum, which was executed by all parties concerned on the 31st March 1913, and was registered on the following day. The present suit was then instituted on the 13th October 1917 by Chandni Bibi and Ramnibas against the representatives of Mangalchand, Baldeodas and Jainarain, the three co-sharers of Panna Lal. Upon the question of title, there can, in our opinion, be no vestige of doubt that the claim is well-founded. The only question which requires consideration is, whether the title of the Plaintiffs as joint owners with the contesting Defendants had been extinguished by adverse possession on their part for the statutory period before commencement of the suit. The Subordinate Judge has pronounced in favour of the Plaintiffs, and after careful examination of the evidence, we have arrived at the conclusion that his view is correct.

It is plain that Panna Lal was originally a joint-owner of the disputed property along with his three co-sharers, the predecessors of the Defendants. Even before his retirement to Benares, he did not usually reside at Ranigunj. From 1865 to 1882 the property was looked after by Baldeodas, one of the co-sharers, from whom Panna Lal regularly received his proportionate share of the surplus income, after payment of rent to the superior landlord, the cost of repairs and other incidental charges. The evidence establishes clearly that there was great intimacy between Panna Lal, Baldeodas, Mangul Chand, and his son Jagannath, the first Defendant, and that the wives of Panna Lal and Mangul Chand treated each other as if they were sisters. The management by Baldeodas during this period was plainly on behalf and for the benefit of all the joint-owners, and Panna Lal must be deemed to have been in possession. At the end of the period just mentioned, Panna Lal retired to Benares. At that time, his family consisted of his wife, his widowed daughter-in-law Lachmi Bibi, and his adopted son Mahadeo. He was naturally anxious to make suitable provision for Lachmi Bibi, and on the 25th June 1882, he executed in her favour the deed of gift under which she was to take a life interest in his share of the Ranigunj property and Mahadeo was to take a vested remainder. The deed was neither registered nor accompanied by delivery of possession with the consequence that it did not take effect in law. But it has been proved beyond doubt that the parties acted on the assumption that a valid gift had been made. Panna Lal, at the time of his retirement to Benares, requested the first Defendant Jagannath, the son of his intimate friend Mangul Chand, to look after the property to realise rent from the tenants, to make necessary repairs, to pay rent to the superior landlord and then to give Lachmi Bibi her proportionate share of the profits. Jagannath appears to have faithfully carried out the trust reposed on him and to have regularly paid to Lachmi Bibi her dues down to 1901. Here it may be stated that down to 1890, the property had stood in the books of the landlord in the names of the four persons who had got themselves substituted on their purchase from the original tenant Ram Singh Chaudhury. But in 1891, Jagan-nath managed to have the names of Panna Lal and Joynarain removed from the books of the landlord. It seems probable that this was done in pursuance of a design to appropriate the entire property on a convenient opportunity. But even if he did entertain such a dishonest purpose at the time, he did not venture to carry it into immediate execution and continued to pay the surplus profits to Lachmi Bibi down to 1901. The Subordinate Judge has held that the evidence of payment during the period subsequent to 1901 is not reliable. It is a matter for comment that the account books produced by Jagannath for this period could not be scrutinised in the trial Court, as they were written in the peculiar script used by marwari merchants. We are thus left with the finding of the Subordinate Judge that receipt of surplus income by Lachmi Bibi has not been proved for the period subsequent to 1901. On these facts, the contesting Defendants have argued that the title of the Plaintiffs has been extinguished by adverse possession for the statutory period. We are of opinion that this contention is not well-founded. The evidence clearly establishes that Jagannath was not only a joint-owner, but that he undertook to look after the share of Panna Lal at his express request. The burden lies upon him to establish when he became faithless to the trust imposed upon him and asserted a hostile title in himself to the knowledge of the rightful owner. He has not ventured upon an explanation of his conduct; on the other hand, he has repudiated the title set up by the Plaintiffs as altogether unfounded and has falsely denied that he had ever paid a proportionate share of the usufruct to Lachmi Bibi as claiming title through Panna Lal. The two circumstances relied upon by the Defendants in proof of assertion of hostile title to the knowledge of the rightful owner are by no means conclusive. The fact that a substantial building has been erected on one of the plots by the Defendants, is clearly not conclusive proof of ouster. As was pointed out in Dwijendra Narain v. Purnendunarayan (15) the erection of a substantial building on joint property by one co-owner cannot be regarded as conclusive evidence of ouster, and this accords with the view indicated in Ananda v. Parbati (16) and Upendra v. Umesh (17). The fact that the surplus profits, if any, have not been received by Lachmi Bibi since 1901 is equally inconclusive, in view of principles settled beyond controversy by recent decisions of the Judicial Committee [Corea v. Appuhami (18), Muttu v. Brito (19), Hurdit v. Gurmuk (20) and Varada v. Jeevarathnammal (4)]. Reference may also be made in this connection to the observations of Lord Denman in Culley v. Taylerson (21), which were quoted with approval in the judgment of the Judicial Committee in the case last mentioned.

"Generally speaking one tenant in common cannot maintain an ejectment against another tenant in common, because the possession of one tenant in common is the possession of the other, and, to enable the party complaining to maintain an ejectment, there must be an ouster of the party complaining. But, where the claimant and tenant in common, has not been in the participation of the rents and profits for a considerable length of time and other circumstances concur, the Judge will direct the jury to take into consideration whether they will presume that there has been an ouster; as to which see the cases of Doc Dem Fisher v. Prosser (22), Doc Dem Hollings v. Birds (23) and Doc Dem White v. Cuff (24)."

Among the cases in this Court, reference may be made to the decisions in Jogendra Nath Rai v. Baladco Das (25), Ayenenussa Bibi v. Shaikh Isuf (26), Loke Nath Singh v. Dhakeswar Prosad Narain Singh (27), Narcendra Bhusan Roy v. Jogendra Nath Roy (28) and Balaram v. Shyama Charan (29).

The fundamental rule is that in order to establish adverse possession as between co-sharers, there must be evidence of an open assertion of a hostile title by one of them to the knowledge of the others; mere non-participation in the profits by one party and exclusive occupation by the other is not conclusive. Apart from this, we have the important circumstance that in this case the rightful owner, the second Plaintiff Ramnibas, who, when a child a few months old was taken in adoption in 1892, was a minor till at least 1910; it is thus difficult to appreciate how the contesting Defendants began to hold adversely to the knowledge of the infant in 1901. Indeed, before this action was brought, there was no attempt on the part of the Defendants to rely on adverse possession, their pretence was that they were the rightful owners, and one of them, the first Defendant, has pledged his oath in support of that untrue allegation in the witness box in this suit; they cannot consistently urge that from 1901 the first Defendant began to hold adversely to the knowledge of the rightful owner. [See the observations of Lord Macnaghten in Corea v. Appuhami (18)]. Reliance may further be placed on the judgments of Lord Buckmaster in Hardit v. Gurmuk (20), of Lord Dunedin in Mutter Nayagam v. Brito (19) and of Viscount Cave in Varada v. Jivaratnamal (4), which emphasise the principle that if possession may either be lawful or unlawful, in the absence of evidence, it must be assumed to be the former or in the language of Wood, V. C. in Thomas v. Thomas (30) possession is never considered adverse, if it can be referred to a lawful title, reference may also be made to the decision of this Court in Loke Nath v. Dhakeswar (27), where the cases on the subject were reviewed and the doctrine deducible therefrom formulated. Every co-tenant has the right to enter into and occupy the common property and every part thereof, provided that in so doing he does not exclude his fellow-tenants or otherwise deny to them some right to which they are entitled as co-tenants; and they on their part, may safely assume, until something occurs of which they must take notice and which indicates the contrary, that the possession taken and held by him is held as a co-tenant, and is in law the possession of all the co-tenants, and not adverse to any of them. It cannot be questioned, however, that one co-tenant may oust the others and set up an exclusive right of ownership in himself; and an open, notorious and hostile possession of this character for the statutory period will ripen into title as against the co-tenants who were ousted. Thus, although as a general rule, the possession of one co-tenant is not deemed adverse to the other co-tenants, the existence of the relation of co-tenants does not preclude one co-tenant from establishing an adverse possession in fact as against the other co-tenants and though the co-tenant enters in the first instance without claiming adversely, his possession afterwards may become adverse. In order to render the possession of one co-tenant adverse to the others, not only must the occupancy be under an exclusive claim of ownership, in denial of the rights of the other co-tenants, but such occupancy must have been made known to the other co-tenants, either by express notice or by such open and notorious acts as must have brought home to the other co-tenants' knowledge of the denial of their rights. The same principle is involved in the familiar statement that to enable one of several co-tenants to acquire title by adverse possession as against the others, his possession must be of such an actual, open, notorious, exclusive, and hostile character as to amount to an ouster of the other co-tenants, that is, must have been such as to render him liable to an action of ejectment at the suit of the co-tenants. No comprehensive formula can be framed to test whether the possession of a co-tenant in a particular case is adverse to the other co-tenants. But it has been stated that evidence to show adverse possession by one co-tenant must be much clearer than between strangers to the title and the hostile intent of the co-tenant in possession must be shown by unequivocal conduct. It is indisputable that acts which might properly be held to show adverse possession as between strangers do not necessarily have such effect as between tenants in common; acts of ownership by one co-tenant may not in themselves amount to the disseizin of the other co-tenants, and may, indeed, be so explained as to show a consistency with the joint title. But the ouster of the other co-tenants in order to render the possession adverse, need not be violent or intimidating expulsion or repulsion; nor need notice of the adverse holding be actually brought home to the other co-tenants by personal or formal communication; it is sufficient, if the contrary is not proved, that the circumstances show that such knowledge may reasonably be presumed. From this point of view, it has been maintained that sole possession by a co-tenant becomes adverse to his fellow-tenants by his repudiation or disavowal of the relation of co-tenancy between them; and any act or conduct signifying his intention to hold, occupy and enjoy the premises exclusively and of which the tenant out of possession has knowledge or of which he has sufficient information to put him upon enquiry, amounts to an ouster of the co-tenants; but what is essential is that the overt acts which constitute a definite and continuous assertion of an adverse right must be of an unequivocal character, clearly indicating an assertion of ownership of the premises to the exclusion of the right of the other co-tenants. Tested in the light of these principles, the contention of the Defendants must be deemed unsubstantial. In 1882, the first Defendant undertook, at the request of his co-sharer Panna Lal when he left for Benares, to manage his share of the property and carried out his obligations for a period of twenty-years. He has never explained why, when, and how he cast off his character as co-sharer, manager and asserted a hostile title in himself to the knowledge of the rightful owner. If he renounced the trust in 1901, he is met by the difficulty that the rightful owner at the time was an infant who continued to be a minor for at least nine years thereafter. He may be pertinently asked, when did his repudiation take place, when was his hostile intent manifested by such overt and notorious acts of an unequivocal character, to the denial and exclusion of the right of his co-sharer, as could not be misunderstood by the latter? It may be conceded that a co-sharer cannot close his eyes and ears, nor by wilful inattention obtain an advantage from his lack of diligence. For this reason, it has been held sufficient that the acts of adverse possession are such in their character and attendant circumstances that a man reasonably attentive cannot but realise that an adverse right is asserted against him. But if no notice is given to the co-sharer of the denial of his right, the occupant must make his possession so visibly hostile and notorious and so apparently exclusive and adverse as to justify the inference of knowledge on the part of the co-owner sought to be ousted and of laches if he fails to discover and assert his rights. Tested from the point of view thus indicated, the defence of adverse possession for the statutory period to the knowledge of the rightful owner cannot possibly be deemed to have been established in this case and it has been rightly negated by the Subordinate Judge.

We may add finally that much stress was laid by the Appellants on the fact that they have built a costly structure on the parcel known as the marwaripati property. This however, does not create any real difficulty. The Subordinate Judge has not overlooked the equitable considerations which have been held applicable in such circumstances, as was explained in the cases of Upendra v. Umesh (17) and Narain Lal v. Chulhan Lal (31), where the rule recognised in Leigh v. Dickeson (32) and Brickwood v. Young (33) was applied. In such cases, if a joint owner has in good faith effected valuable improvements upon the common property at his own expense, equity takes that fact into consideration upon a partition and in some suitable way makes an allowance to him therefor, in addition to his rateable share of his property. The Subordinate Judge has given directions in this behalf which will adequately protect the Defendants when the partition is actually effected.

The result is that the decree made by the Subordinate Judge must be affirmed and this appeal dismissed with costs. The cross-objection has not been pressed and is dismissed. Hearing fee Rs. 200.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), Or. VI, r. 17—Amendment of plaint, when permissible—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Arts. 39 and 120.

Courts will allow amendment of pleadings subject to three general conditions, viz., (1) when there is bonâ fides on the part of the applicant, (2) where the amendment does not cause such prejudice to the other party as cannot be compensated by costs, (3) where it does not convert a suit of one character to a suit of another character.

Where the Plaintiffs originally sued for damages and injunction against the Deendant and then by an amendment prayed for declaration of title and then further by another amendment prayed for recovery of possession if in the opinion of the Court he was out of possession, and it was found that the dispossession of the Plaintiffs was more than six years before the institution of the suit:

Held—That the limitation applicable to the claim for damages being three years and that for declaration of title six years the second amendment ought not to have been allowed as its effect was to enlarge the period of limitation to 12 years from the date of the dispossession and to take away from the Defendant his right to defeat the suit as originally framed on the ground of limitation.

That the amendment altered the nature of the suit, and upon the evidence it appeared that there was no bonâ fides on the part of the Plaintiffs.

This was an appeal against the decree of Babu Aparajit Prosad Mukherjee, Subordinate Judge, 3rd Court of Zillah 24-Parganahs, dated the 4th of February 1919, affirming the decree of Babu Narendra Nath Lahari, Munsif 1st Court at Alipore, dated the 8th of February 1918.

On the 29th November 1913 the Plaintiff filed a suit against the Defendant for damages and for permanent injunction. The allegations made in the plaint were that the Defendant having no right or possession in the lands in suit had wrongfully excavated two wells. The plaint contained no prayer for declaration of title. The Defendants filed a written statement on the 12th January 1914 questioning the maintainability of the suit and averred that he was in possession. On the 11th July 1914 the Plaintiff made an application for amendment of the plaint by adding a prayer for declaration of title. That application was refused and the suit was dismissed on the 22nd January 1915 on the ground that it was not maintainable. On appeal this judgment was set aside and the first Court was directed to proceed with trial after amending the plaint in accordance with the Plaintiff's application of the 4th July 1914. After the plaint was so amended another application was filed by the Plaintiff for further amendment. The application prayed for the insertion of the following prayer "if in the opinion of the Court the Plaintiffs are declared to have been dispossessed from the disputed property then the Court may be pleased to pass a decree in favour of the Plaintiff for recovery of possession of the said property." This application was allowed after amendment, an additional issue was framed and parties gave evidence. The Court found that the title was in the Plaintiff and that he was dispossessed by the Defendants within "six, seven or eight years" prior to the institution of the suit and not more. In that view the suit was decreed. The Defendant appealed to the High Court.

Babu Amarendra Nath Bose (for Babu Probodh Chandra Chatterjee) for the Appellant.—The second amendment was not authorised by law. It had the effect of changing the nature of the case. After the first amendment the suit was not maintainable as a Plaintiff out of possession cannot get declaration of title and damages without seeking to recover possession, Jahar Lal Banduri v. Nanda Lal Chaudhuri (4). The Plaintiff came with the allegation that he was in possession. The second amendment proceeded on the allegation that he was out of possession. The different amendments also affected the periods of limitation. The suit as framed was governed by the three years' limitation, after the first amendment it was governed by six years' limitation after the second amendment Plaintiff had 12 years to institute the suit. This is the prejudice from which Defendant suffered. Referred to Doyle v. Kaufman (5), Weldon v. Neal (6), Steward v. North Metropolitan Tramways Co. (7), Rebati Raman Basak v. Harish Chandra Basak (3) and Buzloor Ruheem v. Shamsounnissa (8).

Babu Rupendra Kumar Mitter (with Hemendra Nath Chatterji) for the Respondents.—Principles on which amendment is allowed are two in number (i) to avoid multiplicity of suits, [see Saral Chand v. Mohun Bibi (9)] and (ii) to have the real controversy between the parties tried at one. Referred to Tildesley v. Harper (10), Cropper v. Smith (11) and Hunooman v. Minraj (12).

Here there was no prejudice owing to the amendments. At the time of each of the amendments the suit was not barred. The Defendants cannot reopen the first amendment as no appeal was preferred from the remand order. The second amendment was no doubt not based on the remand order, but the first Court could allow amendment if it thought proper and if not against the settled practice.

With regard to the contention that the second amendment ought not to have been allowed as it changed the character of the suit, my submission is that this rule is not of general application. To be precise the rule is that no amendment will be allowed which changes the nature of the suit, if the application is made at a late stage. One of the objects of pleadings is to prevent the other party from being taken by surprise. See Bullen and Leake, p. 1. Hence when such amendment was applied for before hearing, it ought to be allowed.

XXXVIII, r. 1 of the Supreme Court Rules and notes thereunder. Here after amendment the parties were allowed to and did adduce evidence.

Again the rule that no amendment will be allowed which alters the nature of the case has no application where an alternative case is set up. See Saral Chand v. Mohun Bibi (9), wherein the action was originally brought on a contract, but the Court allowed an amendment which had the effect of making an alternative case for the Plaintiff based on tort.

There is also an additional reason here why the order allowing amendment should be upheld. If it is reversed now the Plaintiff would be prejudiced as he would be met by the plea of limitation if a fresh suit be brought. See Zahoor Ali v. Rutta Koer (13).

Babu Amarendra Nath Bose in reply.

This appeal arises out of a suit instituted on the 29th November 1913, which was originally framed as one for damages and permanent injunction. It was alleged that the Plaintiffs had title to and possession of the land in suit, and that the Defendants had trespassed upon the land. The Defendants on the 12th January 1914 filed a written statement in which they pleaded that the Plaintiffs having no right to or possession of the land, the suit for damages in the form laid could not proceed according to law. On the 11th July 1914 the Plaintiffs by a petition prayed for amendment of the plaint with a prayer for declaration of their title and, it was alleged that the Plaintiffs had been holding khas possession of the land, and had acquired title by adverse possession.

The case came on for hearing on the 22nd January 1915, and the Court of first instance found that the Plaintiffs were out of possession of the disputed land before the institution of the suit, and that the suit for injunction and damages could not, under the circumstances be maintained although it came to the conclusion that Plaintiffs' title was proved, and Defendants had failed to prove adverse possession for 12 years.

Against that decree the Plaintiffs appealed and the lower Appellate Court was of opinion that the order of the Court of first instance disallowing the prayer for amendment of the plaint by addition of a prayer for declaration of the Plaintiff's title to the land was not a proper one, as none of the parties could have been prejudiced by the grant of the prayer at that stage, and as the question of title was material for the proper decision of the suit. That Court accordingly remanded the case to the lower Court for an amendment of the plaint in terms of the Plaintiffs' petition and for a retrial of the suit after such amendment. After the case went back on remand, the plaint was amended with a prayer for declaration of Plaintiffs' title. Then on the 16th January 1917, the Plaintiffs put in another petition for further amendment of the plaint with a prayer for recovery of possession, and the prayer which they wanted to add by way of amendment was as follows :—“Or if in the opinion of the Court the Plaintiffs are declared to have been dispossessed, then the Court may be pleased to pass a decree in favour of the Plaintiffs for recovery of possession of the said property." This was objected to on behalf of the Defendants on the ground that the amendment was illegal, and altered the character of the suit. This objection was however disallowed, and the case was tried out with the result that the Plaintiffs' suit was decreed by the Court of first instance, and that decree was confirmed on appeal by the lower Appellate Court. The Defendants have appealed to this Court.

The main question for consideration is whether the amendment of the plaint in so far as the prayer for recovery of possession was concerned, ought to have been allowed. There is no doubt that the Code gives ample power to the Court for amendment. Or. VI, r. 17 lays down that the Court may at any stage of the proceedings allow either party to alter or amend his pleadings in such a manner and on such terms as may be just, and all such amendments shall be made as may be necessary for the purpose of determining the real questions in controversy between the parties. The general conditions on which amendments should be granted have been summarised by Mr. Justice Woodroffe, in the case of Upendra Narain Roy v. Rai Janaki Nath Roy (1). The learned Judge observed:—"The Court being desirous of getting at the true facts will allow an amendment subject to three general conditions: bona fides on the part of the applicant, possibility of amendment without such prejudice to the other party as cannot be compensated by costs (such as prejudice to rights accrued) and subject to this, that the amendment is not such as to turn a suit of one character into a suit of another character. This statement is not made as being exhaustive, but as embodying what are perhaps the three chief conditions on which amendment may be allowed." See also Kali Das v. Draupadi (2) and Rebati Raman v. Harish Chandra (3).

Now what are the facts of the present case? As stated above, the Plaintiffs in their plaint asserted that they were in possession, and on that footing claimed damages and injunction; the Defendants denied the Plaintiffs' title, and pointed out that the suit could not be maintained as framed, as they were out of possession. Then the Plaintiffs applied for an amendment of the plaint. The only amendment which they wanted was that there should be a prayer for declaration of their title. That was disallowed by the Court of first instance. The Appellate Court by a remand order directed an amendment in terms of the petition and that order was carried out.

It was not until the 16th January 1917 that the Plaintiffs put in a petition for further amendment, namely, for recovery of possession. It is to be observed that the Plaintiffs adduced evidence to show that they were actually in possession of the property and more than three years after the institution of the suit, and in spite of the fact that the Defendants pleaded that the Plaintiffs were out of possession, they persisted in proceeding with the suit without any prayer for recovery of possession. In these circumstances, it is difficult to hold that there was bona fides on the part of the Plaintiffs as the omission to claim a prayer for recovery of possession appears to have been deliberate.

In the next place there is no doubt that the Defendants have been prejudiced by the second amendment. It is found that the dispossession of the Plaintiffs took place more than six years before the institution of the suit. The suit as originally framed was one for damages and injunction and the prayer for declaration of title was added by the first amendment. No injunction was granted as it was thought unnecessary. The limitation applicable to the claim for damages is three years under Art. 39 of the Limitation Act, and the claim for declaration of title added by the first amendment is governed by Art. 120. The Court gave a decree for declaration of the Plaintiff's title, and mesne profits as damages. If the plaint had not been amended, for the second time, by adding a prayer for recovery of possession, the Defendants could have, upon the findings, succeeded in defeating the Plaintiffs' suit as originally framed or even as it stood after the first amendment, on the ground that it was barred by limitation. By the second amendment of the plaint, they were deprived of such a right. It is true that the Defendants not having appealed against the order of remand directing amendment, were debarred by the provisions of sec. 105, sub-sec. 2 of the Code from disputing the correctness of the order. But the remand order directed an amendment only so far as the prayer for declaration of title was concerned, and conceding that the Court of first instance had power to order further amendment under the order for retrial, the Defendants are not precluded by the provisions of sec. 105 from showing that they had been prejudiced by the further amendment made in the course of the retrial. They might not have objection to the order of remand directing amendment so far as declaration of title was concerned, nor to a retrial, and might not have therefore appealed against the said order. But they could not have anticipated that the Court would allow further amendment by adding a prayer for recovery of possession which was contrary to the case made in the plaint and we do not think that they are precluded by sec.

105 from raising the question of prejudice caused by the further amendment. The question whether an amendment should be allowed is a matter within the discretion of the Court, but the order for amendment appears to have been made without considering whether the Defendants would be prejudiced thereby. There is no doubt that they have been prejudiced.

It is to be observed that in the present case it was not a bona fide mistake on the part of the Plaintiffs; they were perfectly aware that they were out of possession, especially so, as it appears from the judgment of the Court of first instance that in a criminal case brought by the Plaintiffs against the Defendants some time before the institution of this suit which resulted in the dismissal of the case, the Criminal Court referred the Plaintiffs to the Civil Court. Instead of bringing a suit for recovery of possession they alleged that they were in possession and claimed damages and injunction against the Defendants, and adduced evidence to show that they were in possession and when the Court found that they were not in possession, it was then, as stated above, more than three years after the institution of the suit, that they prayed for amendment claiming recovery of possession which altered the nature of the suit. Even then they stated that "if in the opinion of the Court it be declared, that they were out of possession," then an amendment might be granted. Under Or. VII r. 1, cl. (e) the Plaintiffs shall state the facts constituting the cause of action and when it arose. The Plaintiffs were, therefore, bound to state when they were dispossessed and how, in order that the Defendants might meet such a case. There was thus, in fact no proper application for amendment, nor was the cause of action (for recovery of possession) properly stated as required by law.

GYANENDRA NATH CHAKRAVORTI v. PARESH NATH PAL.

It is to be observed that the Plaintiffs, having been found to be out of possession before the institution of the suit, were bound to show that they were in possession within 12 years of the suit, the burden of proof being upon them. But the Courts below have discussed the question whether the Defendants have shown that they had been in adverse possession for 12 years, and although there is a finding that the Plaintiffs were in possession within 12 years, the Courts below have really proceeded upon the ground that the Defendants' adverse possession for 12 years had not been proved, and the finding upon the question of limitation appears to be based upon the decision of the question of adverse possession by the Defendants.

In all the circumstances of the case we think that the Court ought not to have allowed the amendment. We are accordingly of opinion that the decrees of the lower Courts should be set aside and the Plaintiffs' suit dismissed. But as the question of title was found in favour of the Plaintiff, we direct that each party do bear its own costs throughout.

[CIVIL REVISIONAL JURISDICTION.]

RULE NO. 522 OF 1921.

CHATTERJEA, J.
CUMING, J.	H. D. CHATTERJEE,
1921,	Petitioner,
Heard, 12 and	v.

Rent Controller, order of, if may be revised by the High Court—Rent Controller, if may fix standard rent during currency of lease—President of Improvement Trust Tribunal, power of, to revise Rent Controller's order which did not fix standard rent—Act, III, B. C., of 1930, secs. 15 (1), 18—Government of India Act of 1915, sec. 107.

The Rent Controller's Court is a Court of Civil Jurisdiction.

The High Court has the power of revising the Rent Controller's orders under its general powers of superintendence under sec. 107 of the Government of India Act.

There is nothing to prevent the Rent Controller from fixing the standard rent during the currency of a lease.

The President of the Improvement Trust Tribunal had no jurisdiction to revise the Rent Controller's order when the latter did not fix a standard rent.

This was a Rule granted on the 1st August 1921 against an order of the Rent Controller (Mr. B. D. Banerjee), dated 11th July 1921, an application for revision of which order was rejected by the President of the Improvement Trust Tribunal (Mr. S. C. Banerjee), on the 25th July 1921.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

Babu Surendra Madhab Mullick for the Petitioner.

Babus Charu Chandra Biswas and Manindra Kumar Bose for the Opposite Party.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

This was a Rule calling upon the Opposite Party to show cause why the application (made by the Petitioner) under sec. 18 of the Rent Act for revision of the order of the Rent Controller should not be heard by the President of the Improvement Tribunal: or, in the alternative, why the order of the Rent Controller should not be set aside and such other order passed as to this Court may seem proper.

It appears that the Petitioner applied to the Rent Controller for fixing the standard rent of certain premises occupied by the Opposite Party as tenant.

H. D. CHATTERJEE v. L. B. TRIBEDI.

The Rent Controller discussed certain matters in his judgment and was of opinion that the rent paid by the tenant was fair, but he did not fix the standard rent and dismissed the application. The Petitioner then applied to the President of the Tribunal under sec. 18 of the Rent Act. The learned President held that the order of the Controller could not be regarded as a decision fixing the standard rent of the premises concerned, and that sec. 18 of the Act did not confer any jurisdiction upon him to revise such an order. The Petitioner thereupon obtained this Rule.

As there was no decision by the Rent Controller fixing the standard rent the learned President was right in holding that he had no jurisdiction under sec. 18 of the Rent Act to revise the order.

The next question is whether the order of the Rent Controller should be set aside by us and he should be directed to fix the standard rent.

A preliminary objection has been taken by the Opposite Party to the hearing of this Rule on the ground that the Rent Controller is not a Court of Civil Jurisdiction, and that even if he is, the High Court has no power of revising his orders.

Now, r. 24 of the Rules framed by the Local Government under sec. 23 of the Calcutta Rent Act, lays down that in all proceedings before them under the Act, the Controller and the President of the Tribunal shall have all the powers possessed by a Civil Court for the trial of suits. See also r. 4 which says that in making inquiries under the Act, the Controller or President of the Tribunal shall follow, as nearly as may be, the procedure laid down in the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, for the regular trial of suits, the substance only of the evidence being recorded as in appealable cases.

It is clear, therefore, that the Rent Controller is a Court of Civil Jurisdiction.

The same view has been taken in Civil Revision Case No. 322 of 1921 [Bata Krishna Pramanik v. A. K. Roy (1)].

Then the question is whether the High Court has the power of revising the order of the Rent Controller under sec. 107 of the Government of India Act.

There is no doubt that under sec. 15 of the Charter Act (now sec. 107 of the Government of India Act), the High Court has powers of superintendence over all Courts subject to its Appellate Jurisdiction.

The question whether the High Court has the power of revising the orders of Courts (other than Civil Courts) exercising civil jurisdiction, under its general powers of Superintendence under sec. 15 of the Charter has been considered in several cases in connection with orders of the Collector's Court under Rent Act X of 1859, and under the Land Acquisition Act. One of the earliest cases on the point is Govind Coomar Chowdhuri v. Kristo Coomar Chowdhuri (2), where it was held by the Full Bench that the High Court has the power of revising an order of the Deputy Collector under Act X of 1859. In the case of Nilmoney Singh Deo v. Taranath Mukherjee (3), it was held by the Judicial Committee that the High Court has power to interfere with the orders of the Collector under Act X of 1859. See also the case of Chaitan Patjosi Mahapatra v. Kunja Behary Patnaik (4). Then, again, in proceedings under the Land Acquisition Act, it has been held that the order of the Collector when acting judicially is subject to revision by the High Court. See The Administrator-General of Bengal v. Land Acquisition Collector, 24-Pergunnahs (5)

Kanai Lal De* (7)], the High Court, Appellate Side, revised in order of the Rent Controller and in Civil Revision Case No. 322 of 1921 [Bata Krishna Pramanik v. A. K. Roy (1)], it revised an order of the President of the Tribunal.

It is to be observed that under sec. 18 of the Rent Act an application against the decision of the Controller fixing the standard rent is to be made to the President of the Tribunal appointed under sec. 72 of the Calcutta Improvement Act in respect of premises in Calcutta, and such an application in respect of premises outside Calcutta is to be made to the principal Civil Court of Original Jurisdiction in the District. Such principal Civil Court is certainly within the Appellate Jurisdiction of the High Court. As stated above, the President of the Tribunal is also within the Appellate (Revisional) Jurisdiction of this Court.

We are accordingly of opinion that this Court has the power of revision under its general powers of superintendence over the Rent Controller's Court under sec. 107 of the Government of India Act.

The next question is whether in the present case the order of the Rent Controller should be revised.

Now, sec. 15, sub-sec. (1) lays down that the Controller shall, on application made to him by any landlord or tenant, grant a certificate certifying the standard rent of any premises leased or rented by such landlord or tenant, as the case may be.

The Rent Controller has in the present case gone into the question of rent, and has expressed his opinion that the existing rent is fair, and even in one place of his judgment he has stated that the present rent may be the standard rent of the premises under sec. 2 (f) (ii) but he has not fixed the standard rent. If he had fixed the standard rent, the Petitioner might have asked the President of the Tribunal to revise the order under sec. 18 of the Act.

It is contended on behalf of the Opposite Party that the Petitioner applied for fixing the standard rent and not for certifying the standard rent. But the standard rent cannot be certified unless it is first fixed.

The Rent Controller says that the application does not lie because it was made before the expiry of the lease. We do not see, however, anything to prevent an application being made before the expiry of the lease for fixing the standard rent.

We are of opinion that the Rent Controller was asked to fix the standard rent and certify it under the provisions of sec. 15 of the Act.

We do not express any opinion on any question as to the merits of the case which must be dealt with by the Rent Controller.

We accordingly set aside the order of the Rent Controller and direct him to fix the standard rent according to law. Costs two gold mohurs, to abide the result.

We trust the case will be taken up by the Rent Controller as early as possible.

Respondents.

Mahomedan Law—Acknowledgment as son, what is necessary to its validity—Valid acknowledgment, operates as declaration of legitimacy and not as legitimation—Presumption of fact, rebuttable by proof of impossibility of marriage or no marriage—Concurrent findings of fact.

In Mohammedan law, the acknowledgment by one person of another as his legitimate son is of no avail, in the face of a finding that there was no marriage.

In Mohammedan law, such an acknowledgment is a declaration of legitimacy and not a legitimation—a declaration which, though it cannot be withdrawn, may be contradicted.

By the Mohammedan law, a son to be legitimate must be the offspring of a man and his wife or of a man and his slave; any other offspring is the offspring of zina; that is, illicit connection, and cannot be legitimate. The term "wife" necessarily connotes marriage, but, as marriage may be constituted without any ceremonial, the existence of marriage in any particular case may be an open question. Direct proof may be available, but if there be no such, indirect proof may suffice. One of the ways of direct proof is by an acknowledgment of legitimacy in favour of a son. This acknowledgment must be not merely of sonship, but must be made in such a way that it shows that the acknowledgor meant to accept the other not only as his son but as his legitimate son. It must not be impossible upon the face of it, i.e., it must not be made when the ages are such that it is impossible in nature for the acknowledgor to be the father of the acknowledgee, or when the mother spoken to in an acknowledgment, being the wife of another, or within prohibited degrees of the acknowledgor, it would be apparent that the issue would be the issue of adultery or incest. The acknowledgment may be repudiated by the acknowledgee. But if none of these objections occur, then the acknowledgment has more than a mere evidential value. It raises a presumption of marriage—a presumption which may be taken advantage of either by a wife-claimant, or a son-claimant. Being, however, a presumption of fact, and not juris et de jure, it is, like every other presumption of fact, capable of being set aside by contrary proof. The result is that a claimant-son who has in his favour a good acknowledgment of legitimacy is in this position; the marriage will be held proved and his legitimacy established unless the marriage is disproved. Until the claimant establishes his acknowledgment the onus is on him to prove a marriage. Once he establishes an acknowledgment, the onus is on those who deny a marriage to negative it in fact.

MUHAMMAD ALLAHADAD KHAN v. MUHAMMAD ISMAIL KHAN (1) and SADIK HUSAIN KHAN v. HASHIM ALI KHAN (2) followed.

Where the majority of the Judges in the Appellate Court affirmed the Trial Court's finding that the marriage was disproved, the finding was a concurrent finding which bound the Board.

To constitute such a finding, the fact or facts found must be such as are necessary for the foundation of the proposition of law to be subsequently applied to them.

SYED HABIBUR RAHMAN CHOWDHURY v. SYED ALTAF ALI CHOWDHURY.

High Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal in its Civil Appellate Jurisdiction, affirming a judgment and decree, dated 14th May 1917, of Mr. Justice Greaves of the said High Court, in its Ordinary Original Civil Jurisdiction.

The main question for determination in the appeal, was as to whether the Courts below were right in refusing to grant the Plaintiffs-Appellants a declaration that the first Plaintiff-Appellant, Syed Habibur Rahman Chowdhury, was the legitimate son and sole heir of the late Nawab Syed Abdus Sobhan Chowdhury.

The facts connected with this litigation may be shortly stated. The said Nawab Sobhan was a Mohomedan zemindar governed by the Sunni School of Mohomedan law. He was known as the Nawab of Bogra and had also a place of residence in Calcutta at 21 Weston Street. He was married only once and the name of his wife was Syedani Tahurunessa Chowdhurani, a lady possessed of considerable properties. The only issue of this union was a daughter named Syedani Altafunnessa Chowdhurani, who was married to Syed Nawab Ali Chowdhury. She had two children by him, one a son, the first Respondent, and the other a daughter called Zohara.

In 1890 Nawab Sobhan's wife, Tahurunnessa, was dying, and before her death on the 8th March of that year she executed a waqfnama dedicating to God all her properties. Under that deed she appointed herself Matwali for her life-time, after her, her husband Nawab Sobhan, and then their daughter Altafunnessa and her descendants. Tahurunnessa died on the 28th March 1890, and her daughter Altafunnessa died on or about the 24th April 1897.

On the 19th February 1902, Nawab Sobhan executed four deeds whereby he gave up in favour of his daughter's son, the first Respondent, all but a bare life interest in practically the entirety of the properties possessed by him, both those which had come to him from his father, and also those which came to him from his wife. The properties which he owned not covered by the said deeds were few and insignificant in value. In one of these deeds there was a recital that Nawab Sobhan "has had born to him an 'only child being a daughter named Syedani Altafunnessa Bibi,'" and that her son the first Respondent was the only male descendant of the said Nawab Sobhan.

On the 2nd July 1915 Nawab Sobhan died leaving the small amount of property above referred to, which was not included either in the waqfnama of 1890 or the settlement of 1902. This led to a dispute between the first Respondent and Respondents Nos. 2, 3 and 4, who were the sons of a predeceased brother of Nawab Sobhan and as such, therefore, also his legal heirs. The first Respondent claimed that such properties were accretions to the waqf properties and the said other Respondents contended that they were the properties of the deceased Nawab. Respondents, however, settled their differences, and on the 28th July 1915 obtained a consent decree in the terms of the settlement. As a result of the settlement each of the Respondents obtained possession of some portion of such properties.

On the 26th August 1915 the present suit was instituted in the High Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal, in the Ordinary Original Civil Jurisdiction, by the first Appellant against the first four Respondents. In his plaint the Plaintiff alleged, inter alia, that Nawab Sobhan had two wives, who predeceased him, the first being the said Tahurunnessa and the second "one Mozelle, a Jewess converted to the Mohomedan faith," that by his second wife Nawab Sobhan "had issue one son the Plaintiff Syed Habibur Rahman Chowdhury and one daughter named Sakina Khatun alias Hanna, who died in the life-time of her father" the said Nawab Sobhan; that the said Syed Nawab Ali Chowdhury, after the death of his wife Nawab Sobhan's daughter Altafunnessa, married Sakina Khatun, that he, the Plaintiff, was the only heir of the late Nawab Sobhan according to the Sunni school of Mohomedan law and was solely entitled to the possession of the estate and properties left by him, and that the Defendants were wrongfully in possession of the same and denied the right and title of the Plaintiff Habib thereto. He therefore claimed a declaration that he was the sole heir of Nawab Sobhan and as such was and had since his death been entitled to the possession and enjoyment of the estates and properties left by him and the rents and profits thereof. He also claimed other consequential reliefs.

In October 1915 the Plaintiff sold one-half of his alleged right in the properties claimed to the second Respondent Mrs. Hyam who was joined as a party Plaintiff in the suit in February 1916, and the prayer for relief as claimed was amended. The Plaintiffs prayed for a declaration that the Plaintiff Habib is the sole heir of Nawab Sobhan and that Habib as such from the date of Nawab Sobhan's death, viz., 2nd July 1915, up to the 11th October 1915, was entitled to the possession and enjoyment of the estates and properties left by Nawab Sobhan, and that Habib and the Plaintiff Mrs. Hyam were each entitled to a moiety of such estate.

Two written statements were filed, one by the first Respondent and the other by Respondents Nos. 2, 3 and 4. At the trial the Defendants admitted that Sakina and Habib were the children of Mozelle and Nawab Sobhan. Their defence, so far as now material, was that Nawab Sobhan was never married to Mozelle Cohen, that she was his mistress, and that Sakina and Habib were illegitimate. The Defendants stated that the name of Mozelle Cohen's daughter was Hanna until conversion to the Mohomedan faith on the 1st August 1903, when she was named Sakina Khatun and that she was thereafter married to Syed Nawab Ali Chowdhury.

After the hearing had commenced the plaint was again amended by adding para. (7A) stating that Nawab Sobhan had acknowledged Habib as his legitimate son, and that in case Habib failed to prove the marriage between his father and mother he relied on legitimation by acknowledgement.

Issues were framed as raised by the parties at the trial and the following alone are material for this report.

(1) Was Mozelle Cohen married to Sobhan?

(2) If so, was Habib the legitimate son of Sobhan and Mozelle Cohen?

(6) Was there any acknowledgment as pleaded in paragraph 7 (A) of the plaint, and if so what is its legal effect?

Interrogatories were administered to the Plaintiff Habib and in answer to Interrogatory 4 he stated that his mother was married twice first to his father the late Nawab Sobhan that he did not know the date or place of the marriage, that he was informed that she was married again to Aga Mohiuddin Khan and that this later marriage took place in or about the year 1899 and that he did not know where it took place.

In answer to Interrogatory 7 he stated that Mozelle Cohen was converted to the Mohomedan faith at the time of her marriage with his father but that he did not know the date on which she changed her religion or the place.

In answer to Interrogatory 10 he stated that he was informed that before Nawab

SYED HABIBUR RAHMAN CHOWDHURY v. SYED ALTAF ALI CHOWDHURY.

Sobhan married Mozelle Cohen he was living in the upper floor of No. 161, Lower Chitpur Road in Calcutta and that Habib's mother and her family were living in the ground floor of the same premises, that an acquaintance was there formed and ended in their marriage according to Mohomedan rites sometime in 1884 in Calcutta.

In answer to further Interrogatories the Plaintiff Habib stated that the full name of his mother was "Mozelle Benjamin Cohen" and her father's name was Benjamin Cohen.

At the trial a mass of evidence both oral and documentary was adduced by the parties on both sides. No evidence whatever was adduced by the Plaintiff to prove the alleged marriage of his mother to the said Nawab Sobhan. Abundant evidence both oral and documentary was adduced by the Respondents which established the fact found by the concurrent judgments of both the lower Courts that Habib's mother was Nawab Sobhan's mistress and not his wife.

On the 14th May 1917 Mr. Justice Greaves delivered judgment in favour of the Defendants and passed a decree dismissing the suit with costs. The learned Judge summarised as follows the evidence relating to the history of Mozelle:—

"She appears first in 1884 living on the bottom floor of a house in Lower Chitpur Road where Sobhan occupies the upper floor, she is then between 11 and 13 years of age and living with her parents and is visited by Sobhan. In 1885 (see the recital in the lease of 1st August 1886) she goes with her sister, said to be in the keeping of some man, to 13 Radha Bazar Lane and in January and February of 1887 she is in receipt of a salary or allowance from Sobhan, and sometime in that year (in September) she marries one Ger and is said to have been divorced soon after marriage, namely, in January 1888; in February 1888 she is engaged by Sobhan (see the diary), and dismissed and paid in full on the 31st December 1890; in March 1891 she is described as a Jewess and a widow in the Bogra Savings Bank account, in June 1891 she is re-engaged by Sobhan as from January (see the diary), and in this year Sakina is born. In January 1893 she is described as the wife of Ezekiel Benjamin Cohen in the lease of 13 Radha Bazar Lane, from April to July 1893 she is still being paid salary and allowance by Sobhan, and in June of that year Habib is born. From 1891 to 1896 she is attending nautch parties with Sobhan where she meets the mistresses of other men, she is during the period, and before and after, visiting Sobhan at Weston Street and is taken to Bogra where she lives in a house in the Bazar. In June 1899 in the sale agreement she is described as Bibi Mozli Cohen, daughter of Benjamin Cohen, and in December of that year in the Radha Bazar lease she is described as Mozli B. Cohen, daughter of Benjamin B. Cohen, Mussalman; in March 1903 she is attended by Harinath Kabiraj who describes her as a prostitute, and in that year she dies in the Campbell Hospital, and there is some evidence that at this time she was living with one Aga Mohiuddin either as his mistress or wife. The whole of this story seems to me to irresistibly establish that she was a woman of loose morals and a mistress of Sobhan and the story seems to me quite inconsistent with the suggestion that she at any time became his wife, and to entirely negative any idea of marriage."

The learned Judge held that the following points were established in favour of the Defendants:—

(1) That Mozelle never lived in Nawab Sobhan's house, either at Calcutta or Bogra, and was never a member of his household or treated in any way to suggest that she was his wife;

(2) That Habib was never introduced to Nawab Sobhan's friends as his legitimate son and successor;

(3) That Nawab Sobhan made no provision for Habib, and in his life-time so dealt with his properties as to leave only a small portion available for his heirs whoever they might be;

SYED HABIBUR RAHMAN CHOWDHURY v. SYED ALTAF ALI CHOWDHURY.

(4) That Nawab Sobhan in writing to Mozelle neither addressed her as one would expect a wife to be addressed nor treated her as one;

(5) That the diaries "Exhibits 07 and 08" contain entries which one might expect in the case of a mistress but not in that of a wife;

(6) That the entries in the directories, "Exhibits 24-30," from materials supplied on Nawab Sobhan's directions, make no mention of Mozelle as his wife or of Sakina and Habib as his children, and

(7) That property was conveyed to Mozelle under Nawab Sobhan's directions in the name of Mrs. Cohen.

The learned Judge also summarised the points in favour of the Plaintiffs as follows:—

(1) That Habib was admittedly the son of Nawab Sobhan by Mozelle;

(2) That Habib was entered at the Calcutta Madrassa as Nawab Sobhan's son;

(3) That Habib was sent to Aligarh as Nawab Sobhan's Son;

(4) That Habib was designated by Nawab Sobhan in his letters to the Collector of Chittagong as his son, and was described as belonging to a family of position and antiquity;

(5) That Habib was similarly designated and described by Nawab Sobhan at his interview with Miss Sorabji; and

(6) That Habib was brought up in Nawab Sobhan's house-hold after his mother's death.

After discussing the law bearing on the case the learned Judge recorded his findings on the issues now material in the concluding portion of his judgment as follows:—

"With regard to the first issue, I hold that upon the evidence the long connection of Sobhan and Mozelle was inconsistent with the relation of husband and wife, and that Mozelle is, upon the evidence, proved to be merely his concubine, and that Mozelle Cohen was not married to the deceased Nawab. As to the second issue, I hold that the Plaintiff Habib was not the legitimate son of the Nawab and Mozelle Cohen. . . . With regard to the sixth issue, I find upon the evidence that there was no general acknowledgment by Sobhan of Habib as his son, but that he acknowledged him as his son for the purposes of his entry in the Calcutta Madrassa and to Aligarh, and that he acknowledged him as his son to Miss Sorabji and to the Collector of Chittagong for the purposes of inducing a marriage between Habib and the daughter of Salamat Ali Khan, but having regard to the other evidence in the case, I do not find that these acknowledgments were made by Sobhan with the intention of conferring upon Habib the status of legitimacy."

"This concludes the case, but I desire to add that I think that it is possible from Sobhan's acknowledgments of Habib as his son taken by themselves to infer an intention to confer by them the status of legitimacy, but even so, I do not think I am thereby bound, even, provided as here marriage was possible, to infer marriage; but I think I am entitled to consider the evidence of marriage and if I come to the conclusion that marriage has not in fact taken place, I think I am entitled to consider the acknowledgments in light of this evidence, and assuming I am satisfied as here that there was in fact no marriage, I do not think these acknowledgments confer the status of legitimacy, and I think I am acting in accordance with the decisions of the Judicial Committee and certainly in accordance with their last reported decision, in so deciding. The suit accordingly fails and must be dismissed with costs."

Against the said judgment and decree of Greaves, J., the Plaintiffs appealed to the said High Court in its Civil Appellate Jurisdiction. While the appeal was pending Plaintiff Habib was adjudicated an insolvent upon his own petition, and the Official Assignee, having refused to prosecute the appeal, was made a Respondent pro forma.

The appeal was heard by Sanderson, C.

SYED HABIBUR RAHMAN CHOWDHURY v. SYED ALTAF ALI CHOWDHURY.

J. and Woodroffe and Chitty, JJ., who on the 1st August 1918 delivered separate judgments in favour of the Defendants dismissing the appeal with costs. The learned Chief Justice held that it had been proved that Mozelle was never married to the late Nawab Sobhan, that at the time the Nawab had relations with Mozelle she was no more than his kept mistress and that the Plaintiff Habib was in fact the illegitimate son of the late Nawab Sobhan. As to the alleged acknowledgments he came to the conclusion that having regard to all the facts of the case it must be held that the late Nawab Sobhan did not intend thereby to acknowledge Habib as his son, so as to confer upon him the status of legitimacy for all purposes and in all respects. He also held that having regard to the findings that Mozelle was not married to the Nawab Sobhan and that Habib was not his legitimate son, the alleged acknowledgments (assuming though not deciding that they were acknowledgments within the real meaning of the Mohomedan law) could not and did not make Habib legitimate.

Woodroffe, J., held that the Plaintiffs had not established an acknowledgment in the sense of a clear intention to confer legitimacy on Habib, that what was relied on as an acknowledgment was not intended to confer legitimacy on the Plaintiff Habib, the natural son of the late Nawab Sobhan, that the onus was on the Plaintiffs to show that Habib was legitimate, that, on the evidence, including the alleged admissions, the statements made to Miss Sorabji and the Collector, the Plaintiffs had not succeeded in showing that.

Mr. Justice Chitty held that the alleged marriage of Mozelle and the Nawab Sobhan was disproved and as a consequence Habib had been proved to be illegitimate and could not be rendered legitimate by any acknowledgment or recognition of legitimacy on the part of his natural father Nawab Sobhan. He also held that the Plaintiffs had failed to prove any acknowledgment under Mohomedan law, that is, a recognition of the Plaintiff Habib's legitimacy by the late Nawab Sobhan.

In the result a decree, dated the 1st August 1918, dismissing the appeal with costs was passed.

Against the said judgment and decree of the Appellate Court the Plaintiffs appealed to His Majesty in Council.

Sir John Simon, K. C. (with Mr. L. DeGruyther, K. C. and Mr. S. Hyam) for the Appellants.—Here the Appellant is admitted to be the natural son. The question is, is he legitimate? My case is that where there are acknowledgments as recognised by Muhamadan law by the father, as there are here, there is "legitimation." There is no direct evidence of marriage. The acknowledgment was real. Refers to Oomda Bibi v. Jonab Ali (3), Nujeeboonissa v. Zumeeran (4) and Musst. Zaiban v. Bibee Nujeeboonissa (5).

Once there is a clear acknowledgment of legitimacy one cannot go behind that acknowledgment and enquire as to whether there was a proper marriage or not.

Mr. L. DeGruyther, following, cited Irshad Ali v. Musammat Kariman (9).

[Mr. A. M. Dunne, K. C., Imambandi v. Mutsaddi (10).]

No evidence can be permitted to shew that there was no marriage, once the son is acknowledged.

In Sadakat Husain v. Mahomed Yusuf (11), it was suggested that although there was acknowledgment of the child, the mother was at that time the wife of another.

Muhammad Allahadad Khan v. Muhammad Ismail Khan (1) does not upset the proposition that a man could acknowledge even a stranger provided it cannot be proved that he had another father.

[LORD BUCKMASTER.—I am anxious to know in which cases acknowledgment and marriage are not possible. You say that a Mohammedan can have relations with a woman other than his wife or his slave.]

[MR. AMEER ALI.—There are cases where the marriage might be invalid, but the children might be legitimate.]

[LORD BUCKMASTER.—In Mohammedan law is not fornication one of the cases which makes it impossible to legitimatise the child?]

The three provisions given in the text are exhaustive on this point and they do not mention this. Wilson's Mohammedan Law, sec. 85.

Mr. Upjohn, K. C. (with Messrs. A. M. Dunne, K. C. and J. M. Parikh) for the Respondents.—There are two propositions, one of law and the other of fact: 1st under the established facts of the case supported by concurrent findings against legitimacy there cannot be a valid bona fide acknowledgment; 2nd if I am wrong in the above, there is no sufficient or binding acknowledgment of Plaintiff as legitimate. Sadik Husain Khan v. Hashim Ali Khan (2), Oomda Bibi v. Jonab Ali (3), Nujeeboonnissa v. Zumceran (4) and Musatt. Zaibun v. Bibee Nujeeboonnissa (5) are all against the other side. Ashrufooddowlak Ahmad v. Hyder Hossein (8), too is against him.

The paternity alleged of the Plaintiff is established. There was no marriage between the Nawab and Plaintiff and the Plaintiff was not legitimate. Again Mozelle was a prostitute throughout the period of her connection with the Nawab. She never lived with the Nawab. She married one man first and afterwards another. The marriage of the daughter was not arranged by the Nawab. Mozelle marries again after the birth of the Plaintiff. Nawab treats the Plaintiff in an entirely different way from Altaf, the grandson. I say that she was not even solely his mistress, she was visited by other men as well.

[SIR JOHN EDGE.—Is there any evidence that she carried on with other men after he had bought a house for her?]

She married another after this. "Incest," "fornication," etc., are not specially defined. The term in Mohammedan law is zina which means an unlawful union. There are only two cases in which a man can make a lawful marriage. If the woman was neither his slave nor wife, the union is not merely unlawful but punishable. If a child was a result of "~~zina~~" the child was incapacitated from inheriting. Ameer Ali's Mohammedan Law, 4th Edn., 1917, p. 316. Zina is punishable. I dispute that the child can be legitimatised.

[LORD BUCKMASTER.—It comes to this that only the child of a slave could be legitimatised.]

The doctrine of acknowledgment was made to apply where no clear proof of the marriage of the parents was forthcoming. Wilson's Mohammedan Law (1912), para. 85 at pp. 170 and 171. *

[LORD DUNEDIN.—You say there could be no legitimation in cases of zina but the onus is on you to disprove the marriage.]

Yes.

[LORD DUNEDIN.—I believe what Sir John Simon said was that here were two persons between whom marriage is possible, and there is an acknowledgment of legitimate paternity; it is irrelevant to enquire whether there was a marriage or not.]

[LORD BUCKMASTER.—You say cases of legitimation are confined to child, (1) of a slave woman of the father and (2) of a union where it was doubtful whether there was a marriage or not. Then you take away this security, by enquiring into whether there was a marriage or not. So that you always have this case in doubt and reduce the cases of acknowledgment to an infinitely small number of cases.]

[MR. AMEER ALI.—In Mahalata Bibee v. Md. Alimoozoman (12), there is a case on this. At p. 313, the argument is given. The meaning of legitimation in Mohammedan law is different from its meaning in Scotch or other law.]

Acknowledgment is not a factor and is ineffectual in cases of fornication. Ameer Ali's Muhamadan Law, 3rd Edn., p. 250.

True character of acknowledgment is illustrated in Muhamamad Allahdad Khan v. Muhammad Ismail Khan (1), where also Birjandi is cited at pp. 308 and 309, and Ashrufooddowlak Ahmad v. Hyder Hossein (8). It is really a declaration of legitimacy and not a legitimation. Ashrufooddowlak Ahmad v. Hyder Hossein (8) has already been read by Sir John Simon, but a little further on we get what is wanted.

Sadik Husain Khan v. Hashim Ali Khan (2) purports to be the statement of a rule. There a marriage was alleged and some evidence given and marriage was held established, but the rule is stated in the last 12 lines.

Muhammad Allahdad Khan v. Muhammad Ismail Khan (1) is the first case. At p. 324, Mahmud, J., held that there cannot be an effective acknowledgment where a person is proved to have been illegitimate. See also Straight, J., at p. 300 and at middle of p. 303.

Mr. DeGruyther, K. C. in reply.

[LORD SHAW.—There are concurrent findings of fact by both the Courts against you.]

The issue was not whether there was a marriage or not, but whether it was proved that there was no marriage, the burden being on the other side to disprove the marriage. In Allahdad Khan v. Ismail Khan (1), even cases of strangers are held to be acknowledged; see Azmat Ali v. Lalli Begum (7).

SYED HABIBUR RAHMAN CHOWDHURY v. SYED ALTAF ALI CHOWDHURY.

Chowdhury, claims a declaration that he is the legitimate son of the late Nawab of Bogra, who died intestate on the 2nd July 1915. The suit is opposed by the late Nawab's grandson, who is the son of a legitimate daughter, and by two nephews, the sons of an elder brother. The Plaintiff is admittedly the natural son of the late Nawab, his mother having been a Jewess, Mozelle Cohen, who became a Mohammedan and cohabited with the Nawab. He was born in 1893. The Nawab had a daughter by the same lady in 1891. The Nawab's legitimate wife, the grandmother of the first Defendant, died in 1890. The Plaintiff based his claim on two grounds. He averred first that Mozelle was married to the Nawab. He further averred that on many occasions the Nawab had acknowledged him as his legitimate son. The Defendants aver that no marriage ever took place. They also deny that any proper acknowledgment of legitimacy was made.

The case went to trial before Greaves, J., and oral evidence was led and documentary evidence produced on both sides. Greaves, J., held that no marriage was proved, but that, on the contrary, it was proved that Mozelle Cohen was no better than a prostitute and that no marriage ever did take place. He held that the Nawab did acknowledge the Plaintiff as his legitimate son, but he held that in law, as the fact of no marriage was conclusively established, such acknowledgment would not confer the status of legitimacy. He therefore dismissed the suit.

Appeal was taken by the Plaintiff. In the Court of Appeal the Chief Justice agreed with Greaves, J., that the marriage was in fact disproved. Differing from Greaves, J., he held that there was no proper acknowledgment of legitimacy, but, upon the assumption that there was, he agreed with Greaves, J., on the law that such an acknowledgment, in the face of the disproof of the marriage, was of no avail.

Woodroffe, J., thought that there was no acknowledgment of legitimacy and no affirmative proof of marriage, and therefore the Plaintiff failed, but he did not go the length of holding that there had been disproof of marriage.

Chitty, J., held that the marriage was disproved. That being so, he did not feel called upon to decide with certainty as to whether there was a good acknowledgment of legitimacy or not, though he indicated that the bias of his opinion was that there was not.

The Plaintiff is thus faced by two adverse concurrent findings of fact to the effect that the existence of a marriage is disproved. As, however, the junior counsel for the Plaintiff urged that this was not so, it is well to make it clear as to what constitute concurrent findings.

The first issue as settled by the trial Judge was, "Was Mozelle Cohen married to Sobhan" (the Nawab)? His finding as to this was:—

"I hold that upon the evidence the long connection of Sobhan and Mozelle was inconsistent with the relation of husband and wife, and that Mozelle is, upon the evidence, proved to be merely his concubine, and that Mozelle Cohen was not married to the deceased Nawab."

The Chief Justice said:—

"I think the learned judge was right in holding that Mozelle was never married to the late Nawab Sobhan; to put it in other words, in my judgment it has been proved that Mozelle was never married to the late Nawab."

and Chitty, J., said:—

"I do not believe that any marriage between Abdus Sobhan and Mozelle Cohen ever took place; in other words, I find the marriage disproved."

These two learned Judges form a majority of the Court of Appeal. That makes a concurrent finding, and it is not vitiated as such because, as here, the other Judge in the Court of Appeal does not come to the same conclusion in fact though coming to the same result in law arising from another fact. Of course, to be concurrent findings binding on this Board, the fact or facts found must be such as are necessary for the foundation of the proposition in law to be subsequently applied to them.

The senior counsel for the Appellants was unable to deny that there were concurrent findings as to the non-existence of the marriage. His argument was directed to this, that, assuming he could show a good acknowledgment of legitimacy, that conferred the status of legitimacy and made it irrelevant to enter into any enquiry as to the fact of marriage.

The case might be disposed of by holding, as the majority of the learned Judges of the Court of Appeal did, that there was no proper acknowledgment of legitimacy. There is not, however, as to this a "concurrent finding," for the learned trial Judge thought otherwise, and it would be necessary to examine the evidence before coming to the above conclusion. Their Lordships do not think it necessary to embark on this enquiry. They will, without deciding, assume that there was a proper acknowledgment, for, as is to be presently explained, they are of opinion that such acknowledgment, in face of the fact that there was no marriage, is of no avail. Their Lordships consider that this result is reached on principle, and is concluded by authority.

Before discussing the subject, it is as well at once to lay down with precision the difference between legitimacy and legitimation. Legitimacy is a status which results from certain facts. Legitimation is a proceeding which creates a status which did not exist before. In the proper sense there is no legitimation under the Mohammedan law. Examples of it may be found in other systems. The adoption of the Roman and the Hindoo law effected legitimacy. The same was done under the Canon Law and the Scotch Law in respect of what is known as legitimation per subsequens matrimonium. By the Mohammedan law a son to be legitimate must be the offspring of a man and his wife or of a man and his slave; any other offspring is the offspring of zina, that is, illicit connection, and cannot be legitimate. The term "wife" necessarily connotes marriage; but, as marriage may be constituted without any ceremonial, the existence of a marriage in any particular case may be an open question. Direct proof may be available, but if there be no such, indirect proof may suffice. Now one of the ways of indirect proof is by an acknowledgment of legitimacy in favour of a son. This acknowledgment must be not merely of sonship, but must be made in such a way that it shows that the acknowledgor meant to accept the other not only as his son, but as his legitimate son. It must not be impossible upon the face of it: i.e., it must not be made when the ages are such that it is impossible in nature for the acknowledgor to be the father of the acknowledgee, or when the mother spoken to in an acknowledgment, being the wife of another, or within prohibited degrees of the acknowledgor, it would be apparent that the issue would be the issue of adultery or incest. The acknowledgment may be repudiated by the acknowledgee. But if none of these objections occur, then the acknowledgment has more than a mere evidential value. It raises a presumption of marriage—a presumption which may be taken advantage of either by a wife-claimant or a son-claimant. Being, however, a presumption of fact, and not juris et de jure, it is, like every other presumption of fact, capable of being set aside by contrary proof. The result is that a claimant son who has in his favour a good acknowledgment of legitimacy is in this position: The marriage will be held proved and his legitimacy established unless the marriage is disproved. Until the claimant establishes his acknowledgment the onus is on him to prove a marriage. Once he establishes an acknowledgment, the onus is on those who deny a marriage to negative it in fact.

A large number of cases were cited to their Lordships which they think it unnecessary to discuss in detail. It is quite true that in the earlier of the series not only is stress laid on the fact that an acknowledgment of legitimacy has more than a mere evidential value, but also there are expressions used such as that by a proper acknowledgment the status of legitimacy is "acquired." Fastening on such expressions, the learned counsel for the Appellants argued that to enter into an enquiry into the fact of marriage when a good acknowledgment had been made out was not only bad law but a sin against the rules of logic. The simple answer to this is that the phraseology of such expressions as cited above must not be pressed to disturb what is the ruling principle, and that principle is that in Mohammedan law such an acknowledgment is a declaration of legitimacy and not a legitimation. A declaration, though it cannot be withdrawn, may be contradicted, for it is only a statement: legitimation is an act, which being done cannot be undone. So the rules of logic remain untouched.

The whole question was thoroughly examined in a very learned judgment by Mahmood, J., in the case of Muhammad Allahdad Khan v. Muhammad Ismail Khan (1) and finally; in the case of Sadik Husain

Khan v. Hashim Ali Khan (2). Lord Atkinson, delivering the judgment of the Board, said as follows (p. 234):—

"If this be so, the rule of the Mahomedan law applicable to the case is well established. No statement made by one man that another (proved to be illegitimate) is his son can make that other legitimate, but where no proof of that kind has been given such a statement or acknowledgment is substantive evidence that the person so acknowledged is the legitimate son of the person who makes the statement, provided his legitimacy be possible."

That statement is, in their Lordships' view, clear and conclusive, and what they have said above is no more than an elaboration of what was there said.

Their Lordships will therefore humbly advise His Majesty to dismiss the appeal with costs.

Held—That although the words “legal character” in sec. 42 of the Specific Relief Act have been held to be wide enough to include the right of franchise and also a right of being elected as a Municipal Commissioner, it was doubtful whether, regard being had to the form of the suit and the declarations asked for, the case came within the words of the section.

SANDERSON, C. J.—This is an appeal by one Jatindra Nath Kumar against a judgment which was given by the learned Subordinate Judge of Hooghly, by which he allowed the appeal which had been preferred to him, and set aside the judgment of the Court of first instance and decreed the Plaintiff's suit and declared that the election in question was invalid.

Jatindra Nath Kumar is Defendant No. 3; he was also made a party as Defendant No. 1 in his capacity of the then Chairman of the Municipal Commissioners of Kotrung and the other Defendants are Commissioners of that Municipality.

The Defendants Nos. 2 to 4 and the Plaintiff were candidates for election. These three Defendants were elected and the Plaintiff was not elected: the second Defendant obtained 232 votes, the third Defendant 200 votes; and the fourth Defendant 177 votes and the Plaintiff obtained 133 votes. The total number of voters on the register was 298 and the total number of voters who registered their votes was 244. The election was held so long ago as the 5th of October 1918.

The suit was filed on the 4th of January 1919. In that suit the Plaintiff asked for a declaration that the election being in contravention of the Plaintiff's right and franchise, right of election and right of being present at the polling place was not at all according to law proper and valid and fit to be confirmed, that the same was ultra vires and that the said election was not fit to be in force and that proper order might be passed setting aside the said election. The second prayer was that it might be declared that the election of Defendants Nos. 2, 3 and 4 was illegal: the third prayer was that an injunction should be issued restraining the Defendant No. 1 from forming the Municipal Board with the Defendants Nos. 2, 3 and 4. Then there was a prayer for incidental reliefs.

The learned Munsif, as I have already mentioned, dismissed the suit. The lower Appellate Court decreed the suit.

There were two grounds which were relied upon before the lower Appellate Court: and, the learned Subordinate Judge based his judgment upon one ground, namely, that there were 13 persons who had registered their votes, who according to his opinion were not qualified to be on the register as voters.

The learned Vakil who appeared in this Court for the Plaintiff in the first instance stated that he based his right of action upon sec. 42 of the Specific Relief Act, which runs as follows, "Any person entitled to any legal character, or to any right as to any property, may institute a suit against any person denying, or interested to deny his title to such character or right, and the Court may, in its discretion, make therein a declaration that he is so entitled, and the Plaintiff need not, in such suit, ask for any further relief; provided that no Court shall make any such declaration where the Plaintiff being able to seek further relief than a mere declaration of title, omits to do so." It was held in the case of Sabhapat Singh v. Abdul Gaffur (1) that "the words 'legal character' are wide enough to include the right of franchise and also a right of being elected as a Municipal Commissioner." The suit in that case was a suit for adjudication and declaration of the Plaintiff's right to vote and to stand as a candidate at the election of Municipal Commissioners which was held in Chapra in December 1893, and also for a declaration that he had been duly elected at that election. In the present suit the Plaintiff is not asking for any declaration that he was elected at this Municipal election. But it was said that the words "legal character" are sufficient to include a person who, as a candidate, has a right to be present at the election and further to see that the election is properly held.

I confess I have considerable doubt, having regard to the form of this suit, and having regard to the declarations which were asked for in this suit, to which I have referred, whether this particular case would come within the words of sec. 42 of the Specific Relief Act. The late learned Chief Justice Sir Lawrence Jenkins had occasion to refer to this section in the case of Deokali Koer v. Kedar Nath (2), where he said at page 709 as follows: "The section does not sanction every form of declaration, but only a declaration that the Plaintiff is entitled to any legal character or to any right as to any property; it is the disregard of this that accounts for the multi-form and, at times, eccentric declarations which find a place in Indian plaints. If the Courts were astute—as I think they should be—to see that the plaints presented conformed to the terms of sec. 42, the difficulties that are to be found in this class of cases, would no longer arise." If I may say so, with respect to the learned Chief Justice, I entirely agree with him. During the course of the argument I intimated to the learned Vakeel that he might have considerable difficulty in showing that the particular claims in this suit came within sec. 42 of the Specific Relief Act. The learned Vakeel then changed his ground and urged that sec. 15 of the Bengal Municipal Act contained a proviso to this effect "provided that nothing contained in this section nor in any rules made under the authority of this Act" shall be deemed to affect the jurisdiction of the Civil Courts." He then argued that the Court which tried the suit has inherent jurisdiction to set aside a Municipal election on the ground that it has not been properly conducted or in accordance with the statute or the rules framed thereunder; and, he stated that there have been many cases in which Courts in this country have set aside elections for such reasons as I have mentioned. For the purpose of my judgment I propose to assume that the Court which tried this suit had inherent jurisdiction to deal with the suit, and, if a proper case had been made out, to grant such declaration and injunction as were prayed for in the plaint.

I, therefore, have to deal with the facts of this case: and, I propose to deal first with the ground on which the learned Subordinate Judge relied, namely, that there were 13 persons who had rendered their votes, and who, according to the judgment of the learned Subordinate Judge were not qualified to be on the register of voters. The question is whether the facts which the learned Subordinate Judge has found are sufficient to support his judgment. It should be mentioned that the list of voters was settled by the Chairman of the Municipality. The Plaintiff did not adopt the procedure which is laid down in the Rules and object to the Chairman, in respect of any names which were included in the register and as to which he had an objection. But he did apply to the Magistrate. Though there may be some doubt as to whether the Magistrate ought to have gone into the objection which the Plaintiff put forward, inasmuch as the Plaintiff did not make this objection in the first instance to the Chairman, the Magistrate did investigate the objections which the Plaintiff made and he dismissed them. The result was that the persons to whom the Plaintiff objected remained upon the register. When the Plaintiff brought his suit he did not specify the names of the persons as to whom he was going to object in the suit: and, at the trial he seems to have made a somewhat roving attack upon certain persons with regard to whom he thought he could make a case. The learned Munsif came to the conclusion: "It is quite possible," said the learned Munsif, "that one or two unqualified men may have been registered as voters but there is no evidence to prove this:" and, yet the learned Subordinate Judge who heard the appeal came to the conclusion that there were 13 persons as to whose qualification he was not satisfied. Assuming that finding to be correct, as we must, because this is a second appeal—in my judgment having regard to the facts of this case that is not sufficient to justify the setting aside of the election: In fact, the learned Vakeel who argued this appeal on behalf of the Plaintiff did not really base his argument upon this ground, but relied mainly upon another ground to which I shall have to refer directly. It seems to me that even if we accept the finding of fact of the learned Subordinate Judge in the first appeal, it by no means follows that the Plaintiff would have been elected even if the votes of all these 13 voters had been disallowed; indeed, in my judgment, having regard to the number of votes recorded for the successful candidates and for the Plaintiff which I have already mentioned, it is apparent that even if the votes of the 13 voters who were held to be disqualified, had been disallowed the result of the election would have been the same.

Now, I come to the other point, upon which reliance has been chiefly placed in this Court, and that is, that the Plaintiff was not allowed to be present at the place where the votes were being recorded. In a sense he was present, that is to say, he was on one part of the premises, whereas the votes were being recorded in another part. But in order to make clear what the position really was I will read a short passage from the learned Munsif's judgment in which he gives a graphic description of what took place. "The voting took place in the Municipal Office

The votes were recorded by the Deputy Magistrate in the hall of this building. A little on the south of the entrance the identification stand was erected. The head clerk distributed the identification cards after satisfying himself as to the identity of the persons claiming identification cards. Each voter on receiving the card was examined at the entrance by the Chairman in the presence of the candidates and outsiders as to the correctness of the identity of each of the voters. Objections as to the right of the person to vote were invited at this stage with the idea that if there be any objections the presiding officer would be communicated with. There were no objections nor is there any allegation of false personation. From the entrance the passage to the hall was fenced so that the voter had no other way of getting out except through the hall where the presiding officer was seated." The learned Munsif then proceeds to refer to the fact that "the Act does not give any right to the candidate to be present at the place where the voting is recorded by any positive section." He goes on to say, "The so-called right is inferred from the fact that a candidate is required by the Act to take objections, regarding the admissibility or otherwise of a voter, to the presiding officer at the time of recording the votes. Here although the candidates were not allowed into the hall where the votes were recorded, ample opportunity was provided to the candidates to take objections if they wanted. The presiding officer sat within hearing distance and also came out in the verandah to hear complaints, if any." "The Plaintiff's right to be present arises from the fact that he can take objections before the presiding officer. Here his privilege of taking objections was not interfered with. The procedure was adopted on the suggestion of the Commissioner of the Division. There were complaints before him that zemindars intimidated and used undue influence to secure elections in their own way. The Commissioner on enquiry was satisfied as to the truth of these allegations and suggested the present procedure to secure the free exercise of the right of franchise by the Municipal voters unhampered by threat or persuasion." That finding of fact has not been interfered with by the learned Judge: and I should have been prepared to hold upon that finding of fact that there was no ground for setting aside this election.

I do not intend to express any general opinion as to how these elections are to be conducted. That is not my business. I am only concerned with the facts of this particular case; I have stated the facts as found by the learned Munsif: and as I have already said, if the case rested there I should have been prepared to hold that the facts relating to this point did not disclose a sufficient ground for setting aside this election. I do not mean to say that I approve of the arrangement nor do I mean to say that I disapprove of the arrangement. I express no opinion one way or the other. But the case does not rest there, because I find that on the day of the election the Plaintiff himself wrote a letter to the presiding officer and here I may mention that the presiding officer was a Sub-Divisional Officer, Mr. Dutt, against whose integrity and uprightness not a word has been said. The Plaintiff wrote to him in these words, "In enclosing herewith a copy of my letter to the Chairman I beg to request that you will kindly consider the facts mentioned therein and either allow me or my agent to be present by the side of the election committee or you will kindly record the votes personally as the recording of votes in secret is quite illegal and fraud also might occur in the proceedings," upon which Mr. Dutt made a note: "I am recording votes personally, so this may be filed." The Plaintiff uses the phrase there "recording the votes in secret." It is perhaps right to add that votes were not recorded in secret; the presiding officer as I have already said was there, and there was a committee consisting of three men who had been appointed by the Chairman of the Municipality. As against these three men, as far as I know, there is not a word to be said as regards their integrity and honesty.

Having regard to the facts found by the learned Munsif and having regard to the letter which the Plaintiff himself wrote, which, in my opinion, amounts to a waiver of his alleged right to be present in the place where the votes were actually recorded provided the presiding officer himself recorded them, in my judgment there is no ground for setting aside the election.

For these reasons, in my judgment, this appeal ought to be allowed, the decree of the lower Appellate Court set aside and that of the Court of first instance restored.

The Plaintiff Respondent will pay the costs of the Appellant in this Court and in the lower Appellate Court. The Defendant-Respondents will pay their own costs in this Court and in the lower Appellate Court. We assess the hearing fee in this Court at two gold mohurs.

The appeal being disposed of, no order is necessary in respect of the Rule for stay of execution or in respect of the application of the Intervenor to be made a party to the Rule. The Intervenor will pay his own costs. We make no order as to the costs in the Rule.

No. 68 of 1920.

*Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), sec. 153—
"Amount of rent annually payable by the tenant," meaning of—Suit for rent—Defendant denying Plaintiff's title to a fractional share of the admitted rent of the holding—Decision, if appealable.*

A decision in a suit for rent that the Plaintiff was entitled to the whole rent as claimed by him and not only to a two-fifths share of it as claimed by the Defendant was a decision of the question of the amount of rent annually payable by the tenant within the meaning of sec. 153 of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

PRASUNNA KUMAR v. SRINATH (2) was overruled by the Full Bench in NARAIN MAHTON v. MANOPI (4).

The expression "amount annually payable by the tenant" signifies the amount annually payable by the tenant to the landlord who has instituted the suit for the recovery of rent.

This was an appeal under sec. 15 of the Letters Patent from a decree of Mr. Justice Newbould in Second Appeal No. 2786 of 1919, which was an appeal from a decree of the District Judge of 24-Pergunnahs (Mr. Smither), dated the 9th September 1919, affirming that of the Munsif of Alipur (Babu Aswini Kumar Das Gupta), dated the 28th June 1919.

SUDHANNA SANTRA v. BASANTA KUMAR SARKAR.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment of Newbould, J., which was as follows :—

NEWBOULD, J.—This appeal arises out of a rent suit which was heard by a Munsif who was specially empowered under sec. 153 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The Plaintiffs claimed 16 annas rent from the Defendants on the allegation that they had inherited 6 annas and 8 gundas share in the maliki right from their mother and 9 annas and 12 gundas ijara right from their father. The contesting Defendants admitted the Plaintiffs' maliki right to the extent of 6 annas and 8 gundas but denied the existence of any "ijara" right. The Munsif found that the Plaintiffs established their ijara right as well as the admitted maliki right and gave the Plaintiffs a decree for the rent claimed. On appeal the learned District Judge held that no appeal lay, citing as an authority, the case of Baidya Nath Bahara v. Dhon Krishna Sircar (1). Against this decision of the lower Appellate Court this appeal has been preferred and the Appellants have also obtained a Rule in case it should be held that no second appeal lay to this Court. As regards the question whether an appeal lay to the lower Appellate Court, it is urged that the Munsif's decision decided the question of the amount annually payable by the tenant. It is contended that the point is covered by the decision of the Full Bench in the case of Narain Mah-ton v. Manofi Pattak (4). In that case the point actually decided by the Full Bench was in the following terms : that the words "amount of rent annually payable by a tenant" occurring in sec. 153 (a) of the Bengal Tenancy Act include the case of rent payable by a tenant to one of his co-sharer landlords who collects his share of the rent separately." It seems to me that the decision in that case cannot be made applicable to the facts of the present case. The Plaintiffs were not, either on their pleadings or on the findings of the Court below, co-sharer landlords who were collecting their share of the rent separately. The issue on which the parties went on trial was framed in the following terms : "Was there any ijara of 3 9 annas 12 gundas share in favour of Ram Narain Sarkar and have the Plaintiffs inherited the same? Are the Defendants liable to pay 16 annas rent to the Plaintiffs?" That is to say, the issue between the parties was not one as to the amount of rent but as to the Plaintiff's title and as the person whose title was set up was not a party to the suit there could be no decision of a question of title as between parties having conflicting claims thereto. As, in the case relied on by the lower Appellate Court, if the Defendant was liable to pay the whole rent to the Plaintiff, there was no dispute as to the amount of rent payable. The only issue in dispute was whether the relationship of landlord and tenant existed between the parties with regard to the entire holding, and that was the only issue decided. The view I take that the Full Bench Reference above cited, is not applicable to a case of this sort, was also taken by a single Judge of this Court in the case of Fakeer Mondul Gain v. Arshad Molla (7). I therefore hold that the decision of the lower Appellate Court that no appeal lay was right and dismiss the appeal with costs. The Rule is discharged but without costs.

SUDHANNA SANTRA v. BASANTA KUMAR SARKAR.

This is an appeal under cl. 15 of the Letters Patent from the judgment of Mr. Justice Newbould in a suit for arrears of rent.

The suit was tried in the Court of first instance by a judicial officer specially empowered by the Local Government to exercise final jurisdiction under sec. 153 of the Bengal Tenancy Act and the amount claimed in the suit did not exceed Rs. 50. The suit was decreed with costs in favour of the Plaintiff. Thereupon the Defendant preferred an appeal to the District Judge. This was summarily dismissed under Or. XII, r. 11, C. P. C., on the ground that no appeal lay on the authority of the decision in Baidya Nath v. Dhon Krishna (1). A second appeal was thereupon preferred to this Court. In support of the appeal it was argued before Mr. Justice Newbould that the appeal to the District Judge was competent inasmuch as the decree of the primary Court had decided a question of the amount annually payable by the tenant. This contention was overruled and the decree of the District Judge was affirmed. Consequently, the point involved in the present appeal is, whether the appeal to the District Judge was or was not competent under sec. 153 of the Bengal Tenancy Act.* The determination of the question depends on the nature and contents of the decree made by the Court of first instance.

The suit was brought to recover arrears of rent at the rate of Rs. 8-3-4 pies a year with cesses and damages for a period of four years. The case for the Plaintiff was that in Mouzah Shapkhali he had inherited 6 as. 8 gds. share in maliki right from his mother Sarada Sundari Dassi and 9 as. 12 gds. share in ijara right from his father Ram Narain Sarkar. On this allegation the Plaintiff sought to collect the sixteen annas rent from the tenant Defendants who were in occupation of 3 bighas 16 cottahs of land at a rental of Rs. 8-3-4 pies. The first Defendant, who alone entered appearance, admitted that the Plaintiff had maliki right to the extent of a 6 as. 8 gds. share inherited from his mother but denied the existence of the alleged ijara right during the period in suit. Consequently, the point arose for decision, whether there was an ijara of a 9 as. 12 gds. share in favour of Ram Narain Sarkar and whether the Plaintiff had inherited that share, in other words, was the Defendant liable to pay the sixteen annas share or only a 6 as. 8 gds. share of the rent to the Plaintiff. The trial Court came to the conclusion that not only the maliki right but also the ijara right was in existence and that the Plaintiff was consequently entitled to realise from the Defendant the entire sixteen annas rent claimed. On these facts, the question arises whether the decree of the trial Court decided a question of the amount annually payable by the tenant. If the expression "amount annually payable by the tenant" signifies the amount annually payable by the tenant in respect of the tenancy, there was no controversy between the parties and no decision on a disputed question, because they were agreed that the rent of the holding was Rs. 8-3-4 a year. On the other hand the expression "amount annually payable by the tenant" signifies the amount annually payable by the tenant to the landlord who had instituted the suit for recovery of rent as stated in an earlier part of the sub-section, there was a substantial point in controversy, namely, whether the amount payable by the Defendant to the Plaintiff was to be calculated at the rate of Rs. 8-3-4 a year or at the rate of two-fifths of that sum.

(1) 5 C. W. N. 515 (1900).

SUDHANNA SANTRA v. BASANTA KUMAR SARKAR.

The determination of this question at one time led to a divergence of judicial opinion in this Court, as is clear from the decisions in Prasunno Kumar v. Srinath (2) and Abhoy Charan v. Shasi Bhusan (3). In the first case, Norris and Beverley, JJ., held that when the question was whether the Plaintiff was entitled to the whole sixteen annas of the rent or only to a ten annas share of it, no appeal lay, because there was no question of the amount of rent annually payable by a tenant, these words in the section meaning the total amount of rent annually payable in respect of a holding and not the amount of rent which may be payable to any particular co-sharer in the property. In the second case, where the tenant was sued for a rental of Rs. 15, the Defendant contended that this rental had been divided and, that the Plaintiff was entitled only to a rent of Rs. 7-8 as. which was half of the total amount of rents payable by the tenant. Mitter and Macpherson, JJ., held that an appeal did lie as the decree of the lower Court had decided that the rent was Rs. 15 and not Rs. 2-8 which was in essence a decision on the question of the amount of rent annually payable by the tenant. These decisions were obviously in direct conflict with each other and led to a reference to a Full Bench in Nara-in Mahton v. Manofi (4). In that case the Plaintiff contended that he was entitled to an eight annas share of the rent of the disputed holding. The Defendant contended that the Plaintiff was entitled to eight pies share of the rent which was the extent of his share in the superior interest. It was ruled that an appeal lay against the decree which had decided whether the Plaintiff was entitled to eight annas share or eight pies share of the rent.

Mr. Justice Pigot who delivered the judgment of the Full Bench stated that the Full Bench agreed with the decision of Mitter and Macpherson, JJ., in the case of Abhoy Charan v. Shasi Bhusan (3). Although in the judgment of the Full Bench, reference is not expressly made to the decision of Norris and Beverley, JJ., in Prasunno Kumar v. Srinath (2), which we find was mentioned in the Order of Reference to the Full Bench, there can be no doubt that the decision in that case was overruled by the Full Bench.

In this view it is clear that in the present case, the decree of the primary Court which had decided the question, whether the Plaintiff was entitled to the whole rent as claimed by him or only to a two-fifths share as asserted by the Defendant, was a decision of the question of the amount of rent annually payable by the tenant within the meaning of sec. 153 of the Bengal Tenancy Act and consequently the appeal to the District Judge was competent. This view is in accord with the decisions in Poresb Moni v. Nobo Kishore (5) and Banshiram v. Srinath (6). The decision of Beachcroft, J., in the case last mentioned was, we are informed, ultimately approved by Chitty and Walmsley, JJ., by the dismissal of an appeal preferred under the Letters Patent. It may be difficult to reconcile the view with the decision of Geidt, J., in Fakeer Mondul v. Arshad Molla (7), which, it should not be overlooked, was pronounced before the decision in Poresb Moni v. Nobo Kishore (5). On the other hand, the case of Baidya Nath v. Dhon Krishna (1) and Ram Mohan v. Badan Barai (8) are distinguish-able on the ground that in each of them the question in controversy was whether the relationship of landlord and tenant existed between the parties. In that class of cases, it has been uniformly held [Shilabati v. Roderiques (9)] that the question whether the relationship of landlord and tenant does or does not subsist between the parties is not a question relating to title to land or to some interest in land as between parties having conflicting claims there-to within the meaning of sec. 153 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, nor can the decision of such a question be treated as a decision of the question of the amount of rent annually payable by the tenant, because no question of the amount annually payable by a tenant can obviously arise for consideration, till it has been ascertained that the relationship of landlord and tenant existed between the parties. It is only in the event of the establishment of such a relationship that a question may arise as to the amount of rent annually payable by the tenant to the landlord.

We are of opinion that this appeal must be allowed, the judgment of Mr. Justice Newbould set aside and the case remanded to the District Judge to be heard on the merits. The Appellant is entitled to his costs both here and before Mr. Justice Newbould.

THE SECRETARY OF
STATE FOR INDIA IN COUNCIL, Defendant,
Respondent.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), sec. 104H, sub-secs. 3 and (4), jurisdiction of Civil Court to settle fair rents payable by a proprietor in respect of tenure and raiyati holdings purchased by him—Raiyati holdings purchased before the Bengal Tenancy Amendment Act (I, E. B. & A., of 1908), if subsists as such.

A proprietor purchased a tenure and two raiyati holdings in execution of a decree for arrears of rent. In settlement proceedings, the Revenue Officer ignored the existence of these tenancies. Thereupon the proprietor brought suits for declaration of his tenancy right to the lands and for settlement of fair rents in respect thereof, but the Court held that it was beyond its jurisdiction to settle the annual rents:

Held—That sec. 104H, sub-sec. (3) allows a suit, amongst others, on the grounds (d) that land has been wrongly recorded as part of, or omitted from the lands of, an estate or tenancy, and (e) that the tenant belongs to a class different from that to which he is shown in the record-of-rights as belonging. Therefore the proprietor was entitled to maintain a suit on the grounds (d) and (e). The Court therefore had power, under sub-sec. (4) of the section, to settle the fair rent payable by the proprietor as holder of the tenure. With regard to the raiyati holdings, as they were acquired before the present Bengal Tenancy Amendment Act of 1908 came into force, the only effect of their purchase by the proprietor would be the extinction of the occupancy right, the holding itself subsisting as a raiyati holding.

MEAJAN v. MINNAT ALI (1) and JAWADUL HUQ v. RAM DAS (2) referred to.

That the proprietor was entitled to settlement of fair rents payable by him as holder of the raiyati jotes.

These were appeals against the decree of Babu Bhupal Chandra Ganguli, Subordinate Judge, 1st Court of Zillah Backergunj, dated the 14th of May 1919, affirming the decree of Babu Madan Mohan Saha, Munsif, 4th Court at Barisal, dated the 22nd of December 1917.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

Babus Ram Ch. Mitter and Surendra N. Guha for the Respondent.

These appeals arise out of suits for declaration of the Plaintiff's tenancy right to the lands mentioned in the plaints in these suits, and for settlement of fair rents in respect of the lands under the following circumstances.

The Plaintiff's predecessors-in-title held, under a temporary settlement from Government, a certain Dearah Mahal which was a contiguous accretion to their permanently settled estate, and during the time that it was so held, the Plaintiff's predecessor-in-title purchased three tenancies in execution of decrees for arrears of rent. One of these tenancies consisted of about 700 bighas of land, and the finding is that it was a tenure. The other two tenancies were raiyati holdings.

Now, in the proceedings under Chap. X of the Bengal Tenancy Act, the Revenue Officer ignored the existence of these tenancies and treated the persons in possession of the land as raiyats and settled the rent on the basis of the rent payable by them to the proprietor. Thereupon these suits were instituted against the Secretary of State. The last paragraph of sec. 104H, sub-sec. (3) has no application to this case, as it is conceded that the Government let out the lands to the Plaintiffs as ijaradars.

The Courts below have held that the first tenancy was a tenure, and the right of the Plaintiffs as tenure-holders did not merge in their right as proprietor. They, however, were of opinion that the prayer (gha) in the plaint, namely, as to the settlement of the annual rent could not be granted in the present case as it was beyond the jurisdiction of the Court. We are of opinion that the Courts below are wrong on this view.

• Sec. 104H, sub-sec. (3) lays down that a suit under the section may be instituted on the grounds mentioned therein, namely, among others, (d) that land has been wrongly recorded as part of a particular estate or tenancy, or wrongly omitted from the lands of an estate or tenancy, and (e) that the tenant belongs to a class different from that to which he is shown in the record-of-rights as belonging. We think the Plaintiffs were entitled to maintain a suit on the ground (d) or (e). The rent payable by the Plaintiffs as tenure-holders was not settled, the settlement of the rent having proceeded, as already stated, on the basis of the rent payable by the raiyats to the proprietors. The Court therefore had power under sub-sec. (4) of the section to settle a fair rent. We think that having found that the tenure did not merge and was a subsisting one, the Courts below should have settled a fair rent in respect of that tenure. This is the subject-matter of Appeal No. 1497 of 1919.

The other two Appeals Nos. 1531 and 1532 of 1919 relate to the two raiyati holdings which had been purchased by the Plaintiffs' predecessor under sec. 22, cl. (1) of the Bengal Tenancy Act. As it stands after the amendment in 1908, the proprietor has no right to hold the land as a tenant and can hold it as proprietor. But the acquisition of these raiyati holdings took place in 1901 and 1903 respectively. Under sec. 22 as it then stood, only the occupancy right ceased to exist, and it had been held that the purchase of the raiyat's interest by the landlord did not extinguish the holding but divested it of the right of occupancy, if any, attached to it. [See Meajan v. Minnat Ali (1) following the decision in the case of Jawadul Huq v. Ram Das Saha (2), which, however, related to the case of a co-sharer landlord].

In the present case, it is stated in the plaint that the settlement authorities in the course of the previous settlement recognised the existence of the raiyati jotes. This statement made in the plaint has not been controverted in the two written statements of the Defendants. That being so, we do not see any reason why the Settlement Officer in the present proceedings should not recognise the existence of those holdings and settle the rent payable by the Plaintiffs as holders of those jotes.

We think there should be a declaration in favour of the Plaintiffs to the effect that they have the right of a tenure-holder in the jote which is the subject-matter of Appeal No. 1497 of 1919, and that they have a raiyati right in the jotes in the other two Appeals Nos. 1531 and 1532 of 1919. The cases must go back to the Court of first instance for settlement of the rent of the tenure in the first case and of the raiyati holdings in the other two cases.

Costs to abide the result.

It is to be noted that the decision in these three cases will not affect any persons not parties to the suits.

Calcutta Rent Act (III, B. C., of 1920), sec. 2, cl. (e)—Workshop, if "premises" See. 15—Application for standardisation of rent in respect of workshop does not lie.

A workshop does not come within the definition of "premises" in sec. 2 of the Calcutta Rent Act, and the fact that the Engineer in charge has a retiring room or that a particular room is used as an office does not make any difference.

This was a Rule obtained by the Petitioners against the order of the Controller of Rents, Calcutta (Babu Bangshidhar Banerjee), dated the 3rd June 1921.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

Mr. P. N. Dutt and Babu Nripendra Chandra Das for the Petitioner.

Mr. S. C. Bose and Babus Asita Ranjan Ghose, Hira Lal Ganguli and Himadri Bh. Roy for the Opposite Party.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

This Rule was directed against an order of the Rent Controller disallowing an application made by the Petitioner under sec. 15 of the Calcutta Rent Act for fixing the standard rent of No. 40, Middle Road, Entally, on the ground that the place was not "premises" as defined in sec. 2 (e) of the Rent Act and as such it did not come within the purview of the Act.

It appears that one Mr. Garvis obtained a lease of 40, Middle Road, Entally from the Opposite Party Nanda Lal Chunder sometime in 1915 for a period of two years with option of renewal of the same for another period of two years. Mr. Garvis took it for the purpose of "dwelling or a factory." He lived there for sometime but he used it mainly for the purpose of a factory (for preparing specic boxes for Government). He then left for Japan sometime in 1919.

The Petitioner before us—The Indian Engineering and Motor Company, Ltd., obtained a sub-lease from Mr. Garvis from the 1st November 1919.

Two applications were made to the Rent Controller—one by Gladstone Wyllie & Co., Managing Agents of Mr. Garvis for fixing the standard rent, and another by the Petitioners. The latter made an application to the Rent Controller, that their case might be heard along with the case instituted by their lessors. The first application, namely, that of Gladstone Wyllie & Co. was taken up and evidence was adduced in that case. The application was dismissed on the 31st March 1921. Messrs. Gladstone Wyllie & Co. have not taken any steps for setting aside that order.

Subsequently on the 3rd June the case in which the Petitioner was the applicant was taken up, and the Rent Controller held that no separate order was required in that case as it would be governed by the order passed in the case instituted by Gladstone Wyllie & Co.

It appears that the Rent Controller inspected the premises, and upon the evidence adduced on behalf of Messrs. Gladstone Wyllie & Co., came to the conclusion that the premises was nothing but a workshop, that although there was a small building which might formerly have been used as a residence, there was no doubt that it was a part of the workshop, that the building was now quite uninhabitable and that long disuse had brought on its present condition.

It is contended before us by the learned Counsel on behalf of the Petitioner first, that under sec. 2, cl. (e) of the Rent Act, the purpose for which the premises were let out should be considered, secondly, that even if the place was let out for the purposes of a workshop it comes within the definition of "premises" and that in any case, if any portion of it was used as an office or dwelling-house, it would come within the said definition, and lastly that the Petitioner had no opportunity of adducing evidence in the case instituted by him.

So far as the second contention is concerned, namely, that a workshop comes within the definition of "premises" under sec. 2 of the Act, it is to be observed that that section lays down that "premises" means any building or part of a building, or hut let separate for residential, charitable, educational or public purposes, or for the purposes of a shop or an office, including any land appertaining thereto and let therewith.

It is said that a "workshop" would come within the word "shop" and we are referred to the Oxford Dictionary in support of the contention that a shop means a "place, a house or building where goods are made or prepared for sale and sold." That is not how the expression "shop" is ordinarily understood. But apart from that, the word "shop," is defined in Wharton's Law Lexicon as being a "place where things are kept for sale." We have been referred to the case of Epsam

INDIAN ENGINEERING AND MOTOR CO., Ltd. v. GLADSTONE WYLLIE & Co.

Grand Stand Association Limited v. E. I. Clarke (1). But it seems that in that case the premises were let out for the purposes of residence, and business also. The Defendant, his family and servants had continually lived on the premises and their residence was in accordance with the terms of the lease. A portion of it was used as a public house. Bankes, J., observed: "The house was dwelt in and it was let to the Defendant for that purpose. In the fullest sense it was a dwelling-house and none the less so because it was a public house."

All that the case establishes is that when premises are let out and occupied as a dwelling-house, the fact that a part of them is also used for some business does not prevent them from being a "dwelling-house." The learned Judge also observed that he could not accept the contention that because it was let for business purposes it could not be a dwelling-house within the Act. But there the business for which a portion of the house was used, was the business of a publican which is the sale of wines, spirits and beer. That case is no authority for holding that a workshop or factory comes within the definition of a "shop" or a "dwelling-house."

With regard to the first contention, viz., the purpose for which the place was let out should be considered, it appears that in the present case the letting to Mr. Garvis was for dwelling or for a factory. The Petitioner before us, the Indian Engineering and Motor Company, however, took a sub-lease in 1919. There was no lease drawn up, and there was merely an exchange of letters which, however, have not been produced. Mr. Garvis says: "I have sub-let the premises from November 1919 and ever since November 1919 they have been using the place as their workshop in the same manner as they are doing now." He further states that negotiations about the lease to the Indian Engineering Company were made through one Mr. Mitter in October 1919, and that Mr. Mitter said that the place was required for their workshop. Other evidence was to the same effect and there is no doubt that at any rate since the Petitioners obtained the lease for the purpose of a workshop, they have used it as a workshop.

The fact that a room in the bungalow was used as an office does not, we think, bring the case within the word "premises." In a workshop or factory, a portion of it may be used for an office for supervising the work and keeping attendance registers, etc., and we do not think that the mere fact that the Engineer of the Company had a retiring room, or that a room was used for the purpose of an office connected with the workshop brings the case within the word "premises" as used in the Rent Act. It is clear that it was not let out to the Indian Engineering Company for the purpose of an office or for dwelling purposes.

As regards the third contention, we are not satisfied that the Petitioner has any reason for complaint. There is no suggestion that the Petitioners had any further evidence to adduce other than the evidence adduced by Messrs. Gladstone Wyllie & Co., the Managing Agents of Mr. Garvis (the lessor of the Petitioners). As a matter of fact, Mr. Garvis, Mr. Mitter, the Engineer of the Indian Engineering Company, and two of the Directors of the Company were examined in the case instituted by Messrs. Gladstone Wyllie & Co. There was no petition made to the lower Court that the Petitioners had any other evidence to adduce: and no ground has been taken before us complaining of any exclusion of evidence, nor that the Petitioner had been prejudiced by anything done by the Rent Controller. On the contrary, one of the grounds in the petition to the Court is that the Rent Controller had acted illegally and with irregularity in failing to consider the purpose for which 40, Middle Road was let out and the circumstances disclosed in the evidence.

In these circumstances, we think that the Rule must be discharged with costs, three gold mohurs to the Opposite Party, Nanda Lal and one gold mohur to Messrs. Gladstone Wyllie & Co.

Privy Council—Practice—Appeal pending before the Privy Council—Compromise, in which persons under disability are concerned, application for approval of, should be moved before the High Court in India in the first instance.

In all cases where it is desired to bind persons under disability by a compromise which is proposed to be entered into in an appeal pending before the Judicial Committee, it is of the utmost importance that there should be a clear expression of opinion by the proper Court in India that such compromise is a beneficial one for these persons. Such a question is essentially and necessarily the proper subject for consideration of the Courts in India, who are in a position to institute the inquiries, to ask the questions and to obtain the information, which must always be required before sanctioning proceedings on behalf of persons who are unable to assent for themselves. Although the Judicial Committee may in rare cases, in their desire to avoid the multiplication or prolongation of proceedings, entertain in the first instance an application to sanction a compromise in which persons under disability are interested, this is not the regular and usual course.

This matter arose upon a petition to approve of the compromise of an appeal, in which minors were interested.

Mr. Dubé for the Appellants.

Mr. Raikes for the Respondents.

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by

LORD BUCKMASTER.—Their Lordships are unable to entertain this petition and regret that a procedure should have been adopted by the High Court which will delay the ultimate judgment and increase the expense. In truth, their Lordships are not in a position to decide whether the terms of compromise which they are asked to sanction are beneficial to the parties who are under a disability, nor can Counsel who appeared before them give them the requisite assurance that they have been able to investigate all material matters, and that the Board can safely act in making the desired order. All such questions are essentially and necessarily the proper subject for consideration of the Courts in India, who are in a position to institute the enquiries, to ask the questions, and to obtain the information which must always be required before sanctioning proceedings on behalf of people who are unable to assent for themselves. In rare cases it may be possible that this could be done here, and in their Lordships' desire to avoid the multiplication or prolongation of proceedings, they may occasionally accept the burden, as was done in the case of Sakinbai v. Shrinibai (1), but

Palayam of Kannivadi, whether inalienable—Palayams, originally held on military tenure, which was abolished—Palayagars continued as zamindars—Rights of Palayagars with whom tenure not permanently settled—Abolition of police duties of zamindars—Effect, to make palayam alienable.

Where lands in British India are held on military service tenure, there is good reason for holding that no one of the successive tenants could deal with the land so as to deprive the next holder of the source from which his duties might be discharged.

NARAGUNTY LUCHMEDAVAMAH v. VEN-GAMA NAIDOO (2) followed.

(2) 9 M. I. A. 66 (1901).

Held—That it may be accepted as a fact that the palayam of Kannivadi was originally held on military tenure and subject to the payment of a tribute to the paramount power, but that the tenure of military service under which the palayam had been held was abolished and determined by the proclamation of the 1st December 1801 issued by the Governor of Madras in Council.

That the palayam was not permanently settled under Reg. XXV of 1902 before 1895 (when it was mortgaged by the holder for the time being); but that did not take away from the former owner any rights he then had—the only difference between a polliam or zamindari which is permanently settled and one that is not, being that in the former the Government is precluded for ever from raising the revenue and in the latter the Government may or may not have that power.

That the conditions in certain sanads granted to the Palayagars of Kannivadi by which the Palayagar was bound to protect the inhabitants by preventing, as far as might be in the power of the Palayagar, robberies, depredations, etc., in their properties, to deliver up persons guilty of murder and not to give shelter to deserters and to apprehend and deliver them to the Collector, were similar to the duties which all landholders and zamindars in British India have to perform. But that even if it were possible to infer from these sanads that the Palayam of Kannivadi was then held on a tenure of rendering police duties to the State, the police duties of zamindars in that part of the country were abolished in 1816 by the Government of Madras.

Held, therefore, that the Palayam of Kannivadi was not inalienable in 1805.

This was an appeal from a decree, dated the 18th February 1918, of the High

Mr. A. M. Dunne, K. C. (with Mr. K. V. L. Narasimham) for the Appellant.—This is an unsettled palayam. In *The Collector of Trichinopoly v. Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by SIR JOHN EDGE.—This is an appeal from a decree, dated the 18th February 1918, of the High Court at Madras, which reversed a decree, dated the 11th September 1916, of the District Judge of Madura.

The suit in which this appeal has arisen was brought to obtain so far as is now material, against the Midnapore Zamindari Company, Limited, hereinafter referred to as the Respondent Company, a decree for possession of the properties specified in Schedules A and C of the plaint, and for mesne profits. The properties claimed were villages of the Palayam of Kannivadi. The suit was brought by two brothers, sons by different wives of the late Malayandi Appaya Naicker, a Hindu, one of whom only could have obtained a decree if their case had been proved. The first Plaintiff on the record was Malayandi Appayasami Naicker, who was the son of Malayandi Appaya Naicker by his first or senior wife; he is the Appellant here, and will be hereafter referred to as the Appellant. The second Plaintiff on the record was the son of Malayandi Appaya Naicker by his second or junior wife, and is by date of birth the elder of the two brothers. They were obviously joined as Plaintiffs, owing to some doubt as to which of them was entitled, on the death of their father in 1911, to succeed to the Palayam by the custom of primogeniture applicable in the family. The second Plaintiff did not appear and was not represented in the High Court, and he is not a party to this appeal, so need not again be referred to.

In the plaint it was alleged that the Palayam of Kannivadi is an ancient impartible Palayam, descendible to a single heir according to the custom of primogeniture; that the Palayam was conferred as a military fief by a Nayak Ruler of Madura about A.D. 1500 upon an ancestor of the Appellant who was placed in charge of one of the principal bastions of Madura Fort; that the Palayagar was by virtue of the tenure liable to be called upon to render military service by furnishing men and other aid, and for police duties and to pay annual tribute to the State; that the Palayam continued to be held by the Appellant's family under the same conditions of tenure and service after the assumption of the Dindigul country by the British; and "That the said Kannivadi Palayam is inalienable beyond the life of the Palayagar for the time being, both by reason of the tenure and according to the custom of the family, which custom came into existence in consequence of the character of the tenure."

Briefly stated, the connection of the Respondent Company with the Palayam of Kannivadi according to the allegations in plaint is as follows:—The grandfather and father of the Appellant in 1895 mortgaged the Palayam to the Commercial Bank, Limited, of Madras, in respect of debts of theirs which were not binding upon the Appellant or upon the Palayam; on that mortgage the Bank obtained a decree, and in execution of that decree, brought the Palayam to sale at auction, and at the sales purchased the estate in 1900, and on the 8th January 1909, conveyed all their rights under the decree and under the auction sales to the Respondent Company, who have since then been in possession.

Various other matters were alleged in the plaint as to which no arguments were addressed to their Lordships by either side.

The Respondent Company in their written statement admitted that the Zamindari of Kannivadi was at the time of the sale to the Bank impartible and was descendible to a single heir according to the custom of primogeniture, but they denied that it had been conferred upon an ancestor of the Appellant "for being in charge of a bastion of the Madura Fort;" denied that the estate had been granted or was ever held subject to any obligation of rendering military or police service, or was inalienable, or that the Zamindar had ever held any office by virtue of which he was under any obligation to perform military or police duties; denied that there is any family custom or anything in the tenure of the Kannivadi Zamindari which rendered it inalienable beyond the life of the Palayagar, and alleged that in law the Zamindar for the time being of the Kannivadi Zamindari always possessed an absolute interest in it with full powers of alienation. The Respondent Company in their written statement pleaded several other matters, which in the view that their Lordships take of the case are not now necessary to be considered.

There were 27 issues fixed for the trial of the suit, but in their Lordships' opinion, the tenth issue was in the circumstances that upon which the decision of this appeal depends. It was:—"X. Whether the plaint mentioned Zamindari is inalienable either by custom or by virtue of its tenure?" If it was not inalienable either by custom or by reason of its tenure the Palayagar for the time was entitled to mortgage or to transfer absolutely every village in the Palayam according to his pleasure. That is the result of the decisions of the Board in cases of impartible estates in India which descend according to a custom of primogeniture. Until the law on this subject was placed by decisions of the Board beyond a doubt there was a current of judicial decisions in the Presidency of Madras to the effect that a holder of an impartible estate which descended by a rule of primogeniture could not transfer except for his own lifetime any part of the estate unless possibly for necessity.

The suit was tried by the District Judge of Madura. The District Judge states in his judgment that:—

“The Plaintiffs base their case not on custom but on the military and police nature of the tenure and rely on the decision in Sartaj Kuari v. Deoraj Kuari (1) to establish that if such is its tenure it (the estate) is inalienable . . . A distinction is also sought to be drawn between the present case and others in that in them there was a Permanent Settlement, whereas in the present case the estate was an unsettled Palayam till the Bank obtained a Permanent Sannad in 1905 from the Government.”

The District Judge, after an elaborate consideration of all the historical references to the family to which the Appellant here belonged, and of reports and proceedings of Officers of the Government, came to the conclusion that the Palayam of Kannivadi was held down to 1816 for police as well as military service, and that although by 1816 the Government had removed from the Palayagar the duty of police services, the Government had not by the grant of a Zamindari sannad altered the tenure by which the Palayam was held. His final conclusion on the tenth issue is thus expressed:—“It seems to me, therefore, that as I have held the Palayam to have been held on a military and karal (Police) tenure, that as it had never been settled and as there was no express putting an end to the military liabilities, the estate must be held to have been held on the old tenure up to the grant of the sannad in 1905 to the Bank, and that therefore up to that date the estate was inalienable. This is my finding on issue 10.” The District Judge made a decree in favour of the Appellant here, against the Respondent Company. From that decree the Respondent Company appealed to the High Court at Madras.

The High Court in dealing with the appeal considered separately the question as to whether the Palayam of Kannivadi was held on military service tenure, and the question as to whether it was held on a tenure of performing for the State police duties. Their Lordships will adopt the same course in dealing with this appeal. The learned Judges in their judgment referred to the fact that the Board in Naraguntty Luchmudavamah v. Vengama Naidoo (2) which related to the Naraguntty Palayam in the District of Chittore in the Presidency of Madras, had accepted as correct the explanation in Wilson's Glossary that Palayagars were originally petty Chieftains occupying usually tracts of hills or forest country subject to pay tribute and service to the paramount State, but seldom paying either, and more or less independent; but as having at present, since the subjugation of the country by the East India Company, subsided into peaceable landholders. With reference to that description the learned Judges found that:—“There can be no doubt that Kannivadi was a Palayam of this nature.” It has not been suggested at the hearing of this appeal that that conclusion of the High Court was not correct. The High Court do not state when the Palayam of Kannivadi was first granted to an ancestor of the Appellant; there was not on the record any reliable evidence on that point, but they obviously and rightly considered that the grant had been made before Dindigul, in which District Kannivadi is situated, was ceded to the East India Company by the Treaty of Seringapatam, 1792.

It may be accepted as a fact that the

MALAYANDI APPAYASAMI NAICKER v. THE MIDNAPORE ZAMINDARY CO., LD.

Palayam of Kannivadi was originally held on military service tenure and subject to the payment of a tribute to the paramount power. Where lands in British India are held on military service tenure, there is good reason for holding that "no one of the successive tenants could deal with the land so as to deprive the next holder of the source from which his duties might be discharged." (See Mayne's Hindu Law, para. 337). "A Palayam is in the nature of a Raj, it may belong to an undivided family, but it is not the subject of partition; it can be held by only one member of the family at a time." (See the Naragunty case (2) cited above). The question, so far as it depends on military service tenure is concerned, is—Did the Palayam continue to be held on military service tenure when the mortgage to the Bank was made in 1895? The High Court held that the military service of Palayagars of the Madura and Tinnevely Districts was abolished in 1801 by the Proclamation of the 1st December 1801, of Lord Clive, Governor in Council.

On the 2nd October 1799, in consequence of a rebellion which had been fomented and supported by Palayagars of the Tinnevely District, Major Bannerman, as Military Commandant of the Southern Detachment, had been obliged to issue a Proclamation to the Palayagars, landholders and inhabitants of the Tinnevely District, ordering the Palayagars to destroy all forts in their Palayams and to deliver all guns, gingal pieces, firelocks, matchlocks and pikes in their possession, or in the possession of any of the inhabitants, to the Military Detachments sent to receive them. The Court of Directors in their letter of 11th February 1801, to Fort St. George (the Government of Madras), sanctioned the gradual introduction of a permanent land settlement in the Presidency, but laid down that it was of first importance that "all subordinate military establishments should be annihilated within the limits subject to the Dominions of the Company." That must have meant that military service tenures should be abolished in the Districts subordinate to Fort St. George.

In consequence of those orders of the 31th February 1801, Lord Clive, Governor in Council, issued the Proclamation of the 1st December 1801, which was addressed to the Palayagars of the Madura and Tinnevely Districts. That proclamation referred to a proclamation of the 9th December 1799, of the Governor in Council of Fort St. George addressed to the Palayagars of Tinnevely and to a rebellion excited and maintained in arms by Palayagars of Panchalam Kurishi and of Virupakshi and by the Sherogars of Sivaganga. The following paragraphs of the Proclamation of the 1st December 1801, show clearly what the Government of Fort St. George intended.

"Wherefore the Right Honourable Edward Lord Clive, Governor in Council, aforesaid, with the view of preventing the recurrence of the fatal evils which have attended the possession of arms by the Palayagars and Sherogars of the southern provinces and with the view also of enforcing the conditions of the Proclamation published by Major Bannerman on the 2nd October 1799, formally announces to the Palayagars, Sherogars and inhabitants of the southern provinces the positive determination of His Lordship in Council to suppress the use and exercise of all weapons of offence with the exception of such as shall be authorised by the British Government."

"The military service heretofore rendered by the Palayagars and Sherogars having been suppressed and the Company having in consequence charged itself with the protection and defence of the Palayagar countries, the possession of fire arms and weapons of offence is manifestly become unnecessary to the safety of people. The Right Honourable the Governor in Council therefore orders and directs all persons possessed of arms in the provinces of Dindigul, Tinnevely, Rannadpuram, Sivaganga, and Madura to deliver the said arms consisting of muskets, matchlocks, pikes (to?) Lieutenant-Colonel Agnew, the Officer now commanding the forces in those provinces.

"It is unnecessary to assure the people of the southern provinces that the Right Honourable the Governor in Council in the determination of carrying this resolution into effect can be governed by no other motives than those connected with the sacred duty of providing for the permanent tranquility of those countries. His Lordship disclaims every wish of subjecting the chiefs and hereditary landlords to any humiliation, but the discontinuance of the general use of arms according to the prevailing habits of those countries being indispensably necessary to the preservation of peace and to the restoration of prosperity, the Governor in Council hopes that the chieftains will with cheerfulness sacrifice a custom now become useless to the attainment of those important objects.

"With a view therefore of tempering the execution of their general resolution with as great a degree of attention as may be practicable to the hereditary customs and to the personal feelings of the chieftains, the Right Honourable Lord Clive, Governor in Council aforesaid, hereby authorises each Palayagar or Zamindar to retain a certain number of peons carrying pikes for the purpose of maintaining the pomp and state heretofore attached to the persons of the said Palayagars. But the said number of authorised pikemen shall be fixed and shall continue to be limited for the better execution of this intention, the said number of pikemen shall be determined by the Governor in Council of Fort St. George upon the representation of the several Palayagars transmitted through the regular channel of the Company's Collector, after proclamation of the number so fixed, the names of the said pikemen shall be registered in the public cutcherry of the Collector, and the pikes shall in like manner be publicly stamped by the Collector with a mark bearing the sanction of the British Government.

"In the confident expectation of reclaiming the people of the southern provinces from the habit of predatory warfare and in the hope of inducing them to resume the arts of peace and agriculture, the Right Honourable Edward Lord Clive, Governor in Council of Fort Saint George aforesaid, announces to the Palayagars and to all the inhabitants of their Palayams that it is the intention of British Government to establish a permanent assessment of revenue on the lands of the Palayams upon the principles of Zamindari tenures, which assessment being once fixed shall be liable to no change in any time to come, that the Palayagars becoming by these means Zamindars of their hereditary estates will be exempted from all military service and that the possessions of their ancestors will be secured to them under the operation of limited and defined laws to be printed and published as well for the purpose of restraining its own officers to the regulations and ordinances of the Government as of securing to the people their property, their lives and their religious usages of their respective castes."

It appears to their Lordships that by that Proclamation military service tenures in the districts to which the Proclamation applied were abolished whether the Palayagars obtained a permanent assessment sannad or not.

Following upon the Proclamation of the 1st December 1801, came Reg. XXV of 1802, under which a permanent settlement so far, if at all, as it has any bearing on this case was made with the Bank; and an Istimvari Sannad was granted to the Bank on the 29th September 1805. The Palayam estate had not been previously settled. The Palayagars generally, including the Palayagar of Kannivadi, refused to accept Istimvari sannads, and when the Palayagar of Kannivadi for the time being was willing to accept a sannad the Government refused in 1863 to grant him one. There can be little doubt that that refusal to grant him a sannad was out of consideration for the family, as it was generally believed that it was more difficult for a creditor to bring to sale unsettled Palayams than Palayam estates which were held under an Istimvari Settlement sannad. It appears to their Lordships that Reg. XXV of 1802 does not affect the question as to whether in 1895 the Palayam of Kannivadi was alienable or not. The Board decided in the Marungapuri case [The Collector v. Trichinopoly v. Lekkamani (3)], that the affirmative words of the 2nd section of Reg. XXV of 1802, "That in consequence of the assessment the proprietary right of the soil shall become vested in zemindars, etc., did not either give to or take away from the former owners of lands not permanently settled, any rights which they then had. It (a settlement under that Regulation) merely vested in all zamindars an hereditary right at a fixed revenue upon the conclusion of the permanent settlement with them" Murungapuri case (3). In that case the Board approved of the opinion expressed by the High Court of Madras: "That the existence of a proprietary estate in polliams or other lands not permanently assessed, and the tenure by which it has been held, are, in our opinion, matters judicially determinable on legal evidence, just as the right to any other property" (p. 312). In the same case the Board held that: "The only difference between a polliam or zamindari which is permanently settled and one that is not, is that, in the former, the Government is precluded for ever from raising the revenue; and, in the latter, the Government may or may not have that power" (p. 313). In the present case the learned Judges of the High Court held that the tenure of military service under which the Palayam of Kannivadi had been held, had been abolished and determined by the Proclamation of the 1st December 1801, and with that decision their Lordships have agreed.

It remains to be considered whether the Palayam of Kannivadi was held under a tenure of the Palayagar rendering police service to the State. The best and most reliable evidence that the Palayam was held on police service tenure would be a sannad showing that it was so held. Only two sannads which were granted to any Palayagar of Kannivadi have been brought to the attention of this Board. They are sannads which were granted respectively on the 13th July 1797, for the Fasli year 1207, and the 13th July 1800, for the Fasli year 1200 (?) to Appaya Naicker, the then Palayagar. There is nothing in either of those sannads from which their Lordships can infer that the Palayam of Kannivadi was held on a tenure of rendering police duties to the State. The conditions in those sannads by which the Palayagar was bound to protect the inhabitants by preventing as far as might be in the power of the Palayagar robberies, depredations, etc., in their properties; to deliver up persons guilty of murder; and not to give shelter to deserters, and to apprehend and deliver them to the Collector are similar to the duties which all landholders and zamindars in British India have to perform. Even if it were possible to infer from those sannads that the Palayam of Kannivadi was then held on a tenure of rendering police duties to the State, the police duties of zamindars in that part of the country were abolished in 1816 by the Government of Madras.

Their Lordships hold that in 1895 the Palayam of Kannivadi was not inalienable, and that the then Palayagar had power to alienate it to suit his own purposes, and they will humbly advise His Majesty that this appeal should be dismissed with costs.

[CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION.]APPEAL FROM ORIGINAL DECREE*No. 279 OF 1919.*SREEMUTTY SAROJINI*DASSI, Petitioner,*Appellant,*v.*HARI DAS GHOSE,*Opposite Party,*Respondent.*MOOKERJEE, J.*BUCKLAND, J.*1921.*14, April.

Will, execution of—Duty of Judge in weighing evidence—Positive testimony when to be discounted on the ground of suspicion—Application of the rule when will not inofficious—Propriety of rejecting evidence of witness on the ground of prosecution on criminal charge which resulted in acquittal—Handwriting how to be proved, comparison of handwriting and evidentiary value thereof—Expert testimony of value of.

Where a Will is prepared under circumstances which raise a well-grounded suspicion that it does not express the mind of the testator the Court ought not to pronounce in favour of it unless the suspicion is removed, but this suspicion must be one inherent in the transaction itself and not the doubt that may arise from a conflict of testimony which becomes apparent on an investigation of the transaction.

In order to prevail against positive evidence adduced in support of a Will the improbability must be clear and cogent and must approach very nearly to, if it did not altogether constitute, an impossibility.

In the case of a Will, reasonable, natural and proper in its terms, it is not in accordance with sound rules of construction to apply to it those canons which demand a rigorous scrutiny of documents of which the opposite can be said, namely, that they are unnatural, unreasonable or tinged with impropriety.

In estimating the value of the evidence given by a witness the elementary principle must not be overlooked that where there has been an acquittal the acquittal is conclusive and it would be a very dangerous principle to adopt to regard a judgment of not guilty as not fully establishing the innocence of the person to whom it relates.

The ordinary methods of proving handwriting are (1) by calling as a witness a person who wrote the document or saw it written or who is qualified to express an opinion as to the handwriting by virtue of sec. 47 of the Evidence Act, (2) by a comparison of handwriting as provided in sec. 73 of the Evidence Act, and (3) by the admission of the person against whom the document is tendered. In applying the provision of sec. 73 of the Evidence Act, it is important not to lose sight of its exact terms. It does not sanction the comparison of any two documents but requires that the writing with which the comparison is to be made, or the standard writing as it may be called, shall be admitted or proved to have been written by the person to whom it is attributed and next the writing to be compared with the standard, or in other words, the disputed writing, must purport to have been written by the same person, that is to say, the writing itself must state or indicate that it was written by that person.

A comparison of handwriting is at all times, as a mode of proof, hazardous and inconclusive, and especially when it is made by one not conversant with the subject and without such guidance as might be derived from the arguments of Counsel and the evidence of experts. A comparison of writings has consequently been deemed a mode of ascertaining the truth which ought to be used with very great caution.

Although from the dissimilarity of signatures a Court may legitimately draw the inference that a particular signature is not genuine because it varies from an admittedly genuine signature, yet resemblance of two signatures affords no safe foundation that one of them is genuine.

SREEMUTTY SAROJINI DASSI v. HARI DAS GHOSE.

This was an appeal against the decree of G. N. Ray, Esq., District Judge of Zillah Hooghly, dated the 10th of September 1919.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

Babus Ram Chandra Mozumdar, Monmotha Nath Mukherjee, Satindra Nath Mukherjee and Rama Prosad Mukherjee for the Appellant.

Dr. Dwarka Nath Mitter and Babu Debendra Nath Mondal for the Respondent.

MOOKERJEE, J.—The subject-matter of the litigation which has resulted in this appeal is the estate left by one Rajani Moni alias Rajanibala Dasi, a Hindu lady who died on the 21st March 1917. She left a son Nitai, a grandson Anil by a pre-deceased son, and three married daughters. The relationship of the several members of the family is indicated on the following genealogical table :—

The case for the Appellant is that three days before her death, Rajanimani made a testamentary disposition of her properties. On the 25th August 1917, an application for probate was lodged in the Court of the District Delegate by the present Appellant Sarojini, the widowed daughter-in-law of the deceased, but it was returned as objection was filed. An application for letters of administration with a copy of the Will annexed was consequently presented to the District Judge on the 12th October 1917. Objection was thereupon lodged on the 22nd January 1918 by the Respondent Haridas Ghose on the allegation that he had, on the 28th May 1917, acquired title to the estate left by Rajanimani, by purchase from her son Nitai Chandra Ghose who had succeeded thereto as the heir-at-law. Thus emerged the question in controversy between the parties, namely, whether the Will alleged to have been executed by Rajanimani on the 18th March 1917, is or is not genuine. The District Judge has come to the conclusion that the Will propounded was not duly executed. On the present appeal the correctness of this view has been impeached on behalf of the propounder.

The preamble to the Will recites that the testatrix had been in failing health for some time and had come to the residence of his second son-in-law Krishna Chandra Ghose at Baranagar in the northern suburbs of Calcutta. The first clause enumerates the relations of the testatrix as set out in the genealogical table. The second clause states that her surviving son Nitai Chandra Ghose had taken to evil ways and that she had consequently decided not to leave him any portion of her estate but that if he left any son or sons of good character, the said grandson or grandsons would, after attainment of majority, be competent to possess and enjoy the property according to the terms of the Will. The third clause gives a description of her properties, namely, two houses in Calcutta, one purchased with her own money, the other obtained by virtue of a deed of gift from her mother-in-law. The fourth clause provides for maintenance allowance to an aunt-in-law dependent upon her. The fifth clause gives a monthly allowance to her son Nitai, her grandson Anil and to her three married daughters. The sixth clause provides for the performance of her Sradh from the sale proceeds of her ornaments, the surplus to be taken by her son Nitai.

The seventh clause gives one-half of her property to her grandson Anil and the other half to the son or sons that might be born of the loins of her son Nitai. The eighth paragraph makes the various sums, payable as maintenance, a charge on the estate. The ninth clause contains miscellaneous directions. There can be little doubt that the primary object of the testatrix was to keep her property out of the hands of her son who had taken to drink and women at an early age, and had in 1912 become involved in a shooting case.

There are six attesting witnesses to the Will including the scribe. All of them have been examined. The evidence of Babu Jyotish Chandra Hazra, a Vakil of this Court who is related to the family and was consulted by the lady as to a possible testamentary disposition, has also been recorded. The District Judge has stated that he believed in full the evidence of Babu Jyotish Chandra Hazra. That evidence shows that the lady sent for him and requested him to draft a Will, so that Nitai might not be able to destroy the estate. She said that she had two houses in Calcutta and that she wished to leave one half to the son of his predeceased son and the other half to the son of Nitai, if one should be born. She also desired to provide small monthly annuities for her aunt and her married daughters. Jyotish Babu thereupon told the lady that such a Will, leaving something to an unborn person, was not possible, but that as the law might soon be altered by a Bill already introduced into the Council, she could make the Will she desired after the law had been changed. This Bill as we know was passed on the 28th September 1916, and was placed on the statute book as Act XV of 1916. Jyotish Babu further stated that he met Krishna Chandra Ghose, the son-in-law of the lady, after the law had been altered, and told him to inform her that she could then make the Will she wanted. Some time afterwards, Krishna Chandra came to the house of Jyotish Babu at Bhowanipore, told him that the lady was very ill at Baranagar and requested him to draft a Will. Jyotish Babu told Krishna Chandra that he was occupied with examination work and could not afford time to see the lady for the next ten or fifteen days. Upon this evidence, strengthened by that of Dr. Gokul Chandra Dhar, there is no room for doubt that before September 1916, the lady had intended to make a testamentary disposition of her properties so as to exclude her son from the inheritance, and that she retained such intention as late as the end of February or the beginning of March 1917 after she had removed from her residence in British Chandernagore to the house of her second son-in-law at Baranagar. The question has accordingly to be faced, whether she did in fact carry out her intention by means of the document under consideration. Her son-in-law Krishna Chandra Ghose who holds an important position in a mercantile firm and who takes no benefit under the Will, unless indeed the annuity of Rs. 2 a month in favour of his wife can be regarded as such, has been examined and cross-examined at considerable length. He corroborates the narrative of Babu Jyotish Chandra Hazra in every material particular and adds that his mother-in-law repeatedly expressed a wish to make a Will in view of the conduct and character of her son Nitai. On the refusal of Jyotish Babu, he went to Narayan Chandra Chatterjee a pleader of Baranagar, now dead, who expressed his inability to come on the Sunday, on which the Will was made. Thereupon a neighbour Adhar Chandra Ghose, a trader in rice, offered to secure the services of a deed-writer Nanda Lal Das, who was known to him. Krishna

Chandra accordingly took Nanda Lal to his mother-in-law who gave him instructions about the provisions to be inserted in the Will. Nanda Lal thereupon prepared a draft which has been produced in these proceedings. It was read over to Rajanimani, and after she had expressed her approval, Nanda Lal made a fair copy. At this juncture, Rash Behari Mukherjee, the physician who attended upon Rajanimani, came to see her, and as was quite natural, he was requested to stay and attest the Will. Krishna Chandra also asked a neighbour Sailsewar Sanyal, a trader, to come and attest the Will. It so happened that Jitendra Nath Upadhyaya, a pleader of the Alipur Bar, had just at that time come to Saileswar Sanyal to collect some money due to his brother. Krishna Chandra, seeing him present, and learning that he was a pleader, pressed him to come and be attesting witness. The Will was subsequently executed by the lady and was attested by Nanda Lal Das, the scribe, Krishna Chandra Ghose, the son-in-law of the testatrix, Adhar Chandra Ghose a local trader, Rash Behari Mukherjee, the physician, Saileswar Sanyal a neighbour and a trader, and Jitendra Nath Upadhyaya the pleader. These persons have come forward to pledge their oath that the Will was executed by the lady and was duly attested by them. They are persons of respectability, and no hypothesis has been put forward, except the innate perversity of human nature to explain why they should all conspire to forge the Will, and to perjure themselves in Court. The version given by them in examination-in-chief has not been affected by cross-examination; on the other hand, their statements are free from material contradictions, and their narratives have the ring of truth about them. These statements are further supported by Sarojini, the widowed daughter-in-law of the testatrix who was in the room where the document was executed; she was subjected to a severe and prolonged cross-examination, but with no effect. This mass of testimony has however, been summarily brushed aside by the District Judge on grounds of suspicion for which no foundation has been laid in the evidence. No doubt, as stated by Lord Davey in Tyrrell v. Painton (1), wherever a Will is prepared under circumstances which raise a well-grounded suspicion that it does not express the mind of the testator, the Court ought not to pronounce in favour of it unless the suspicion is removed. But as was explained by Jenkins, C. J., in Jarat Kumari v. Biseswar Dutt (2), this suspicion must be one inherent in the transaction itself, and not the doubt that may arise from a conflict of testimony which becomes apparent on an investigation of the transaction. The reasons assigned by the District Judge for his refusal to act upon the testimony of some at any rate of the witnesses examined in this case indicate, however, that he has approached the evidence from an entirely erroneous standpoint. Thus, with regard to Nanda Lal Das, the scribe, he notes that he was procured from Serampore across the river and adds that as he has been a pleader's clerk and writes for people frequenting Courts and Registration Offices, he is a likely hand to be chosen for getting up a deed. There is no foundation laid in the evidence for the imputation thus made against professional deed-writers in general. He next dismisses the evidence of the doctor Rash Behari Mukherjee with the remark that he does not pay income tax and was prosecuted in a forgery case. This comment is based apparently on a statement made by the witness in the following terms: "there was a criminal case against me for forging a currency note; there were fourteen accused in the case; only one Phani Bhusan Pan was convicted; all the other including myself were acquitted in the Sessions Court; that was seven or eight years ago." The District Judge thus overlooks the elementary principle that where there has been an acquittal, the acquittal is conclusive; as Jenkins, C. J., observed in King-Emperer v. Nani Gopal (3), on the authority of the decision in R. v. Plummer (4), it would be a very dangerous principle to adopt to regard a judgment of not guilty as not fully establishing the innocence of the person to whom it relates. Again, Saileswar Sanyal is discredited because he is a neighbour, while Jitendra Nath Upadhaya is not, relied on because he is a chance witness from a distance. The District Judge, however, concedes that the evidence of all these witnesses could be accepted if the Will had been executed in the natural way and publicity given to it, though he does not state how the execution was unnatural and how secrecy could have been intended when at least half a dozen strangers were present in the assembly. The District Judge next proceeds to make the general observation that it must be acknowledged that there is no great reluctance in our country in getting up a deed of this kind. There is no trace of evidence in the record to support this remark with regard to the people either of the province in general or of the localities where the lady resided, or the Will was executed. The Judge then proceeds to rely upon a statement made by Babu Jyotish Chandra Hazra in cross-examination to the effect that Kanti Chandra Ghose and Kailas Chandra Ghose two members of the Ghose family of Chandernagore, had propounded a Will alleged to have been executed by Trailokhya Nath Ghose, brother of Kanti Chandra Ghose that probate of the Will was refused by the trial Court, and that during the pendency of an appeal in this Court, the matters in difference were settled by a deed of release, dated the 9th March 1916. It is difficult to see how this statement is relevant to the present proceedings and how it can be admissible in evidence. The recitals in the deed of release are plainly inadmissible, and the document was introduced into evidence for an entirely different purpose, namely, as containing the signature of Rajanibala who had acted as the guardian of her infant grandson Anil Chandra in the transaction. The District Judge plainly should not have allowed his judgment upon the question of the genuineness of the Will now in controversy to be affected in the remotest degree by what took place in connection with the alleged Will of Trailokhya Nath Ghose. Moreover, his observation that the Will of Trailokhya Nath was designed to cheat his daughters while the present Will is intended to save the estate from the effect of the conduct of a dissolute son, can only be regarded as embodying a wholly misleading analogy. This is followed up by the entirely groundless imputation that a friendly neighbour (Saileswar Sanyal) and a young student (the pleader Jitendra Nath Upadhaya) would not be averse to helping a minor. In view of these and other remarks made by the District Judge, we see no escape from the conclusion that the adverse opinion formed by him with regard to the Will in dispute is not based upon a consideration and analysis of the positive evidence on the record. He has in fact adopted the method which has been more than once condemned by the Judicial Committee; Chotey Narayan v. Ratan Koer (5) and Jagrani Koer v. Durga Prosad (6). As was observed by Lord Watson in the first of these cases, in order to prevail against such evidence as has been adduced, the improbability must be clear and cogent and must approach very nearly to, if it did not altogether constitute, an impossibility. This was emphasised by Lord Shaw in the second case when he added that the objection that the witnesses might have been of a better class is at an end when execution and attestation are proved. A comment of this character has no force except upon something of a much higher level than mere suspicion, namely, proof which would thoroughly satisfy the mind of a Court that the witnesses had committed both forgery and perjury. In the case of a Will reasonable, natural and proper in its terms, it is not in accordance with sound rules of construction to apply to those canons which demand a rigorous scrutiny of documents of which the opposite can be said, namely that they are unnatural, unreasonable or tinged with impropriety. In view of all these circumstances, we cannot attach much weight to the opinion of the trial Judge who had the advantage of seeing the witnesses and noticing their look and manner, as laid down by the Judicial Committee in Shama Charan v. Kshettormoni (7), Shun Muga v. Manikka (8), Bombay Cotton Manufacturing Co. v. Motilal (9), R. v. Bertrand (10), and other decisions reviewed in Laljee Mahomed v. Guzdar (11) and Surendra Krishna v. Rani Dasi (12).

We may further observe that the evidence adduced by the propounder is practically uncontradicted. We have on the other side some evidence as to realization of rent from the tenants of the houses after the death of the testatrix. On one occasion Nitai and Krishna jointly demanded rent; that was apparently to meet the expenses of the Sradh ceremony. The tenant, however did not pay the rent, and he continued to withhold it when he found there was a dispute as to the title. The only evidence worthy of notice adduced on the side of the caveator is the signature of the testatrix on the release. There may be a controversy as to whether the document was duly proved and received in evidence but even if we assume that it was really executed by the lady, it does not assist the case of the caveator. The District Judge limited himself to the observation that the signature on the Will is firm and not like that of a pale and emaciated lady on the point of death. We have no evidence to show how much vitality the lady possessed three days before her death; but this much is plain that a comparison of the signature on the Will with that on the deed of release is not calculated to excite suspicion. In this connection, reference may be made to the exposition of the methods of proving handwriting given by Jenkins, C. J., in the case of Barindra Kumar v. Emperor (13) which was followed in Pulin Behari v. King-Emperor (14). The ordinary methods of proving handwritings are (1) by calling as a witness a person who wrote the document or saw it written, or who is qualified to express an opinion as to the handwriting by virtue of sec. 47 of the Evidence Act; (2) by a comparison of handwriting as provided in sec. 73 of the Evidence Act; and (3) by the admission of the person against whom the document is tendered. A document does not prove itself, nor is an unproved signature proof of its having been written by the person whose signature it purports to bear. In applying the provisions of sec. 73 of the Evidence Act, it is important not to lose sight of its exact terms. It does not sanction the comparison of any two documents, but requires that the writing with which the comparison is to be made, or the standard writing as it may be called, shall be admitted or proved to have been written by the person to whom it is attributed, and next the writing to be compared with the standard or, in other words, the disputed writing must purport to have been written by the same person, that is to say the writing itself must state or indicate that it was written by that person. The section does not specifically state by whom the comparison may be made, though the second paragraph of the section dealing with a related subject expressly provides by way of contrast that in that particular connection the Court may make the comparison. A comparison of handwriting is at all times as a mode of proof hazardous and inconclusive, and especially when it is made by one not conversant with the subject and without such guidance as might be derived from the arguments of Counsel and the evidence of experts. In Phooddee Bibee v. Govind Chunder Roy (15), it was said by the Court that "a comparison of signature is a mode of ascertaining the truth which ought to be used with very great care and caution." It is true that the opinions of experts on handwriting meet with their full share of disparagement at times, but at any-rate there is this use in their employment, that the appearance on which they rely are disclosed, and can thus be supported or criticised, whereas an opinion formed by a Judge in the privacy of his own room is subject to no such check. And that the aid of an expert may be of value was clearly the opinion of so distinguished a Judge as Mr. Justice Blackburn, who in Reg. v. Harvey (16) refused to allow a comparison to be made without the help of experts. A comparison of writings has consequently been deemed a mode of ascertaining the truth which ought to be used with very great caution, Nobin Krishna v. Rasik Lal (17) and Kurali Prasad v. Anantaram (18), specially if no skilled witness has been called to make the comparison, R. v. Silverlock (19), R. v. Harvey (16), Doc v. Suckermore (20), Rajendra Nath v. Jogendra Nath (21) and Rames Chandra v. Rajani Kanta (22). We must further bear in mind that although from the dissimilarity of signatures, a Court may legitimately draw the inference that a particular signature is not genuine because it varies from an admittedly genuine signature, yet resemblance of two signatures affords no safe foundation that one of them is genuine. Now it may be conceded that if two signatures are exactly identical, there is room for suspicion that the one in question may be a copy or careful imitation of the genuine signature. It is a fact well-known and may be readily verified that no two signatures, actually written in the ordinary course of writing them are precisely alike. The character of a person's signatures is generally of uniform appearance, and the resemblance between one and another signature of the same person is thus apparent but the coincidence is seldom known where a genuine signature of a person superposed over another genuine signature of the same person is such a facsimile that one is a perfect match to the other in every respect. There is generally diversity in the makes of the pen, the size of the letter, the level of the signature and space it occupies, that stands as a guard over the genuine signature and characterises it as the true signature. But as was observed by Coleridge, J., in Doe v. Suckermore (20), "the test of genuineness ought to be the resemblance not to the formation of letters in some other specimen or specimens but to the general character of the writing which is impressed on it as the involuntary and unconscious result of constitution, habit or other permanent cause and is, therefore, itself permanent." Again as Sir J. Nicholl said in Robson v. Locke (23) "the best, usually perhaps, the only proper evidence of handwriting is that of persons who have acquired a previous knowledge of the party's handwriting from seeing him write and who form their opinion from the general character and manner of these, and not from criticising the particular letters." I have compared the two signatures and the impression left upon my mind by their prevailing character is that they are signatures of the same person, although on one document she signs her name as Rajanibala and in the other as Rajanimoni. But notwithstanding this general correspondence of the signature, justifying a reasonable inference that they were made by the same person, I do not desire to base my conclusion upon the similarity of the signatures, because, as has been well-observed, it is not difficult to forge the handwriting of almost any person so that it may be impossible for even the most acute and experienced Judge to discriminate between the false and the true. Besides, such reliance upon similarity of signatures is unnecessary in the present case, as there is in my opinion a mass of direct and circumstantial evidence which points unmistakably to the genuineness of the Will. After an examination of that evidence and a consideration of the criticisms thereon by the District Judge and by Counsel for the Respondent in this Court, I feel no doubt that the Will was duly executed and attested by the testatrix. I may add that it is not necessary here to consider what may be the legal effect of the grant of probate upon the title set up by the caveator.

The result is that the appeal must be allowed, the decree of the District Judge set aside and the application for letters of administration with copy of the Will annexed granted to the Appellant with costs in both Courts.

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE

No. 493 of 1917.

MOOKERJEE, J.
BEACHOROFF, J. GOPAL CHANDRA SEN
1917, and ors., Defendants, Heard, 26, July. Appellants,
1919, v.
Judgment, BANKIM BEHARI ROY,
26, March. Plaintiff, Respondent.

Indian Limitation Act (IX of 1908), sec. 26—Suit for declaration of right of way—Necessity of proving that enjoyment of the right ended within two years before suit—Affirmative proof of “actual user,” if necessary—Distinction between “enjoyment” of a right of easement and “actual exercise” of the right.

Plaintiff brought a suit for declaration of a right of way and for removal of an obstruction thereto. The right was enjoyed for more than 20 years peaceably and openly, without interruption, as an easement, and as of right. There was no discontinuance of the “enjoyment” by reason of the obstruction by the Defendant, till within a few days previous to the institution of the suit, and there was no suggestion that the Plaintiff voluntarily abandoned or discontinued the exercise of the right at any time before such date:

Held—That it was not necessary for the Plaintiff to prove affirmatively “actual user” of the way down to a date within two years before the suit.

SHAM CHURN v. TARINEY CHURN (4), KOYLASH v. SONATUN (5), VINAYAK v. MARTAND (6) and GHULAM v. GULSHER (7) referred to.

A person may without violence to language, be said to be in “enjoyment” of a right of way during a period of time, though he does not actually “use” the way every moment. Cessation of user is not always inconsistent with continuance of enjoyment of a right, or in other words, cessation of user is not an invariable indication of abeyance of enjoyment of a right.

JANHAVI v. BINDU (3), CARR v. FOSTER (8), JAMES v. STEVENSON (9) and CROSSLEY v. LIGHTOWLER (10) referred to.

This was an appeal preferred on the 13th March 1917, against the decree of Babu Bejoy Gopal Chatterjee, Officiating Subordinate Judge, 2nd Court, of Zillah Midnapore, dated 10th January 1917, modifying the decree of Babu Jyotish Chandra Neogi, Munsif, 1st Court at Contai, dated 7th October 1915.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

MOOKERJEE, J.—This is an appeal by the Defendants in a suit for declaration of right of way, for removal of an obstruction thereto, for a permanent injunction and for incidental reliefs. The Plaintiff set up a claim to use the pathway for several purposes, namely, (a) to obtain access to a public road across the sanddune which lies towards the north of his homestead, (b) to enable his workmen to bring materials for the repair and construction of houses, (c) to enable his sweepers to remove night soil, and (d) to take his cattle to the field. The Defendants denied the existence of the alleged way and pleaded the bar of limitation. The trial Court decreed the suit. Upon appeal the Subordinate Judge held that there was ample evidence to prove that the inmates of the house of the Plaintiff had, for a period much exceeding 20 years, used the way for access to the sanddune where they went to answer calls of nature; but he was not satisfied with the evidence as to the user of the pathway by sweepers, labourers and cattle. In this view, the Subordinate Judge modified the decree of the primary Court and limited the declaration of the way for use by the inmates of the house of the Plaintiff as a passage for access to the sanddune on the north of the land of the Defendants. The Defendants were not satisfied with this partial success and have appealed to this Court, substantially on the ground that the facts found are not sufficient to justify the declaration of a prescriptive right of way under sec. 26 of the Indian Limitation Act.

To enable a Plaintiff to establish that he has acquired, under the statute an absolute and indefeasible right of way, he must prove that the way has been peaceably and openly enjoyed by a person claiming title thereto as an easement and as of right, without interruption, and for twenty years. The Subordinate Judge has found that in this case the user extended over a period much longer than 20 years, that the right was peaceably and openly enjoyed, without interruption, as an easement and not on account of any proprietary interest in the land, and that no permission was obtained from the Defendants or their predecessors. The Plaintiff must accordingly be deemed to have acquired an absolute and indefeasible right of way.

The question next arises whether, as required by the statute, the period of "enjoyment" for twenty years ended within two years next before the institution of this suit; for the Plaintiff cannot succeed merely by proof of enjoyment for twenty years; he must show also that such enjoyment ended only within two years before suit. [Gopee v. Bhooban (1), Luchmee v. Tiluckdaree (2) and Janhavi v. Bindu (3)]. Upon this point, the Subordinate Judge is not explicit. In the eighth paragraph of the plaint, filed on the 19th March 1915, it was alleged that the Defendants made the first attempt at obstruction on the 13th March and built the wall across the path three days later on the 16th March, thereby preventing the Plaintiff from using the disputed way. In the written statement, although the right of way was denied, the assertion that the wall had been erected on the date mentioned was not expressly challenged. The Court of first instance found that the wall was erected in March and held that no question of limitation consequently arises. This finding does not appear to have been impugned before the lower Appellate Court. The position, then, is that the Plaintiff acquired an absolute and indefeasible right of way by "enjoyment" for the statutory period; there was no discontinuance of the "enjoyment" by reason of an obstruction by the Defendants, till within a few days previous to the institution of this suit, and there is no suggestion that the Plaintiff voluntarily abandoned or discontinued the exercise of the right at any time before such date. In these circumstances, it is not necessary for the Plaintiff to prove affirmatively "actual user" of the way down to a date within two years before the suit. [Sham Churn v. Tariney Churn (4), Koylash v. Sonatun (5), Vinayak v. Mar- and (6) and Ghulam v. Gulsher (7)]. A person may, without violence to language, be said to be in "enjoyment" of a right of way during a period of time, though he does not actually "use" the way every moment. As explained by Garth, C. J., in Sham Churn v. Tariney Churn (4) mere non-user, for a time, of an easement which the owner might, if he pleased, enjoy during every hour of that time, but which, for some good reason he does not care to enjoy, is not necessarily discontinuance of enjoyment of the right; for instance, where the owner of a house does not use a way to it because the house is for a time unoccupied or where a farmer desists for a time from using a pasture because he happens to have no pasturable cattle or because the herbage is scanty or unwholesome by reason of draught or like cause, each may still be considered as in "enjoyment" of the right of easement. This distinction between "enjoyment" of a right of easement and "actual exercise" of the right was overlooked in illustration (b) to sec. 26 of the Indian Limitation Act, 1877, [as was pointed out by Garth, C. J., in Koylash v. Sonatun (5)] which was consequently not reproduced in the Indian Limitation Act, 1908. To put the matter briefly, cessation of user is not always inconsistent with continuance of enjoyment of a right [Janhavi v Bindu (3)] or in other words, cessation of user is not an invariable indication of abeyance of enjoyment of a right. This was recognised in Carr v. Foster (8), in which it was ruled that where a commoner had ceased to use the common during two years of the thirty (as he had no commonable cattle at the time), but had used it before and after, the jury was justified in finding a continued enjoyment of the right during thirty years. See also the decision of the Judicial Committee in James v. Stevenson (9) and of Lord Chelmsford, L. C., in Crossley v. Lightowler (10). In our opinion, the disputed way was "enjoyed" by the Plaintiff as an easement within two years next before the institution of the suit.

The result is that the decree of the Subordinate Judge is affirmed and this appeal dismissed with costs.

This was an appeal against the decrees of Babu Aparajit Prosad Mukherjee, Subordinate Judge, 3rd Court of Zillah 24-Perganas, dated the 2nd of April 1919, affirming the decree of Babu Probodh Chandra Roy, Munsif, 2nd Court at Basirhat, dated the 22nd of April 1918 and 10th May 1918 respectively.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

Babus Rupendra Kumar Mitter and Pramatha Nath Bandopadhyaya for the Appellant.

No one for the Respondent in No. 1464.

Babus Mahendra Nath Roy and Manmatha Nath Roy for the Respondent in No. 1465.

S. A. No. 1465 of 1919.

This appeal arises out of a suit for redemption of an usufructuary mortgage. The Plaintiff alleged that the mortgage-debt, principal and interest had been satisfied long ago from the usufruct of the property, and that if accounts were taken, a large sum of money would be found due to the Plaintiff. He accordingly, prayed for a declaration that the principal amount had been satisfied, that a decree might be passed awarding possession of the mortgaged property to the Plaintiff and for directing the Defendant to render an account for the period of possession held by him and that a decree might be passed for the amount which may be found due to the Plaintiff after adjustment of accounts. The Court of first instance decreed the suit and that decree has been affirmed on appeal.

The contention which has been raised in this second appeal is that the claim for recovery of the surplus profits received by the mortgagee was barred under Art. 120 of the Indian Limitation Act and reliance has been placed upon the case of Baboolal Dass v. Jamal Ally (1). In that case, it was held by the Full Bench, that when a mortgagor, after a mortgage has been satisfied, sues for the property mortgaged, the case comes within cl. 15 of sec. (1), Act XIV of 1859, but when he sues for surplus collections which have been received by the mortgagee the case comes under cl. 16 of that section. That case was decided under Act XIV of 1859. Cl. 15 of sec. 1 of Act XIV of 1859 provided a period of sixty years for a suit against a mortgagee of any immoveable property for recovery of the same, and it was pointed out by Sir Barnes Peacock in the referring order that cl. 15 does not say that all suits against the mortgagee are to be so limited, but only suits against a mortgagee of any property moveable or immoveable, for the recovery of the same and the question before the Court was whether that applied merely to the matter which was pledged such as, land, or to money, which might be found, upon account, to have been received by the mortgagee in excess of the prinprincipal and the interest. It was held that the latter claim, that is, the recovery of the surplus profits received by the mortgagee could not come under cl. 15, but fell under cl. 16 which provided for suits for which no other period of limitation was fixed. Art. 148 of the present Limitation Act provides that in a suit for redemption or for recovery of possession of immoveable property mortgaged the period is 60 years. Or. XXXIV, r. (7) of the present Code of Civil Procedure lays down that if, in a suit for redemption, the Plaintiff succeeds, the Court shall pass a decree ordering that an account be taken of what will be due to the Defendant for principal and interest on the mortgage, and for his costs of the suit, (if any) awarded to him on the day next herein after referred to. R. 9 lays down, "Notwithstanding anything herein before contained, if it appears upon taking the account referred to in r. 7 that nothing is due to the Defendant or that he has been overpaid the Court shall pass a decree directing the Defendant, if so required, to retransfer the property and to pay to the Plaintiff the amount which may be found due to him, and the Plaintiff, shall, if necessary be put in possession of the mortgaged property." The claim for recovery of the over-payment, i.e., the surplus profits received by the mortgagee is a relief which is part of a suit for redemption itself. That being so, the claim for recovery of the surplus profits would be included in a suit for redemption for which the limitation is provided by Art. 148 of the Limitation Act.

It is contended on behalf of the Appellant, that in that view, Art. 105 of the Limitation Act would be unnecessary. That article provides a period of limitation of three years to a suit by a mortgagor, after the mortgage has been satisfied, to recover the surplus collections received by the mortgagee and the date from which the period runs is when the mortgagor re-enters on the mortgaged property. But there may be cases where the mortgagee has given up the mortgaged property after the mortgage-debt has been satisfied and the mortgagor has re-entered on the mortgage-property otherwise than by means of a suit for redemption. The mortgagor in such a case, has not to bring a suit either for redemption or for possession of the mortgaged property. But he may have to bring a suit for recovery of surplus collections received by the mortgagee, and to such a suit, we think Art. 105 would apply. That seems to be the view taken by the Allahabad High Court in Ram Din v. Bhup Singh (2).

We are also referred to the case of Vinayak Shivrao Dighe v. Dattatraya Gopal (3). There the mortgagor in a suit for redemption was directed to pay a certain sum to the mortgagee which was paid and the mortgagor obtained possession. On appeal by the mortgagee the amount was varied and an additional sum was directed to be paid which was also paid. The mortgagee then sued for recovery of the profits between the date on which the mortgagor obtained possession and the date on which he paid the full amount ordered by the Appellate Court. It was held that the matter was res judicata and the suit was barred, the question raised being one directly arising out of the mortgage transaction which was the subject of the suit for redemption. But that question does not arise here as in the present case, the claim for recovery of surplus profit has been made in the suit for redemption itself. In the case of Venkatesh Gangadhar v. Pandurang Lukshuman Athni (4), Jenkins, C. J., held that Art. 109 of the Limitation Act was applicable to the claim for recovery of profits received by the mortgagee in that case, and that Art. 105 had no application. But there, it was not a suit for redemption, and the mortgagor's interest in the equity of redemption had been put an end to, before the suit was brought. Having regard to the provisions of Or. XXXIV, rr. 7 and 9 which provide expressly for recovery of the surplus profits received by the mortgagee in a suit for redemption we think that the period prescribed in Art. 148 for a suit for redemption will apply to the present case. That being so, the suit is not barred by limitation.

The appeal is, accordingly, dismissed with costs.

Court Fees Act (VII of 1870), Sch. II, Art. 17—Court-fee payable in suit by person whose claim in respect of property attached in execution of decree has been rejected for default.

Under Art. 17, Sch. II of the Court Fees Act, a court-fee of Rs. 10 is payable upon the plaint in a suit by a person, whose claim to properties attached in execution of a decree has been dismissed for default, to set aside the decision.

An order dismissing a claim for default is an order within the meaning of Or. XXI, r. 63 of the Civil Procedure Code, and, subject to the result of a regular suit, is conclusive.

PHUL KUMARI v. GHANASHYAM (9) and NAGENDRA LAL v. FANI BHUSAN (8) relied on.

This was a Rule granted against an order of the Subordinate Judge of Burdwan, dated the 26th February 1921.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

Babu Mahesh Chandra Banerjee for the Petitioner.

Babus Ram Charan Mitra and Ambica Pada Choudhuri for the Opposite Party.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

The question raised in this Rule is whether an ad valorem Court-fee is payable upon the plaint in a suit by a person who had preferred a claim to properties attached in execution of a decree, which was rejected by the Court.

The Petitioner who was the Plaintiff in the suit paid a Court-fee of Rs. 10 for a declaration of his title to the properties, and annas 12 for an injunction.

It appears that when certain properties of the judgment-debtor were attached in execution of a decree for money by the Opposite Party Nos. 1 to 8, the Petitioner preferred a claim on the ground that the properties were purchased by him, and did not belong to the judgment-debtor. The 26th February 1921 was fixed as the date for hearing the claim. On that day a petition was put in on behalf of the claimant for time to enable him to produce his kabala. The decree-holder Opposite Party was present with his witnesses. The Court was of opinion that the petition was not a bond fide one and rejected it. From another order on the same day, it appears that nobody appeared for the claimant though repeatedly called. The order of the learned Subordinate Judge is as follows :—"The decree-holder Opposite Party is ready with pleader and witnesses. The petition of claim is rejected with costs and Rs. 8 as pleader's fee and the claim case No. 3 of 1920 be dismissed."

The first question is whether the order in the claim case was conclusive subject to the result of a regular suit as provided in Or. XXI, r. 63, C. P. C.

There are a large number of cases on the question whether one year's rule of limitation contained in Art. 11 of the Limitation Act is applicable to a suit brought by a person whose claim has been rejected without investigation. That question does not arise in the present case except in so far as it has a bearing upon the question whether an order rejecting a claim under such circumstances is conclusive subject to the result of a regular suit. The decisions on the point under the former Codes were numerous and they were not uniform. See the cases collected in Kallar Singh v. Toril Kahlon (1). See also Rahim Bux v. Abdul Kader (2).

In the case of Jugal Kishore Marwari v. Ambica Devi (3), where a claim preferred under Or. XXI, r. 58 was dismissed for non-prosecution and the property was sold, Mookerjee and Beachcroft, JJ., held that the only remedy of the claimant after his claim was dismissed under Or. XXI, r. 63 though for default was by a suit. The learned Judges observed "No doubt in relation to the question of limitation applicable to a suit of the description mentioned in r. 63, it has been held that Art. 11 of the second schedule of the Limitation Act does not apply if the application has been refused without an investigation on the merits, Kallar Singh v. Toril Kahlon (1). Upon this point, however, there is a divergence of judicial opinion and there is weighty authority in support of the view that where an application has been dismissed, with or without investigation, a regular suit, if instituted, must be commenced within one year from the date of such order. Gooroo Das v. Sona Monee (4), Sreemunto Hazrah v. Tajooddin (5), Tripura S onduree v. Ijjatounnissa (6) and Sadat Ali v. Ramdhone (7). But it is not necessary for our present purpose to express any opinion upon this question. It is sufficient to hold that, on the face of r. 63 the order of refusal is plainly final till a regular suit has been instituted and successfully prosecuted.

In the case of Nagendra Lal Choudhuri v. Fani Bhusan Das (8), where the claim was rejected for default, the learned Judges referring to the change in the wording of Or. XXI, r. 63 as compared with that of sec. 283 of the Code of 1882, and the corresponding change in Art. 11 of the present Limitation Act, observed that the decisions under Art. 11 of the Limitation Act of 1877 are no longer of authority. They held that all that is now necessary is that a claim should be preferred under r. 58 and that there should be an order either allowing or rejecting it. The party against whom the order is made may then bring a suit in the language of r. 63 "to establish the right which he claims to the property in dispute," or in the language of Art. 11 of Sch. II of the Limitation Act, 1908, to "establish the right which he claims to the property comprised in the order," and the suit must be brought within the year allowed by the Art. 11 irrespective of whether any investigation took place or not.

It is clear therefore that an order dismissing a claim for default is an order within the meaning of Or. XXI, r. 63 and subject to the result of a regular suit, is conclusive.

In the case of Phul Kumari v. Ghanashyam Misra (9), where a claim having been rejected, a suit was brought for declaration of the Plaintiff's right to the property and for an injunction restraining the Defendant from executing his decree against the property claimed, it was held by the Judicial Committee reversing the decision of the Courts below that the suit was one under sec. 283, C. P. C., for which the proper Court-fee was that prescribed by sub-sec. (1) of Art. 17, Sch. II of the Court Fees Act; namely, Rs. 10 for a "suit to alter or set aside a summary decision or order of a Civil Court not established by Letters Patent." It does not appear that there was a dismissal for default in that case; but as pointed out in the case of Nagendra Lal Choudhuri v. Fani Bhusan Das (8), under the present Code any order rejecting a claim whether upon investigation or for default would come under the purview of Or. XXI, r. 63. And if that is so, the observations of the Judicial Committee referred to above would apply to either case.

There is no definition of "summary decision or order" in the Court-fees Act; but in the case of Daya Chand Nemchand v. Hem Chand Dhuran Chand (10), Sir M. R. Westropp, C. J., in delivering the opinion of the majority of the Full Bench said "In the absence of any definition in the Court-Fees Act of the term "summary decision or order," we should rather be disposed to regard it as a decision or order not made in a regular suit or appeal." And further on he observed "Without positively binding ourselves to the proposition that every decision or order not made in a regular suit or appeal is a summary decision or order, we are clearly of opinion that decisions as to the removal or retention of attachments pronounced under sec. 246 of Act VIII of 1859 are summary decisions or orders."

No doubt the facts of that case are different from those of the present, as there was a decision in the claim case. We have referred to that case only for the meaning of the words "summary decisions or orders." If, as pointed out in that case, the words "summary decision or order" mean a decision or order not made in a regular suit or appeal, then the present case would fall within the words "summary order" made by the Court.

It is unnecessary, however, to rely upon the observations in that case. Having regard to the decision of the Judicial Committee in Phul Kumari v. Ghanashyam (9), as to the article of the Court-fees Act applicable to suits under sec. 283 of the Civil Procedure Code, and to the decision in Nagendra Lal v. Fani Bhusan (8), that the provisions of Or. XXI, r. 63 are applicable to all orders passed upon claims preferred under r. 58, whether upon investigation or for default, we think that the case falls under Art. 17, Sch. II of the Court-fees Act and that the proper Court-fee payable is Rs. 10.

We ought to point out, however, that the plaint in the present case is open to the same observations which were made by the Judicial Committee in the case of Phul Kumari v. Ghanashyam (9). But for the reasons given by their Lordships in that case, we think the suit may be treated as substantially one under Or. XXI, r. 63, and therefore falls under Art. 17, Sch. II of the Court-fees Act.

LORD BUCKMASTER. BHAIIDAS SHIVDAS,
LORD ATKINSON. Plaintiff, Appellant,
LORD CARMON. v.
SIR JOHN EDGE. BAI GULAB and anr.,
1921, Defendants,
25, October. Respondents.

Hindu Law—Will—Construction—“Malik,” if a term of art and imports full ownership—Trust, if valid, when subject-matter uncertain.

A Hindu testator gave the whole of his immoveable estate to his wife as “malik” and directed that she should leave the property to his two daughters in such manner as she might like:

Held—That the word “malik” taken in conjunction with the context indicated a clear intention to pass an absolute estate, and that even assuming it were intended to create a trust, the subject-matter of such trust was too uncertain.

The word “malik” is not a term of art, it does not necessarily define the quality of estate taken but the ownership of whatever that estate may be, but in the context of the present Will, it imported that the estate was absolute.

If words are used in a Hindu's Will conferring absolute ownership upon the wife, the wife enjoys the rights of ownership without their being conferred by express and additional terms, unless the circumstances or the context were sufficient to show that such absolute ownership was not intended.

MUSSAMMAT SURAJMANI v. RABI NATH OJHA (1) referred to.

Appeal from a decree of the High Court, dated the 23rd March 1917, affirming a decree of Macleod, J., dated the 8th September 1916.

This appeal originally came before the Board in February 1921 when a preliminary objection was taken by the Appellant that the procedure in the lower Court was erroneous. That objection was upheld by their Lordships [vide Bhaidas Shivdas v. Bai Gulab (3)] and the question in issue now came before the Board for determination on the merits.

The case raised a question as to the construction of a Hindu Will. The Will in the case is sufficiently set out in their Lordships' judgment. At the time of his death the testator had a wife Laxmibai and two daughters Jamnabai and Diwali. Laxmibai took out probate of the testator's Will and was in exclusive possession of the property until her death in 1911. Diwali having died in 1906, Jamnabai was in possession, from 1911 until her death in 1914 after which her daughters Bai Gulab and Ratanbai came into possession. Ratanbai died in 1915 leaving Mohanji Jutha her only heir. Bhaidas Shivdas the widower and heir of Diwali thereupon brought his suit claiming a half share in the testator's estate.

Messrs. DeGruyther, K. C. and Parikh for the Appellant.—The law of intestacy in Gujrat is set out in Mayne's Hindu Law, paras. 614 and 615. Had the testator died intestate Laxmibai would only have taken a widow's estate. Daughters if surviving her would have taken absolute estate. The question is whether there is a gift over to the daughters or a power to the widow to appoint among the daughters. The correct translation of the Gujrati is doubtful.

[LORD BUCKMASTER.—If the Courts below have propounded the right question to themselves and have then considered the actual Gujrati words the Board would be unwilling to interfere.]

The testator's real intention was to keep out his brothers—a power of appointment is possible in a Hindu Will.

The fact that sec. 79 of the Indian Succession Act was excluded from the Hindu Wills Act does not preclude equity and good conscience from construing a Hindu Will according to the provisions of that section. The translation was not questioned in the first Court and could not be questioned later.

Sir G. R. Lowndes, K. C. and Mr. Raikes for the Respondents.—Meaning of "malik" was settled in Musammal Surajmani v. Rabi Nath Ojha (1). The intention to give a full heritable estate is clear. All Gujrati speaking judges consider an absolute estate was granted. If you accept the Appellant's contention, Laxmibai, if she were to adopt, would be unable to give anything to the adopted child. The Court of Appeal may check the translation. Mutu Ramanadan Chettiar v. Vava Leevai Marakayar (4).

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by

LORD BUCKMASTER.—This is an appeal against a decree, dated the 23rd March 1917, of the High Court of Judicature at Bombay (Appellate Civil Jurisdiction), affirming a decree, dated the 8th September 1916, of the High Court in its Ordinary Original Civil Jurisdiction.

The question raised for determination arises on the construction of the Will, dated the 6th August 1894, of one Nathoo Moolji who died on the 8th December 1894.

The Appellant is the husband of one of the two daughters of the testator, who pre-deceased her mother, the testator's widow. The Respondents claim under the other daughter who survived her mother.

At the date of the Will there were living the testator's widow, his two daughters, and the widow of a pre-deceased son. The two daughters were named Jannabai and Diwali. Diwali died on the 13th May 1906; and the testator's widow on the 15th August 1911.

In these circumstances the Appellant claims as the husband of Diwali that according to the true construction of the Will the two daughters took a vested interest in the testator's residuary estate, which was not divested by reason of the death of one of the daughters before the death of the widow. The history of the suit has been fully dealt with by their Lordships when this appeal was formerly before them, and need not be repeated.

The Will was made in the Gujrati

language, and in the translation is divided into clauses. By cl. 2 the testator appoints his wife as his sole executrix. In the next clause, after stating that as he has no son he appoints his wife to be his heir; and the clause continues in these words :—

“ And I constitute her the owner. And as to whatever property there may remain after her death my wife shall leave the said property to my two daughters in such manner as she may like (either) by making a ‘ Will ’ or by making (some) other instrument. Of my two daughters one named Bai Jannabai was married to Shah Haridas Hemchand, but as he subsequently died she has now become a widow. To her and to (my) other daughter Bai Diwali who has been married to Shah Bhaidas Shivdas (i.e.) to both of them my wife shall give (my) property in such manner as (she) may like.”

By later clauses of the Will the testator referred to powers that he desired his wife to enjoy; for example, by cl. 6 he expressly states that he gives his wife authority to do what she thinks right with the profits and the ready moneys of a shop where he carried on business, and further to continue in partnership with the partners if she so desired. By cl. 18 he provides that after there have been defrayed out of the rents of certain specified immoveable property, the expenses in connection with a religious object, for which he had made provision, the wife should apply the surplus for her maintenance and use and for the maintenance and use of her daughters if they were living with her, and if the surplus were insufficient she should deal with the moveable and immoveable properties in such manner as she thought fit. By cl. 20, again, he gave express power to his wife to mortgage, lease, sell and use the properties. Finally by cl. 23 he provided that after the death of his wife his daughters should be named executrices, and he gave them authority to deal with or manage the whole of his property and effects. There is no dispute that the word that was used in cl. 3 as the original word of gift was the word “ malik ” which could be appropriately used to constitute the wife absolute owner. It is not that the word is a “ term of art,” it does not necessarily define the quality of the estate taken but the ownership of whatever that estate may be; and in the context of the present Will their Lordships think the estate was absolute. At the time when the Will was executed it may well have been that whoever drew the Will was aware that at that time words of absolute gift in favour of a Hindoo widow might not be supposed capable of conferring upon her a power of alienation, for in the case of Mussammatt Surajmani v. Rabi Nath Ojha (1) which ultimately came before this Board, we find that the High Court had ruled :—

“ that under the Hindu law, as interpreted up to the present in the case of immoveable property given or devised by a husband to his wife, the wife has no power to alienate, unless the power of alienation is conferred upon her in express terms.”

The decision in Mussammatt Surajmani v. Rabi Nath Ojha (1) showed that that provision was no longer sound and that if words were used conferring absolute ownership upon the wife, the wife enjoyed the rights of ownership without their being conferred by express and additional terms, unless the circumstances or the context were sufficient to show that such absolute ownership was not intended. If cl. 3 stood by itself it would, their Lordships think, be difficult to dispute that whatever the testator desired with regard to the disposition of his property after the death of his wife he had not expressed his wishes in such a manner that they bound the property. The words under which the Appellant claims are words which only attach to whatever property there may remain after the death of the wife. Without for the moment considering whether the desire expressed by the testator is expressed in a form that makes her disposition of it mandatory or no, it is sufficient to say that if that clause stood alone the principle stated in the case of Horwood v. West (2), would be applicable to this Will as it would to a Will in England. The Vice-Chancellor says at p. 389 :—

“It is essential to the execution of a trust that the subject should be certain; and if this testator intended that his wife should, at her pleasure, during her life, dispose of the property which he left to her, and that his recommendation should extend only to what, if anything happened to remain of his property at her death undisposed of by her, then there is no trust to be administered by this Court.”

But the Appellant points out with considerable force that cl. 3 does not stand by itself; but that the clauses referred to, and most notably cls. 18 and 23, are in their terms inconsistent with the view that the provisions of cl. 3 constituted the wife the absolute owner. Their Lordships are very far from saying that there is not force in this argument; but so far as cl. 18 is concerned it should be remembered that even there there is a provision that the surplus, after the property has been used for maintenance in the manner suggested, is to remain with the wife for her maintenance and use, and power is given to her to deal with the immoveable or moveable property as she may think fit. Again, with regard to cl. 23, the appointment of the daughters as executrices of the property, if in fact there had been a gift to them after the widow's death, would be quite unnecessary. The only purpose for creating them executrices would on either hypothesis be to see that the religious purpose to which part of the property had been devoted and a certain beneficial trust given to the widow of the son should be carried out. If and so far as they were absolute owners it had little value.

Their Lordships therefore think that these subsequent clauses in the Will are not sufficient to displace the language of cl. 3, fortified by the powers given in cl. 20, and by that language there is no trust created in favour of the two daughters of the testator. In forming this conclusion their Lordships have not considered the serious difficulty that is placed in the way of the Appellant by the judgments of the Court from which this appeal has proceeded. In the Court of Appeal one at least of the judges was thoroughly acquainted with the language in which this Will is drawn, and he took the view that the actual words used in cl. 3 suggesting how the property should be left after the death of the testator's widow were in themselves inadequate to do anything more than to express a wish and did not create an obligation. Their Lordships have not dealt with that part of the case, because in their opinion the matter is better decided upon the principle to which reference has already been made, viz. : even assuming it was intended to create a trust and the words were sufficient for that purpose the subject-matter on which the trust is to operate is by the terms of this Will too uncertain to enable the Court to give it administration.

For these reasons their Lordships are of opinion that this appeal must fail and ought to be dismissed with costs; the costs incurred in the Court below from the 13th March 1917, and of the appeal on the preliminary point that was argued before this hearing on the merits was reached, which were reserved, in their Lordships' opinion, should be costs in the appeal; and they will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly.

[APPEAL FROM BENGAL.]

LORD BUCKMASTER.

LORD DONEDIN.

LORD SHAW.

SIR JOHN EDGE.

MR. AMEER ALI.

Heard, 14 and

15, February

Judgment, 19, April.

RAJA PEARY

MOHAN MUKERJI,

Appellant,

v.

MONOHAR

MUKERJI and ors.,

Respondents.

Shebait, purchasing debutter property at Court sale in the benami of his son for adequate price, if can keep his purchase—Fiduciary relationship, purchase by person standing in, valid if full disclosure made to cestui que trust—Secret purchase in another's name invalid.

The grounds for removing a shebait from his office may not be identical with those upon which a trustee would be removed in England. The close intermingling of duties and personal interest which together make up the office of shebait may well prevent the closeness of the analogy, but as part of the office, it is indisputable that there are duties which must be performed, that the estate does need to be safeguarded and kept in proper custody, and if it be found that a man in the exercise of his duties has put himself in a position in which the Court thinks that the obligation of his office can no longer be faithfully discharged, that is sufficient ground for his removal.

A trustee who is not a trustee for sale may acquire from beneficiaries who are sui juris an estate in which they are interested, but he can only do this if he has made the fullest disclosure to them of all the relevant and material facts within his knowledge affecting or that might affect the value and condition of the estate, and the parties are at arm's length, the cestui qui trust knowing that he is dealing with the trustee. Otherwise the purchase is bad and it is bad because any person who occupies a fiduciary relationship may be able by virtue of his position to acquire information with regard to the trust estate which he is not permitted to use for his own benefit.

This rule is of general application to dealings by persons with an estate in regard to which they stand in a fiduciary relationship and therefore governs purchases of debutter estate by a shebait.

The rule laid down in LEWIS v. HILLMAN (2) that even if an attorney or agent can show that he is entitled to purchase, yet, if instead of openly purchasing, he purchases in the name of a trustee or agent without disclosing the fact, no such purchase can stand, applied to the purchase in this case by a shebait at a Court sale in the benami of his son, and it was declared invalid in spite of the fact that the price fetched was abundant.

These were consolidated appeals from a judgment, dated the 24th July 1919, of the High Court at Fort William in Bengal, reversing a judgment, dated the 23rd December 1915, of the second Court of the Subordinate Judge of Hooghly.

The facts of the case sufficiently appear from the judgment.

Sir John Simon, K. C. (with Messrs. L. DeGruyther, K. C. and J. M. Parikh) for the Appellant.—It has been questioned whether the purchase was not benami for the Raja, and was or was not the Raja in the position of a trustee at that time. This action was brought to remove the Raja from Shebaitship and to get a receiver appointed. The Subordinate Judge's finding is right and the High Court is wrong.

[LORD BUCKMASTER.—The question is whether when he was trustee he had not access to information about the property, which was not known to the public.]

My point is that the sale is not a sale by the Raja as trustee. There is no doubt that it is the Raja's own private money that was used to purchase it.

There is a consensus of opinion that the price he had paid was an exorbitant one. He was fighting to save this property while the sale has been confirmed.

The High Court struck out the sale on the fact that I was a trustee. My view is that the sale is not ipso facto void, but could be set aside if the Court could discover something wrong—or if there was a real duty on the trustee which was in itself a bar Thomson v. Bastwood (3), (Lord Cairn's judgment), Lord Macnaghten refers to this in Dougan v. Macpherson (4).

[LORD BUCKMASTER.—The law in India seems to be different. In the case of a mortgage sale it interposes a special protection as against the mortgagee.]

Civil Procedure Code, Sec. 1, Or. XXI. rr. 72 and 64 ff.

[LORD SHAW.—R. 73 is added after r. 72 to make the matter doubly sure; to keep away any one who has an interest in keeping the price down. "Any one connected with the Court proceedings."]

[LORD BUCKMASTER.—Is it not the duty of the trustee to give all information?]

Would it not do if I make good my main contention that the property has been out of my hands? (R. 66, Or. XXII).

It is not that there is no sale, but that the sale could be set aside. The circumstances are similar to those in Bengal Tenancy Act, sec. 173, sub-sec. (2) about judgment-debtors referred to by the Subordinate Judge. Ploverright v. Lambert (5) and Nugent v. Nugent (1).

[Mr. Dunne referred to Nugent v. Nugent (1) on appeal.]
Strafford v. Turynen (6).

The scheme in India seems to be that the particular connection of the Shebaitship is broken when the property is sold by Court, Allen v. Gillette (7), cited in the High Court's judgment is exactly similar to this case.

Refers to findings by the Court that the Raja has paid far more than its real value.

[LORD SHAW.—Is there any way under the Code by which he could have applied for and got permission to bid?]

No.

If the transaction is not void from the beginning, then no sufficient ground has been shown to avoid the sale.

The proper order to be made brings in a complication. The order is that an account is to be taken, and the Raja's personal liability is to be computed later:

First: We resisted Bijoy 31 years ago. We have exercised the Shebaitship for the last 28 years;

Second: We have resisted Bijoy's sons' claims;

Third: We denied the trust character of some promissory notes. Since 1898 we ourselves took steps to have the notes declared trust property.

The above points must now be specially noticed.

Fourth: It was alleged there were funds to pay the execution creditor. 'This is not true and has not been proved.

Fifth: The accounts were produced.

These are the alleged grounds of misconduct. Mayne's Hindu Law, sec. 519. I have a complete answer to these allegations in the plaint. Pearý Mohun v. Norendra Nath (8), per Lord Macnaghten.

Mr. A. M. Dunne, K. C. (with Mr. Kenworthy Brown) for the Respondent.—This is merely a question of fact. It is the duty of the trustee to protect the cestui que trust. Both the Courts in India have found that the Raja had hidden the fact that he was the purchaser. In the case of Macpherson v. Watt (9), this fact was held sufficient to upset the sale.

Mr. DeGruyther, K. C.—Your Lordships would hear me only on the form of the order.

[LORD BUCKMASTER.—Yes, else we would not have called on Mr. Dunne at all.]

The question of taking a general account does not arise, as there is no prayer for it. Again the Courts have found that the Raja had carried out his trust properly. The suit was instituted in 1913. Is the Raja when he purchases in the name of a son who is a member of the Raja's undivided family concealing that he has some interest in the property? The moment the purchase-money was paid into Court, the estate began having the benefit of the money and so no order for mesne profits should be made. There is also no account for any money due from the Appellant. The order to take an account would be a very roving one.

THEIR LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by LORD BUCKMASTER.—Many questions were originally involved in the dispute which has given rise to this appeal, but of these two only remain. The first relates to the continuance of the Appellant Raja Peary Mohan Mukerji in the office of Shebait to the debottar estate of Sri Sri Iswar Gopaleswar Shiva Thakur and Sri Sri Iswar Shridhar Thakur, and the second to the purchase in January 1913, of a certain Lot known as Lot Bahirgora, which was sold in execution under circumstances to which their Lordships will briefly refer.

By his Will, dated the 11th September

(9) 3 App. Cas. 254 (1877).

1840, Jaga Mohan Mukerji dedicated certain properties to the worship of the two Thakurs established by him, for the annual celebration of the Durga Puja, the Sradh of ancestors, and other pious usages, the Will providing for the order of succession to the office of the Shebait among the testator's own descendants. The testator died shortly after the execution of his Will, and in September of 1890 the succession to the Shebaitship opened, owing to the death of the then Shebait. Disputes arose as to who was the true successor, which resulted in a decree of the 29th January 1894 that one Bijoy Krishna was the rightful Shebait, but on the day of the decree he died. Further litigation then ensued between the sons of Bijoy Krishna and the Raja who is the Appellant in the first of these appeals, which ultimately resulted in a decree of the 30th June 1903, made by the Subordinate Judge in favour of the sons of Bijoy Krishna for Rs. 45,960, which sum it was ordered should be recovered by the Plaintiffs out of the debottar estate in the hands of the Raja as its Shebait. Appeals were taken from this judgment to the High Court, and again from the High Court to His Majesty in Council, but these appeals failed. Execution proceedings were then instituted in order to secure a sale out of the debottar estate of the Lot that is now in dispute, and on the 14th January 1913, the said Lot was sold at a public Court-sale for Rs. 1,56,600 to the Appellant in the second appeal, who is the son of the Raja.

On the 17th February 1913, proceedings were taken by Monohar Mukerji, who is the first Respondent to these appeals, asking among other things for the removal of the Raja from the office of Shebait and for an order to set aside the purchase of the estate. The Subordinate Judge dismissed the suit, but he held, contrary to the contention of the Raja's son, that the purchase was benami and made with the Raja's money for his benefit. An appeal was taken from the decree following this judgment to the High Court of Calcutta and was allowed. The High Court supported the view that the sale was in fact benami for the Raja who held a fiduciary position in relation to the estate, and they held that in these circumstances the purchase could not be supported. They also decided that the Raja should cease to be Shebait and that the management of the estate should be vested in a Receiver to be appointed by the Court. A decree was accordingly drawn up carrying out these views, and from this decree both the Raja and his son have brought the present appeals, which have been consolidated by an Order in Council.

Upon the question of the removal of the Raja, the learned Subordinate Judge thought that there was no sufficient charge of misconduct to justify his removal; but the High Court took a different view, and thought that the protracted litigations by which the estate had become heavily burdened with debts, and the circumstances associated with the claims which he was seeking to establish against the estate for litigation expenses, were such as to render it undesirable that he should continue in the office. They also found that the purchase could not be sustained. Their Lordships are not prepared to interfere with these conclusions. The grounds for removing a Shebait from his office may not be identical with those upon which a trustee would be removed in this country. The close intermingling of duties and personal interest which together make up the office of Shebait may well prevent the closeness of the analogy, but as part of the office it is indisputable that there are duties which must be performed, that the estate does need to be safeguarded and kept in proper custody, and if it be found that a man in the exercise of his duties has put himself in a position in which the Court thinks that the obligations of his office can no longer be faithfully discharged, that is sufficient ground for his removal. It is this that forms the foundation of the judgment of the High Court, and the Appellant has not satisfied their Lordships that the facts were misinterpreted or the reasoning unsound.

Upon the remaining question also their Lordships think that the High Court was right. The argument in favour of the Appellant here also turns upon the dissimilarity between the office of Shebait and the ordinary office of a trustee. A trustee for sale cannot purchase; he cannot purchase because the same person cannot be both vendor and purchaser, and he who acts for another cannot also act for himself. But even if he be not a trustee for sale, if in any capacity he is trustee of the estate, although his incapacity to buy is not absolute and is subject to different limitations it is equally well established. A trustee may indeed acquire from beneficiaries who are sui juris an estate in which they are interested, but he can only do this if he has made the fullest disclosure to them of all the relevant and material facts within his knowledge affecting or that might affect the value and condition of the estate and the parties are at arm's length, the cestui que trust knowing that he is dealing with the trustee. Otherwise the purchase is bad, and it is bad because any person who occupies a fiduciary relationship may be able by virtue of his position to acquire information with regard to the trust estate which he is not permitted to use for his own benefit. Their Lordships recognize the force of the argument that points out the dissimilarity between a Shebait and trustees to whom this rule applies. There is no doubt that the word "trustee" covers a very large number of relationships, involving different obligations; the word "trust," therefore, may be so used that it is intended to apply only to one class of such duties; and it follows that rules and decisions which depend upon the special conditions attached to the particular class would not of necessity apply to another where these conditions did not exist. The rule forbidding the purchase of an estate by a person who stands in regard to his dealings with it in a fiduciary relationship is, however, general in its application. In the case of Nugent v. Nugent (1), it was held that a Receiver appointed by the Court cannot purchase the property of which he is Receiver without the leave of the Court, even where the sale is not made in the action in which he was appointed, but by a mortgagee selling with leave outside the suit. Their Lordships think that this was a correct decision and shows the wide area of dispute which is covered by the rule.

Further, in the present case it is now established by two concurrent findings of fact that the Raja purchased the property benami in the name of his son, and by this means concealed the fact that he was the real purchaser; their Lordships bear in mind that such classes of purchase are very common in India and are due to many considerations which may not find their counterpart here, yet none the less they can easily be made a cloak and cover for improper and even dishonest transactions, and they think the rule laid down by Lord St. Leonards in Lewis v. Hillman (2) that even if an attorney or agent can show that he is entitled to purchase, yet if instead of openly purchasing, he purchases in the name of a trustee or agent without disclosing the fact, no such purchase as that can stand for a single moment, should apply to this case.

Their Lordships have not overlooked the fact that in the present instance the purchase was for an abundant price, one that is said to be largely above its market value, but such considerations cannot have weight where the purchase is challenged upon the grounds in the present suit.

It is unnecessary to examine further in detail the law upon this matter, for it is fully, and in their Lordships' opinion accurately, analysed in the judgment of the High Court, where the relevant authorities are quoted and properly applied. They think, therefore, that this appeal must fail and that an order must be made declaring that the purchase by the second Appellant was invalid and that proper and necessary steps should be taken to secure the property; and that the first Appellant is entitled, subject as herein mentioned, to repayment of the purchase money. An account should be directed showing what, if anything, is due from the first Appellant to the estate, and such money should be deducted from the purchase moneys, the balance, if any, of the moneys in Court to be paid out and the first Appellant to have a charge on the estate for such sum. The Appellants will pay the costs of the appeals.

They will humbly advise His Majesty to this effect.

Solicitor: Mr. Edward Dalgado for the Appellants.

APPEALS FROM APPELLATE DECISIONS

Nos. 801 AND 802 OF 1919.

MOOKERJEE, C. J. FLETCHER, J. 1920, 27, July.	}	SARWATI FAIJUNNESSA, Plaintiff, Appellant, v. RAMTARAN CHOWDHURY and ors., Defendants, Respondents.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), sec. 15, omission by heirs of a tenure-holder to give the prescribed notice to the landlord, if entitles the landlord to recognize one of the heirs as the representative of the tenancy—Sale of entire tenure in execution of a rent decree obtained against the said representative, if affects the rights of the other heirs

On the death of a permanent tenure-holder his heirs did not give the notice under sec. 15, Bengal Tenancy Act, to the landlord. The landlord, however, chose to recognize one of the heirs as the representative of the tenancy and obtained a rent decree against him alone. In execution of that decree the tenure was sold, and the other heirs brought a suit for recovery of their shares saying that their interest in the tenure was unaffected by the sale :

Held—That the shares of the heirs who were not parties to the rent decree did not pass under the sale, and only the right, title and interest of the tenant who was the sole Defendant in the rent suit passed. It is not sufficient to show that the landlord has chosen to obtain a decree for rent against one out of several heirs. It has to be established that all the tenants have held out one of them as their representative in their transactions with the landlord.

with the requirements of sec. 15, Bengal Tenancy Act, does not necessarily entitle the landlord to treat one of the several heirs of the original tenure-holder as representative of the tenancy.

KHETTER MOHAN v. PRAN KRISTO (12) distinguished.

This was an appeal from a decision of C. Sells, Esq., District Judge, Chittagong, dated 28th November 1918, affirming that of Babu Aswini Kumar Das, Munsif, Satkania, dated 24th May 1917.

A permanent tenure belonged to one Abdul Rashid. After his death no notice under sec. 15 of the Bengal Tenancy Act was given to the landlord by his successors. The landlord chose to treat Abdul Rashid's son Wahed as the representative of the tenancy and his name was entered in the record-of-rights as the sole possessor in respect of these lands. In a suit for rent against Wahed alone, a decree was passed and the tenure was sold in execution. Thereupon Abdul Rashid's daughter and daughter-in-law sued for recovery of their shares of the lands. The Court of first instance held that as the Plaintiffs had allowed Wahed to represent the ownership of the tenure in their transactions with the landlord they had no right to complain if any untoward consequences followed. On appeal the District Judge confirmed that decision of dismissal. Hence the present appeal to the High Court.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

MOOKERJEE, C. J.—These are appeals by the Plaintiffs in two suits for recovery of joint possession of land.

(12) 3 C. W. N. 371 (1899).

SRIMATI FAIJUNNESSA v. RAMTARAN CHOWDHURY.

The land admittedly belonged at one time to Abdul Rashid. The Plaintiff in one of these suits is one of his daughters, the Plaintiff in the other suit is one of his daughters-in-law. Their contention is that their interest in the tenure has not been affected by a sale held on the 7th August 1906 in execution of a decree for rent obtained against Abdul Wahed, one of the sons of the original tenure-holder Abdul Rashid.

The Courts below have dismissed the suits. The Court of first instance found that the claim was not barred by limitation, but that the circumstances indicated that the Plaintiffs had allowed Abdul Wahed to represent the ownership of the tenure in their transactions with the landlord, and that consequently they had no right to complain if any untoward consequences followed. Upon appeal, the District Judge has confirmed the decrees of dismissal, although he has not accepted all the findings of the Court of first instance. He has held that Abdul Wahed was not the recorded tenant, but has added that even though he was not the recorded tenant, the very fact that rent decrees were obtained against him shows that he was recognized by the landlord as the tenant, and that consequently the non-registration of his name was without significance. The District Judge has further laid stress on the circumstance that the name of Abdul Wahed was entered in the record-of-rights as the sole possessor in respect of these lands.

On the present appeal, it has been contended that the facts found by the District Judge make it impossible for the Defendants, the execution-purchasers, to contend successfully that they have acquired a right to the shares claimed by the Plaintiffs. The argument in substance is that the principle of representation has no application to this case, and that as Abdul Wahed alone was a party to the rent suit, only his right, title and interest have passed under the sale, leaving unaffected the interest of the Plaintiffs. We are of opinion that this contention is well-founded and must prevail.

In order to entitle the execution-purchaser to invoke the aid of the principle of representation enunciated in the case of Netai Bihary Shaha Pramanick v. Hari Gobinda Saha (1) which followed the rule recognised in Jeo Lal v. Gunga Pershad (2), it is not sufficient to show that the landlord has chosen to obtain a decree for rent against one out of several heirs. It has to be established that all the tenants have held out one of them as their representative in their transactions with the landlord. If they have so held out one of them to represent them in the matter of the tenancy, they cannot complain if a decree for rent is obtained by the landlord against that representative, and the entire tenancy brought to sale in execution thereof; such co-owners would be affected by the sale even though they were not parties to the decree Rupnarain v. Juggo (3), Ananda v. Haridas (4), Asok v. Karim (5), Chamatkari v. Triguna (6), Budayar Rahaman v. Karam Ali (7), Doorgadhur v. Huromohinee (8), Bejoy v. Rajendra (9), *Afraz Mollah v. brought the suit for rent against one out of several representatives of the original tenant. On the other hand, the facts found in the judgment of the Court of first instance make it abundantly clear that if the slightest enquiry had been made, the landlord would have discovered that there were other heirs than the person whom he intended to sue. Reference has finally been made to the provisions of sec. 15 of the Bengal Tenancy Act which prescribes the procedure to be followed by persons who have succeeded to a permanent tenure. It has been suggested that as the Plaintiffs did not appear to have given the requisite notice under that section, they are debarred from relief in the present suits. We are of opinion that there is no foundation for this contention. Failure on the part of heirs to comply with the requirements of sec. 15, does not necessarily entitle the landlord to treat one of the several heirs of the original tenure-holders as representative of the tenancy. The case of Khetter v. Pran Kristo (12) is clearly distinguishable; the objection as to defect of parties was raised in the rent suit and no question arose as to the effect of the decree which might be made therein. In our opinion, upon the facts found by the District Judge, which we have summarised above, there is no answer to the claim of the Plaintiffs.

The result is that these appeals are allowed, the decrees of the District Judge set aside and the suits decreed with costs in all the Courts.

FLETCHER, J.—I agree.

J. N. R. Appeal decreed with costs.

APPEALS FROM ORIGINAL DECREES

No. 137 OF 1918

AND

No. 135 OF 1919.

GREAVES, J.

MANMOTH NATH
MULLICK, Defendant, Appellant,
v.
MAHAMED SOLEMAN,
Plaintiff, Respondent.

Act XI of 1859, secs. 2 and 3—Bengal Act (VII of 1868)—Tenures in Dihi Panchannogram—Board's Notification regarding time for sale, effect of—Sale for arrears of revenue when premature and ultra vires—Date of payment of revenue.

The effect of the Notification of the Board of Revenue, dated the 6th October 1871 is that no holding can be sold till after the 28th June next after the first day of the month following the month in which the revenue or rent should have been paid.

The date on which the revenue is payable depends primarily not on general or administrative considerations such as the course of business in the Collectorate or the mode in which the accounts are kept but on the contract between the parties.

Where a tenure was held under a kabuliya, dated the 10th November 1862, containing a stipulation to pay rent year by year in Dihi Panchannogram to which by virtue of Bengal Act VII of 1868, Act XI of 1859 was applicable, and the tenure was sold for arrears of revenue of 1914 and 1915 on the 17th May 1915, it was held that the sale was premature and ultra vires and conferred no title on the purchaser as the current demand for 1914-1915 was not payable till the 10th November 1914, so that the tenure could not be sold before the 28th June 1915.

MANMOTHO NATH MULLICK v. MAHAMED SOLEMAN.

This was an appeal against the decree of Babu Amulya Charan Ghose, second Subordinate Judge of Zillah 24-Per-gannahs, dated the 31st of January 1918.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

The Hon'ble the Advocate-General, Mr. T. C. P. Gibbons and Babus Joges Chandra Roy, Sarat Chandra Mukherjee, Lal Mohan Ghose and Narendra Nath Mukherjee for the Appellant.

Mr. B. Chakravarty and Babus Ram Chandra Majumdar and Bijon Kumar Mukherjee for the Respondent.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

RICHARDSON, J. —The Plaintiff in the two suits out of which these appeals arise purchased holding No. 20-A in Mehal Panchannogram in the 24-Pergannahs at a sale for arrears of revenue or rent held under Act VII of 1868, which incorporates the provisions of the Bengal Revenue Sales Act (XI of 1859). The holding is a tenure within Act VII of 1868 and the Defendant in each suit is an under-tenure-holder in occupation of lands comprised in the holding. Appeal No. 135 relates to Suit No. 20 of the Court below and Appeal No. 137 to Suit No. 19.

The holding was sold on the 17th May 1915, for an arrear of Rs. 6-10-5 and the price paid by the Plaintiff was Rs. 8,900.

The suits were brought to vacate the under-tenure of the Defendants under sec. 12 of the Act of 1868 as incumbrances imposed upon the tenure after its creation or after the time of settlement. The Defendants contend in the first place that the sale was invalid inasmuch as the Collector had no authority under the law to sell the tenure when he did, and in the second place that their under-tenures are within the first or the third exception to sec. 12 and therefore protected. Before us the plea that the sale was brought about by collusion between the purchaser and the defaulter, was in effect abandoned. The Plaintiff won in the Court below and the Defendants have appealed.

The point of the first defence is whether the sale was premature and it turns on the application of the Privy Council's decision in Haji Bukshi Elahi v. Durlav Chandra Kar (1) to the facts of the present case. Their Lordships dealt with the effect of the two Acts and of the Board's Notification of 6th October 1871, issued under sec. 3 of the Act of 1859, in relation to the time at which these holdings in Panchannogram become saleable for arrears. The result is that no holding can be sold till after the 28th June next after the first day of the month following the month in which the revenue or rent should have been paid.

The rents of the holdings are payable annually and the result is arrived at in this way. Determine the day on which the rent is annually payable. If not paid on or before that date the rent is in arrear on the first day of the following month (Act XI of 1859, sec. 2). Under the Board's Notification of 1871, the tenure-holder may save his tenure by paying the arrear on or before the 28th June next following. It is not till after that date has passed without the arrear being paid that the holding becomes saleable at public auction to the highest bidder.

In the case cited, the tenure-holder's engagement or kabuliyat required him to pay his rent "within the 28th day of June every year." It was held that the rent so payable in any year was not in arrear till July of that year and the holding could not be sold till after June 28th of the following year.

The first question to be determined, therefore, is on what day the rent in the present case was payable.

For the Plaintiff it is said that the rent was payable annually according to the Bengali year and reliance is placed on the evidence of the Collectorate Record-keeper called by the Defendants, who says that "the rent of this Panchannogram mahal is generally collected according to the Bengali year." In the jama wasil baki of the holding (Ex. A), the years are entered as 1911-12, 1912-13 and so on. The entries may refer either to the financial year ending on the 31st March, or to the Bengali year ending about the middle of April. It is immaterial which of these years is intended. The account shows that there was nothing due at the close of 1912-13 (or 1319 B. S.). The year 1913-14 or (1320 B. S.) opened with a "current demand" of Rs. 6-10-5 and no arrear demand. The "current demand" for that year was paid on 23rd March 1914. Accordingly 1914-15 (or 1321 B. S.) also opened with no entry in the arrear column and an entry of Rs. 6-10-5 in the column provided for the current demand. This demand was not paid on 28th June 1914, or later and the holding was sold in consequence in May 1915. If, as is argued for the Plaintiff, the amount became due and payable on the 1st April 1914, or the 1st Baisakh 1321, the rent was in arrear on 1st May 1914, and the Collector was at liberty to sell it after June 28th of the same year. If, on the other hand, the amount became due and payable in or after June 1914, the holding could not be sold till after 28th June 1915.

As the Privy Council point out, the date on which the amount was payable depends primarily, not on general or administrative considerations, such as the course of business in the Collectorate or the mode in which the accounts are kept, but on the contract between the parties. In the present case that contract is embodied in a kabuliyat, dated 10th November 1862, which is in the following terms:—

"This deed of kabuliyat is executed by Sayad Abdulali (a former tenure-holder) to the following effect:—'That I have got a permanent maurashi patta in respect of lands measuring 17 bighas 5 katas 4 chataks and 10 gandas acknowledging as yearly rent thereof Rs. 20-12 annas 4 pies. I shall pay the rent year by year. Accordingly on receiving a patta, I execute this kabuliyat.' Finis 10th November 1862."

The original holding appears to have been split up. Holding No. 20-A comprises about a third of the original area and is responsible for an aliquot share of the rent.

It will be observed that the kabuliyat bears an English date and that it does not expressly mention the date on which the rent is due to be paid each year. There seems no reason why it should refer to the Bengali year or the financial year or the English calendar year, rather than to the year beginning on the date it bears, the 10th November and ending on the 9th November of the following year, which may be called the year of the tenancy. The meaning of the words as they stand is presumably that the rent should be paid year by year on the 10th November of each year. If that be so, the account would show that the rent due on the 10th November 1913, was paid on the 23rd March 1914, and that the current demand for 1914-15 was not payable till the 10th November 1914. The rent, therefore, was not in arrear till the 1st December 1914, and the Collector was without authority to sell before the 28th June 1915. Accordingly, the sale held in May 1915, was invalid and ultra vires and conferred no right on the Plaintiff, as the purchaser at the sale, to vacate these under-tenures.

If that view be right, the Defendants succeed on their first contention and it becomes unnecessary for us to consider whether the Defendants' under-tenure is within any of the exceptions to sec. 12 of the Act of 1868, a question with which the Court below seems to have dealt somewhat cursorily.

It may be added that according to the sale notice issued on 14th April 1915, under sec. 7 of the Act of 1859 (Ex. 15), the sale was held "for the realization of the Government Revenue for the year 1320 B. S. which was payable on the 28th July (June 1914)." On a strict construction of these words, the result would be the same as that already arrived at. The revenue, if payable on the 28th July, was in arrear on the 1st August 1914 and the holding could not be sold till after 28th June 1915. But it is probable that the notice means that the 28th July or the 28th June, was the last day for the payment of revenue which was previously in arrear. That is to say it was assumed that the revenue was due for the Bengali year 1320 and that it was payable on the 1st Baisakh 1321, an assumption, which in the view I take is inconsistent with the kabuliyat.

The appeals should be allowed with costs in this Court and the Court below.

No. 1165 OF 1919.

CHATTERJEA, J.
SUMRAWARDY, J.

15, March.

BANKA BHARI GHOSH,
Defendant, Appellant,
v.

MADAN MOHAN ROY,
Plaintiff, Respondent.

Suit for rent—Onus for proportionate abatement of rent on the ground of eviction from a portion of the land by a person not having a title paramount—"Eviction by title paramount," meaning of—Physical dispossession, if necessary to amount to eviction—Suit by stranger against tenant, and attornment by latter to former in respect of a portion of the tenure under Court's decree—Onus to prove eviction by title paramount, if on landlord.

An execution purchaser of some decretal lands obtained delivery of khas possession of the lands through Court and let out a portion thereof to B. Subsequently the Government settled with a third party some lands including a portion of the lands let out by the said execution purchaser. The Government lessee on the strength of the settlement sued B alone for recovery of the said lands and got a decree which provided that being a bonâ fide tenant B should not be ejected but should pay rent to the Government lessee in respect of the lands of which he was in possession. Subsequently the aforesaid execution purchaser brought a suit for rent against B, who claimed proportionate abatement of rent in respect of the said portion:

Held—That in order to be entitled to proportionate abatement of rent, forcible expulsion is not necessary, nor is it necessary that the tenant should actually go out of possession, and if, upon a claim being made by a person with a title paramount, he consents by an attornment to such person to change the title under which he holds or enters into a new arrangement for holding under him, this will be equivalent to an eviction and a fresh taking. But an eviction, whether actual or constructive, must be by a party with a title paramount. The Government lessee had no doubt obtained a decree against B, but that was not sufficient to show that he had a title superior to that of the execution purchaser. Nor was the onus to prove that the Government lessee had no title shifted on the execution purchaser in consequence of such a decree.

"Eviction by title paramount" means eviction by a title superior to the titles both of lessor and lessee, against which neither is enabled to make a defence.

NEALE v. MACKENZIE (3), SYED MUKHTAR AHMAD v. RANI SUNDAR KOER (4) and RUNG LALL SINGH v. LALLA ROODUR PERSHAD (5) referred to.

This was an appeal against the decree of R. F. Jack, Esq., District Judge of Zillah Nadia, dated the 31st of May 1919, affirming the decree of Babu Ananda Kisore Dutta Roy, Subordinate Judge of that District, dated the 13th of December 1917.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

This appeal arises out of a suit for rent. The defence was that the Defendant had been ejected from a portion of the land by a title paramount and that he was, therefore, entitled to a proportionate abatement of rent.

It appears that the Administrator-General of Bengal representing the estate of Kumar Indra Chundra Singha Bahadur brought a suit for possession in respect of the land the rent of which is in dispute in the present suit, and certain other lands, against certain persons representing the estate of one Haripada Shaha and who may be referred to in this judgment as the "Shahas": He claimed the land as appertaining to his estate Sujapur. The Shahas claimed the land as appertaining to their village Juranpur. The suit, however, was decreed and Madan Mohan Roy (the Plaintiff in the present suit) purchased the decree and the decretal land from the decree-holder, and in execution of the decree obtained delivery of possession of the land through Court. While in lhas possession of the decretal land, he let out 279 bighas out of the same to the Defendant in 1908. Subsequently, however, the Government settled a portion of the lands of which the rent is claimed in this suit, together with certain other land as reformed land (bed of a river) with the Shahas on the 1st April 1908. On the strength of that settlement the Shahas brought a suit for recovery of possession of some lands including a portion of the land for which the rent is in dispute against the Defendant, Banka Behari Ghosh alone. Banka in that suit, among other defence set up the title of the present Plaintiff Madan Mohan Roy, and also pleaded that the latter should be made a party to the suit. This was disallowed. The Court however, held that the Defendant was a bond fide tenant and should not be ejected. The Shahas were accordingly, given a decree for possession by receipt of rent from the Defendant in respect of 131 bighas in May 1912. There was an appeal and a second appeal and ultimately the decree of the Court of first instance was upheld.

The present suit was instituted by Madan Mohan, the Plaintiff, for rent in respect of the 279 bighas of land which was let out by him to the Defendant Banka Behari, who pleaded that there should be an abatement of rent in respect of 131 bighas of land, with regard to which there was a decree obtained by the Shahas against him. to the conclusion that the Defendant was not entitled to claim abatement of rent, as the Defendant was not dispossessed, and the Plaintiff was not a party to the suit upon which the Defendant relies in claiming abatement of rent. The Defendant has appealed to this Court and two questions have been raised on his behalf. The first is that it is not necessary that the tenant should be physically dispossessed by a person having a title paramount, and secondly that it was not necessary that the Plaintiff should have been a party to the decree in the previous suit which resulted in eviction, in order to entitle the Defendant to claim abatement of rent.

So far as the first contention is concerned, it is true that a forcible expulsion is not necessary, nor is it necessary that the tenant should actually go out of possession, and that if, upon a claim being made by a person with title paramount, he consents by an attornment to such person to change the title under which he holds or enters into a new arrangement for holding under him, this will be equivalent to an eviction and a fresh taking. See Foa on Landlord and Tenant, 4th Edn. 169. But an eviction, whether actual or constructive, must be by a party having a good title. There is no doubt that the Shahas obtained a decree against the Defendant. But that is not sufficient to show that they had a title superior to that of the Plaintiff of the present suit. The learned Pleader for the Appellant relies upon the case of Rani Dassi v. Asutosh Roy Choudhury (1) and the case of Noorijan Sardar v. Bimola Sundari Gupta (2). In the first case no question of the lessor's title was in controversy. It was assumed for the purposes of the judgment that the lessor had no title. It was a suit by a lessee for abatement of rent against the lessor, and the only question which the Court had to consider was what was the quantity of land for which the tenant could claim abatement of rent. There was no suggestion in that case that the person who dispossessed the Plaintiff in that suit was not a person having a title paramount. In the second case cited above, the decision was that, where a tenant is induced to attorn to the superior landlord by an offer to accept a reduced rent the doctrine of quasi-eviction does not apply, and in the course of their judgment, the learned Judges referred to the general principle enunciated in Foa on Landlord and Tenant, 4th Edn. at p. 169. The question which we have to decide in the present case was not dealt with in either of the cases cited above.

In the case of Neale v. Mackenzie (3), Lord Denham, C. J., observed that eviction by title paramount means "eviction by a title superior to the titles both of lessor and lessee, against which neither is enabled to make a defence." Here although the Shahas have obtained a decree against the Defendant, it cannot be said that they have got a title superior to that of the present Plaintiff who was no party to that suit, and had no opportunity of showing that they had got a title to the land.

It is found in the present case that after the Plaintiff had obtained delivery of possession through Court, he was put into khas possession of the land in suit and he then let out 279 bighas to the Defendant. The Defendant obtained possession and was in possession, when the Shahas brought the suit against him alone and obtained a decree. We do not think, under the circumstances, that the Plaintiff was bound by any implied covenant, which the learned Pleader for the Appellant set up, to restore the Defendant to possession unless it is shown that the Shahas have a title superior to that of the Plaintiff. We have been referred to certain passage from Redman on Landlord and Tenant, 7th Edn. at page 263, where the learned author says "Any proceeding in a Court of Law interfering with the title and possession of the land amounts to a breach of a covenant for quiet enjoyment, e.g., an action of ejectment or for trespass." But the proposition is qualified by the words "by a person having a lawful title." See also Woodfall's Law of Landlord and Tenant, 19th Edn., p. 812, where it is stated "The express covenant for quiet enjoyment without any interruption or disturbance by the lessor, his heirs or assigns, even though followed by the words 'or by any other person or persons whomsoever' does not extend to the unlawful acts of third persons having no title. The law will never adjudge that the lessor covenants against the wrongful acts of strangers, except his covenant is express to that purpose; for the law itself does defend every man against wrong; and therefore, though one warrants land to another expressly (or covenants for quiet enjoyment generally) yet he does not defend against tortious entries."

The learned Pleader for the Appellant referred to a passage in Redman that the landlord is allowed to come in, in order to show that he has a good title, and to maintain the possession of the lessee. It is not stated, however, that the landlord is bound to come in a suit brought against the lessee by a person who has not a superior title. There is also no authority for the contention raised on behalf of the Appellant that where a third party has obtained a decree against the lessee the onus is shifted on the landlord to prove that such a third party has got no title.

Rani Sundar Koer (4), it was pointed out that sec. 108, cl. (c) of the Transfer of Property Act provided for an implied covenant to the lessee to hold a lease without interruption and that the clause was wide enough to include disturbance of possession by a person with a paramount title. It was also observed that even before the Transfer of Property Act, it was held that in the absence of an express agreement to the contrary, a landlord is under an implied obligation to indemnify the tenant against ouster or disturbance in his possession by his own acts or by the acts of those who claim under or have paramount right to him, but not against the wrongful acts of strangers. The same view has been taken of the section in Shepherd and Brown's notes to sub-sec. (c) of sec. 108 of the Transfer of Property Act, at page 404, 7th Edition. There it was pointed "The covenant in the unqualified form followed in the section covers the case of the superior landlord, or other person claiming by title paramount, exercising power of re-entry or otherwise dispossessing the lessee. But it does not include a case of disturbance by persons having no lawful title or right of entry." We do not think, therefore, that there was any covenant to protect the tenant from persons having no title superior to that of the Plaintiff, or that the decree obtained against the tenant shifted on the Plaintiff the burden of proving that the third party had no title. In the case of Rung Lall Singh v. Lalla Roodur Pershad (5) the learned Judges observed. "The Defendant accepted a lease from and was let in possession by the lessors. He has not shown in this suit that his lessors had no title and that the person who ousted him had a title, and he has relied for that purpose upon the result of certain suits one of which in no way affects this property at all and the other in no way affects the title of his lessors who were not parties to it. Therefore the defence which he attempts to raise surely fails." The observations apply to this case also. It is no doubt hard that the Defendant who has set up the title of the Plaintiff in the suit brought against him by the Shahas should have to pay rent to them as well as to the Plaintiff in respect of the 131 bighas.

It is not for us, however, to express any opinion as to what step should be taken by the Defendant for being relieved from such a position. Having regard to the fact that the Plaintiff was no party to that suit, we must hold that the decree of the lower Appellate Court is right.

The appeal is dismissed with half costs in this Court.

No. 2147 OF 1920.

CHATTERJEA, J. NEWBOULD, J. 1921, 22, February		SYAM CHAND BASAK, Plaintiff, Appellant, v. NAHENDRA NATH BASAK and anr., Defendants, Respondents.

Bengal Municipal Election Rules - R. 4, register of voters R. 7, application for removal of name of a voter from the register Rr. 6 and 10, application by the said voter for inclusion of his name in the register, if lies when his name was already in the register—R. 29, District Magistrate's powers.

A certain name was entered in the Register of voters prepared under r. 4 of the Bengal Municipal Election Rules. Several applications were made to the Chairman of the Municipality under r. 7 for removal of his name, and the said voter too made an application under r. 6 for inclusion of his name in the Register. All these applications were disposed of by the Chairman on the same date. He allowed the applications under r. 7, and directed the name of the said voter to be removed from the register. The said voter thereupon applied to the District Magistrate under r. 10, who restored his name in the register. On appeal it was contended that r. 10 was inapplicable because the name of the said voter was already on the register when he made the application under r. 6 for inclusion of his name therein:

Held—That the Chairman could not have dealt with the application of the voter in question before he had decided the applications under sec. 7, and he had not rejected the application of the said voter as premature. In these circumstances, the application might well be regarded as having been presented on the day and after the applications under sec. 7 were disposed of, although it was on the record from before. In that view the Magistrate had power under r. 10 to make an order for the insertion of the name in the register. Besides, r. 29, gives a general power to the Magistrate to decide all disputes arising under the Rules, so the Magistrate had power to decide the point under r. 29.

This was an appeal against the decree of C. Bartley, Esq., District Judge of Zillah Dacca, dated the 30th of July 1920, affirming the decree of Babu Ananga Mohan Lahiri, Munsif, 2nd Court at that place, dated the 7th of June 1920.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

Mr. Pugh and Babu Sasauthar Roy for the Appellant.

Babus Ram Chunder Majumdar and Upendra Lal Roy for the Respondents.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

This appeal arises out of a suit for a declaration that the election of the Defendant No. 1 as a Commissioner of the Dacca Municipality was void, and for cancelling the same. The election took place on the 31st July 1918. That election, however, was set aside by this Court on the ground of irregularities at the time of polling. A fresh election took place on the 8th December 1918 at which the Defendant was again elected.

It appears that a register of persons qualified to vote was prepared under r. 4 of the Municipal Election Rules. The Defendant's name was entered in that register as a voter. Several applications were, however, made to the Chairman under r. 7 for striking out the name of the Defendant from the Register of Voters. An application was also made by the Defendant under r. 6 for inclusion of his name in the Register. All these applications were disposed of by the Chairman of the Municipality on the 13th July 1918. He allowed the applications under r. 7, and further directed the name of the Defendant to be struck out from the Register. Thereupon the Defendant applied to the District Magistrate under r. 10, who on the 22nd July restored his name in the register. On the 15th July the list of voters omitting his name was published. But as we have said, on the 22nd July, his name was registered under the orders of the Magistrate and he was elected a Commissioner.

The main ground upon which the election has been attacked is that r. 10 under which the Magistrate directed the name of the Defendant to be inserted in the register was inapplicable because the name of the Defendant was already on the register when he made the application, and that an application under r. 6 is to be made by a person whose name does not appear in the register and who claims a right to vote. There is no doubt that the name of the Defendant was on the register on the date on which the application was made by him to the Chairman. The proper course; no doubt, would have been to make the application after disposal of the applications under r. 7. Evidently, however, it was intended that the application would be taken up only after the disposal of the applications under r. 7. The Chairman could not have dealt with the application of the Defendant before he had decided the applications under sec. 7 and he had not rejected the application of the Defendant as premature. In these circumstances the application might well be regarded as having been presented on the day and after the applications under sec. 7 were disposed of, although it was on the record from before. In that view, the Magistrate had power under r. 10 to make an order for the insertion of the name of the Defendant in the register. But assuming that the case did not come under r. 6 or r. 10, there was a dispute as to whether the name of the Defendant should or should not be on the register. The Chairman decided the question in a particular way. R. 29 gives a general power to the Magistrate to decide all disputes arising under the Rules and lays down that his decision shall be final. We think that the Magistrate had power to decide the point under r. 29.

So far as the qualification of the Defendant is concerned, it was admitted in the Court of first instance that he was a qualified voter, and the only ground upon which the election was attacked was that his name was not properly included in the register.

It is unnecessary to consider the other questions raised and discussed before us.

The appeal is accordingly, dismissed with costs.

Gupta), dated the 30th September 1920, which reversed the judgment of the Munsif of Chittagong (Babu Jnan Ch. Mukerjee), dated the 22nd March 1920.

The facts material to this report are as follows :—

The Petitioner obtained a money-decree against the Opposite Party No. 2. Rames Chandra Das and in execution of the aforesaid decree put the property of the said Opposite Party to sale, and purchased the same for Rs. 375 at the auction sale on the 10th February 1920. Two days after that, the judgment-debtor, i.e., the Opposite Party No. 2, sold the same property to the Opposite Party No. 1 Harendra Lal Das by a kabala. On the strength of the aforesaid sale-deed the Opposite Party No. 2 made an application for depositing the decretal amount under Or. XXI, r. 89 of the Civil Procedure Code.

The learned Munsif dismissed the application and passed the following order on the 22nd March 1920.

“ Heard Pleaders. The kabala by the judgment-debtor in favour of the applicant appears to have been executed on the 12th February last, two days after the sale. The private sale is therefore void as against the decree-holder auction-purchaser, vide sec. 64, C. P. C. The deposit is accordingly invalid and it cannot be accepted. Depositor may take refund of the money in deposit. Accountant to note. The sale is confirmed and execution case is dismissed on full satisfaction.”

On appeal by the Opposite party No. 1, the learned Subordinate Judge reversed the order of the Munsif and remanded the case for taking the deposit.

The following portion of the judgment of the learned Subordinate Judge will be found material to this report :—

“ The learned Munsif held that the private sale after the Court-sale is void under sec. 64, C. P. C. and so the deposit is invalid. This view of the law is clearly erroneous. Sec. 64, defines the effect of a purchase made in contravention of sub-r. (1) of r. 54. The effect of sec. 64 is not to invalidate all sales, but its effect is of a limited character—limited as against all claims enforceable under the attachment. Justice Sir Ashutosh Mookerjee in the ruling Gosto Behari v. Sankar Nath (6), has pointed out how in such a case, while the private purchaser comes to make a deposit of the decretal amount under Or. XXI, r. 39, the claim enforceable under the attachment being fully satisfied, the private alienation cannot be regarded as void.

The next point that has been argued at some length before me is whether the applicant can make an application for depositing the decretal amount under Or. XXI, r. 89.

I think, he can. Under the present rule, the application may be made by (1) any person owning the property or (2) any person holding an interest in such property by virtue of a title acquired before the sale. That is the interpretation given to the rule by Justice Mookerjee [vide Gosto Behari v. Sankar Nath (6)].

So it is not necessary that the Applicant should acquire the property, i.e., own the property before sale. That part of the rule refers to the holding of an interest in the property by virtue of a title acquired before the sale.

Now, it has been held that the words "owning the property" would mean "owning the property at the date of the application [vide Subbarayudu v. Lakshminarasama (7) and also Ishwar Das v. Asaf Ali (2)]. The application under Or. XXI, r. 89 was made on 3rd March 1920. On that date he was certainly the person owning the property for he purchased it from the judgment-debtor on 12th February 1920. So he is entitled to make the deposit.

The learned Pleader for the Opposite Party drew my attention to the ruling in Ishwar Das v. Asaf Ali Khan (2). There it was held that the judgment-debtor would, after the private sale, be incompetent to apply under Or. XXI, r. 89. But here the private purchaser is the applicant. Of course Justice Chamier remarked that neither the judgment-debtor nor the new purchaser would be competent to make a deposit. That was, however, obiter dicta. This has been disagreed to by Justice Sadasiva Ayyar in Subbarayudu v. T. Lakshminarasama (7). The ruling in the case of Anantha Lakshmi Ammal v. Kunan Chankurath Sankaram Nair (1) is quoted in Subbarayudu v. Lakshminarasama (7) as to the point and shows that the subsequent purchaser from the judgment-debtor is entitled to apply under Or. XXI, r. 89.

It has been held in many cases that this rule affords a special indulgence to the judgment-debtor and gives him yet one more chance of saving the property. The rule should be interpreted liberally. Properties are often sold at auction sales at inadequate prices. For judgment-debtors who cannot raise the money by any other means, the only remedy open is to sell the property or a portion thereof. This will ensure that no loss is sustained by sale in Court at inadequate prices. But if the purchaser is deprived of the right to make a deposit, the ultimate result would be that the judgment-debtor must remain satisfied with the inadequate price fetched at the sale. The ruling in Hazari Ram v. Badar Ram (8) was decided under the old

Civil Procedure Code and is not now applicable.

For these reasons, I hold that the applicant is competent to make the deposit.

The appeal is allowed and the lower Court's order is set aside. The case is remanded for taking the deposit and making necessary orders thereon if not otherwise barred."

The Petitioner thereupon moved the High Court under sec. 115 of the Civil Procedure Code and obtained the present Rule.

Babu Chandra Sekhar Sen for the Petitioner.—I do not contend that the private sale after the Court-sale is void under sec. 64, C. P. C. I confine myself to the second question raised and decided by the Court of Appeal below, namely, whether a purchaser at a private sale from the judgment-debtor of a property after the same was sold in auction sale in execution of a decree can make a deposit under Or. XXI, r. 89, C. P. C. The learned Subordinate Judge relying on the cases of Subbarayudu v. Lakshmi (7) and Anantha Lakshmi v. Kunan Chankurath (1) has answered the question in the affirmative.

My submission is that the two decisions of the Madras Court are wrong in principle and are against the express language of the statute as embodied in Or. XXI, r. 89, C. P. C.

I rely on the decision in Ishwar Das v. Asaf Ali (2). The case of Pandurang v. Govind (4) supports the view taken by the Allahabad High Court.

The cases under the old Code are in my favour.

See Hazari v. Badar (8) and Narain v. Sourindra (9).

Apart from the decisions I strongly rely upon the wording of the section. The words "at the date of the application" are not to be found in the rule. Moreover after the sale the judgment-debtor had no interest which he could sell.

Babu Kanaidhon Dutt for the Opposite Party.—The case of Anantha v. Kunan (1) is in my favour and is expressly on the point. Before the sale is confirmed the judgment-debtor remains the owner of the property and as such he is entitled to sell the same. The rule ought to be liberally construed as it affords relief to the judgment-debtor. If the contention of the Petitioner be correct then the rule takes away what relief the legislature wanted to give to the judgment-debtor.

See Subbarayudu v. Lakshmi (7), Appaya v. Kunhati (10) and Banko Behary v. Krishna Chandra (11).

SANDEBSON, C. J.—This Rule arises out of an order of the Officiating Subordinate Judge of Chittagong by which he overruled the decisions which had been arrived at by the learned Munsif. It appears that the Petitioner to this Court had obtained a money-decree against one Ramesh Chandra Das, and that in execution of the decree the property of Ramesh Chandra Das was put up to sale by auction: The Petitioner, the decree-holder, purchased the property at the auction sale for Rs. 375. Two days after the auction sale the judgment-debtor purported to sell the property by means of a kabala to a third party whose name was Harendra Lal Das. Harendra Lal Das then applied under Or. XXI, r. 89, Code of Civil Procedure, for the purpose of making the deposits which are therein specified. The learned Munsif came to the conclusion that Harendra Lal Das was not qualified to make the deposit under Or. XXI, r. 89. The learned Munsif held that the private sale was void as against the decree-holder who was the auction-purchaser and referred to sec. 64 of the Civil Procedure Code and he confirmed the sale to the auction-purchaser. The result was that Harendra Lal Das appealed to the Subordinate Judge, who reversed the learned Munsif's order and remanded the case for taking the deposit and making the necessary orders thereon, if not otherwise barred. The rule was issued at the instance of the decree-holder calling upon the Opposite Party to show cause why the order of the learned Subordinate Judge should not be set aside.

The question which has been argued on the Rule is whether Harendra Lal Das was a person entitled, within the meaning of Or. XXI, r. 89 to apply to have the sale set aside upon complying with the terms of that rule.

The learned Vakil who has argued this case in support of the rule has drawn our attention to several cases, the decisions in which go to show that there is a considerable difference of opinion as to the meaning of the terms of this rule, as for instance the case of Anantha Lakshmi Ammal v. Kunan Chankurath Sankaram Nair (1) of the Madras High Court, where the learned Judge took the view that the subsequent purchaser, if I may so call him (Harendra Lal Das in this case) would be qualified to apply under Or. XXI, r. 89; the case of Ishwar Das v. Asaf Ali Khan (2) of the Allahabad High Court, where the learned Judges took a contrary view to that which was taken by the Madras High Court. Again, in the case of Musst. Dhanwanti Koer v. Shco Shankar Lall (3), a contrary view to that of the Madras High Court was taken by the learned Judges of the Patna High Court. The last case to which I need refer to is the case of Pandurang Laxman Uppade v. Govind Dadh Uppadhe (4) of the Bombay High Court. In some of those cases there was a discussion as to the effect of the auction sale—as to whether by reason of the auction sale the judgment-debtor was divested of all his interest in the property sold. The High Court at Patna seems to have taken the view that he was; on the other hand, the learned Judges of the Bombay High Court seem to have taken the view that the judgment-debtor was not divested of all his interest in the property by reason of the auction sale, at all events until it was confirmed. That point was raised during the argument on this Rule but I do not intend to express any opinion upon it, for, I do not think it necessary for the purpose of my judgment. I base my judgment upon what I consider to be the true interpretation of Or. XXI, r. 89, so far as it is applicable to the facts of this case. The rule runs as follows: “(1) where immoveable property has been sold in execution of a decree, any person, either owning such property or holding an interest therein by virtue of a title acquired before such sale, may apply to have the sale set aside on his depositing in Court”—then follow the particular sums to be deposited, which are specified in the section.

(4) I. L. R. 40 Bom. 557 (1916).

SARADAKRIPA LAL v. HARENDRA LAL DAS.

The view which was taken by the Bombay High Court in Pandurang v. Govind (4) as appears from the head-note was that a judgment-debtor, whose property had been sold at a Court-sale in execution of a decree against him, had a right to apply to have the sale set aside as a person owning the property sold in execution of the decree within the meaning of r. 89, Or. XXI of the Civil Procedure Code of 1908, in spite of the fact that he had transferred his interest in the property after the Court-sale. This is not a decision expressly on the point now under consideration but there are some observations in the judgments, which are applicable: Bachelor, J., at page 561 said: "I am not able to adopt the view that it is open to the subsequent purchaser to apply under this rule, for as it seems to me he is excluded by the terms of the rule" and later, on the same page: "for myself I can see no serious difficulty in holding that for the purpose of this rule the judgment-debtor in the position of the present applicant is still the owner of the property in the eye of the law, the auction sale being still unconfirmed," and Shah, J., at page 563 said: "It seems to me that a person owning the property or holding an interest therein by virtue of a title acquired before the sale is within the rule provided he owns it or holds an interest therein at the date of the sale by the Court."

In this case I have only to deal with the application by Harendra Lal Das, who purported to purchase the property from the judgment-debtor two days after the execution sale by the Court and before the sale was confirmed and to decide whether he was entitled to make the deposit under Or. XXI, r. 89 and to apply to have the sale set aside.

In my judgment, Harendra Lal Das, "the subsequent purchaser" as he has been called, is excluded by the express terms of the rule. The interest, if any, which he held in the property was not by virtue of a title acquired by him before the execution sale: his interest, if any, was by virtue of a title acquired after such sale and consequently in my judgment he is precluded by the very terms of the rule from applying under Or. XXI, r. 89. That is the only point which I decide upon the application and in my judgment it is sufficient to justify one in holding that the rule should be made absolute.

It was agreed by the two learned Vakils who argued this case that there is no decision of this Court upon the point. Reference was made to the case of Dulhin Mathura Koer v. Bangshidhari Singh (5). In that case the point, which is now before us, did not arise and was not dealt with by the learned Judges. For the above-mentioned reasons, in my judgment, this Rule should be made absolute. The result is that the order of the learned Officiating Subordinate Judge is set aside and the order of the learned Munsif is restored. We make no order as to costs.

CHOTZNER, J.—I agree.

H. C. S. Rule made absolute.

RAI BAHADUR SETH NEMICHAND, since deceased (now represented by Seth Teekam Chand), Appellant,
v.
SETH RADHA KISHEN, since deceased, and ors, Respondents.

Debt due with interest—Indefinite payment—
Right of creditor to appropriate towards interest—
Position when debtor makes specific appropriation—

RAI BAHADUR SETH NEMICHAND v. SETH RADHA KISHEN.

Entry in creditor's book as evidence of acceptance of debtor's appropriation.

A creditor to whom principal and interest are owed is entitled to appropriate any indefinite payment which he gets from a debtor to the payment of interest. A debtor might in making a payment stipulate that it was to be applied only to principal. If he did so, the creditor need not accept the payment on these terms, but then he must give back the money or cheque by which the money was proffered.

MEKA VENKATADRI APPA ROW BAHADUR ZEMINDAR GARU v. RAJA PARTHASARATHY APPA ROW BAHADUR ZEMINDAR GARU (1) referred to.

Entries in the books of creditors may be taken as indicative of agreement to a proposed appropriation by the debtor.

This was an appeal from a judgment and decree, dated the 15th April 1916, of the Chief Commissioner, Ajmer-Merwara, which modified a judgment and decree, dated the 12th April 1915, of the Additional District Judge of Ajmer-Merwara, which had modified a judgment and decree, dated the 30th May 1913, of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, First-Class of Beawar (Merwara).

On the 21st December 1906, the Appellant, Seth Nemichand (since deceased), instituted the present suit in the Court of the said Subordinate Judge, First-Class, of Beawar, to recover the balance due under a mortgage bond, of the 12th December 1890, executed by the Defendants-Respondents in favour of the Plaintiff.

The Defendants-Respondents executed the mortgage bond in suit on the 12th December 1890, for Rs. 44,000, promising to repay the principal amount within one year, with interest at the rate of 10 per cent. per mensem. In default of payment within one year, the agreed rate of interest was to be paid till the discharge of the debt. The principal was not paid as promised, but certain payments were made, and an account was settled between the parties on the 12th August 1893. The settled account was duly signed by Defendant, Radha Kishen, on behalf of the Defendants, and the principal amount due on that date was found to be Rs. 23,318. Subsequently the Defendants made several other payments which were credited by the Plaintiff towards the discharge of the interest due from the Defendants. These payments towards interest were endorsed by Defendant, Radha Kishen, on behalf of all the Defendants on three dates, namely, 14th April 1896, 17th January 1902 and 12th August 1904. The Plaintiff claimed to recover the balance of the principal Rs. 23,318, after giving credit for the payments made and appropriated towards the discharge of the interest as per details specified in the endorsements mentioned above, and he also claimed interest and costs and future interest at the agreed rate till the date of realization.

The Defendants filed separate written statements and put forward several pleas. Musammat Sheo Kunwari contended that the mortgage in suit was not binding on her, as she had not executed it after fully understanding its terms and the effect thereof. Radha Kishen pleaded that the endorsement relating to the settlement of account made by him on the 11th August 1893, and the remaining three endorsements mentioned above, were made by him under undue influence exerted by the Plaintiff. All these pleas were negatived by the findings of the lower Appellate Courts.

The Defendants further pleaded that the Plaintiff had improperly appropriated the payments towards the discharge of the interest, and contended that those payments ought to be taken to reduce the principal amount. On the pleadings the said Subordinate Judge framed a number of issues.

After examining evidence the Subordinate Judge delivered judgment on the 30th May 1913. He found that all the four endorsements relating to the settlement of account, and the payments towards interest that were made by Defendant, Radha Kishen, were induced by undue influence. He held that "the amount of principal and interest was properly settled up to Sawan Sudi 1st, Sambat, 1920=12th August 1893," and that "the balance of principal on that date was Rs. 23,318 due to Plaintiff," but he held that there was no proof that the Defendants had agreed that the payments made by them after the 12th August 1893, should be appropriated by the Plaintiff to the discharge of the interest and not the principal. He accordingly held that the payments should be credited to the reduction of the principal, that is, Rs. 23,318, and made a decree in favour of the Plaintiff as follows :—

Principal due to
Plaintiff	Rs. 6,572 10 0
Total interest up to
30th May 1913	Rs. 19,849 0 0
Total	Rs. 26,421 10 0

He also decreed post diem interest at 6 per cent. from the date of the decree to the date of payment, and made the usual decree for sale of the mortgaged property, and a personal decree for payment of the decretal amount against the Defendants, Radha Kishen and Musammat Sheo Kunwari.

From the said decree of the Subordinate Judge, the Plaintiff appealed, and the Defendants filed cross-objections. The Additional District Judge who heard them, delivered judgment on the 12th April 1915. He stated the points for decision as follows :—

(1) Whether the endorsements on the back of the document were made by Radha Kishen under undue influence in Sambat 1963.

(2) Whether the amounts paid by Defendant have been properly appropriated towards payment of interest and principal in accordance with the terms of the bond.

(3) Whether the interest allowed by the Court below is contrary to the principle laid down in sec. 33 of Ajmer Reg. III of 1877.

(4) Whether the Court below was right in allowing interest on sums paid by the Defendant.

(5) Was the Court below right in not allowing interest at contract rate from the date of decree to the day fixed for payment into Court.

(6) Have the costs of Salig Ram been properly awarded against the Plaintiff.

(7) Should "chhut" have been allowed to the Defendants by the Court below.

(8) To what relief is the Plaintiff entitled.

He found the second, sixth and seventh points in the affirmative, and the first, third, fourth and fifth points in the negative. He held that all the endorsements made by Defendant, Radha Kishen, on behalf the Defendants were true, and that they were not the result of undue influence. He also held that on the date of settlement of account (i.e., 11th August 1893) the principal due was Rs. 23,318, and that the payments thereafter made by the Defendants were properly appropriated by the Plaintiff to the discharge of interest. He observed as follows :—

"The entry in the Defendant's own account books (Khata Bahi for the years 1947-50) showing that after settlement of accounts in the presence of the parties, the balance due to Plaintiff up to 12th August 1893, was Rs. 23,318, clearly proves that the first endorsement on the back of the document showing the very same result was made in Sawan Sambat 1950 (12th August 1893), and not in Sambat 1963 (1906 A. D.), as alleged by the Defendant. If it had not been made in Sawan Sambat 1950, there could possibly have been no entry in the Defendant's Khata Bahi for the years 1947-50 on page 52, embodying the same result.

"Entries in Plaintiff's account books, such as Rokar, Roznama Khata and Lekha Par Bahis, show that payments made by Defendants after 12th August 1893, were appropriated towards interest, as the sums paid at the time did not exceed the amount then due on account of interest. The entries in the account books of the Defendant himself do not show that the various items were paid towards principal or interest. As interest was to be paid monthly and the amount of each payment was not sufficient to cover the interest then due, the Plaintiff, in the absence of any directions from the Defendant to the contrary, was certainly entitled to appropriate the items towards interest (vide sec. 60 of the Contract Act). When the debtor does not make any appropriation at the time when he makes the payment, the right of application devolves on the creditor, and he may exercise the right until the very last moment and need not disclose his intention in express terms (Pollock on Law of Contracts, page 259, second edition). Therefore, irrespective of the endorsements made by the Defendant on the back of the document, the Plaintiff could exercise his right to apply the amounts to interest until the last moment. It was for the Defendant to show that he had acted in such a way in respect of the amounts paid as to limit the discretion of the creditor."

The result was that the Additional District Judge allowed the appeal of the Plaintiff, and made a decree modifying the decree of the Subordinate Judge as follows :—

Interest at 10 per cent.
up to 12th April
1915	Rs. 21,077	1	6

Total decreed . Rs. 44,395 1 6

The Defendants were further ordered to pay the decretal amount by the 30th June 1915, with interest on the principal sum at 10 per cent., and to pay interest at 6 per cent. on the decretal amount after the 30th June 1915, up to the date of realization.

From the said decree of the Additional District Judge, the Defendants appealed to the Chief Commissioner of Ajmer-Merwara, who delivered judgment on the 15th April 1916. He held that the settlement of account was made by the parties on the 12th August 1893, and that the principal then found due to the Plaintiff amounted to Rs. 23,318. He observed as follows :—

"But at any rate the facts in one respect appear to corroborate the story of the Plaintiff rather than the Defendant. The working up to this figure of Rs. 23,318 in Sambat 1961, appears to prove that the figure existed on the bond in Sambat 1950. Ex. P. 19, also confirms this. The Appellants allege that all the entries were made on the back of the bond at one time under undue influence. But to my mind there can be no doubt that the figure Rs. 23,318 was struck in Sambat 1950."

The learned Chief Commissioner further held that the payments made by the Defendants after the 12th August 1893, were appropriated by the Plaintiff to the discharge of interest, and that the endorsements confirming the appropriation were made by Defendant, Radha Kishen, "with his eyes open, and with consent" and without any undue influence. But the learned Chief Commissioner was of opinion that it was not open to him to grant relief to the Plaintiff in accordance with his findings, because in one of the Plaintiff's account books, namely, a Khata, Ex. 24, the principal due was shown as Rs. 6,572-0-9. He therefore held that the Plaintiff was entitled to Rs. 6,572-0-9 only as principal, and to interest at the rate of 10 per cent. up to the date of the suit, and to $3\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. per annum on the principal amount from the date of the suit till realization. He accordingly allowed the appeal of the Defendants, and made a decree modifying the decree of the Additional District Judge as follows :—

Principal . . .	Rs. 6,572	0	9
Interest up to 15th April 1916 . .	Rs. 18,874	12	11
Total . .	Rs. 25,446	13	8

The Appellant applied to the said Chief Commissioner for review of judgment which was refused on the 20th September 1916, and from the said decree of the Chief Commissioner the Plaintiff appealed to His Majesty in Council.

Mr. L. DeGruyther, K. C. (with Mr. B. Dubé) for the Appellants.—The point for determination is precisely the same as was before your Lordships a couple of days ago in Meka Venkatadri Appa Row Bahadur Zemindar Garu v. Raja Parthasarathy Appa Row Bahadur Zemindar Garu (1), whether payments should be appropriated towards interest or capital first.

[LORD DUNEDIN.—It is for the other man to shew that, when he paid you, he made a condition that the amount should be appropriated towards the principal.]

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by

LORD DUNEDIN.—This is a suit upon a mortgage. The mortgage was of date the 12th December 1890, for Rs. 30,000, with interest at 10 annas per cent. per mensem, executed by three persons carrying on business as bankers in favour of the Plaintiff. On the back of the mortgage deed there are certain endorsements signed by the debtor, who was the manager of the firm. These show that up to the 11th August 1893, there had been paid Rs. 11,334-6-6. This was accordingly, as also shown, credited to the extent of Rs. 4,652-6-6 to interest, being the total amount of interest due as at that date, the balance of Rs. 6,682 being credited to principal, thus reducing the principal due as at that date to Rs. 23,318. After that there are successive credits to interest only at the 14th April 1896, the 17th January 1902, and the 12th August 1904, the payments which each of these credits represents being admittedly less than the amount of interest due at the respective dates.

The present suit was raised on the 12th December 1906, for payment of the balance outstanding. Two of the Defendants contested liability, but this was decided against them, and there is now no question of liability. The only question before the Board is as to how the account is to be stated. The Plaintiff contends that the account should be stated as it is in the endorsements, i.e., that the payments made should all be credited to interest. The Defendants contend that they should be credited to principal as at each date at which they were made, and interest calculated only on the balance as so brought out. The Defendants allege that the endorsements before referred to were executed under undue influence. This view, although upheld by the Subordinate Judge, without direct proof but upon what seems a quite unsatisfactory inference, was negatived by the District Judge to whom appeal was taken, and his view was confirmed by the Chief Commissioner on appeal from the District Judge. This makes a concurrent finding so far as this Board is concerned.

Now the law as to payments being applied to principal or interest was laid down by the Board in the case of Meka Venkatadri Appa Row Bahadur Zemindar Garu v. Raja Parthasarathy Appa Row Bahadur Zemindar Garu (1) decided only a few days ago. Shortly re-stated, it is this: A creditor to whom principal and interest are owed is entitled to appropriate any indefinite payment which he gets from a debtor to the payment of interest. A debtor might in making a payment stipulate that it was to be applied only to principal. If he did so, the creditor need not accept the payment on these terms, but then he must give back the money or the cheque by which the money is proffered. If he accepts it, he would then be bound by the appropriation proposed by the debtor. The learned District Judge correctly stated the law in his judgment and accordingly gave decree for the outstanding principal of Rs. 23,318 and interest at the agreed rate from the 12th August 1893, to the date of the suit, under deduction of the sums paid to credit of interest.

The Chief Commissioner recalled this judgment. He held that, inasmuch as in one of the Plaintiff's books there were certain entries as credits to principal with interest at 8 per cent., then, although in the other books the payments were credited to interest, yet the entry in the one book could not be disclaimed by the Plaintiff, and he drew the inference that the parties agreed that the payments should be to capital and should only be credited to interest if interest was reduced to 8 annas simple.

Now that entries in the books of the creditor may be taken as indicative of agreement to a proposed appropriation by the debtor need not be denied and is in accordance with the law as above stated. But the learned Chief Commissioner has omitted to notice a fact which in their Lordships' opinion prevents the inference to be drawn as he drew it. It is this: Both parties came into Court with opposing views as to an alleged verbal agreement made after the partial settlement of the 11th August 1893. The Plaintiff averred that it was arranged that thereafter the interest was to be 8 annas per mensem compound with yearly rests instead of 10 annas simple. The Defendant averred that the interest was to be 7 annas 9 pies simple. At the trial neither party pursued his contention, and the interest therefore falls to be paid as per the mortgage. But on the Plaintiff's belief it was quite natural that payments should in a book be treated as payments to principal, because if the interest is compound and the payment is credited at the time of the rests, it makes no difference whether the payment is credited to principal or to interest. Apart from this inference, which is fallacious and confounds simple with compound interest, there is no trace of an appropriation to capital proposed by the debtor and acceded to by the creditor. And once the idea of undue influence is gone, the markings signed by the debtor on the back of the mortgage and the entries in all the other books of the Plaintiff prove all the other way.

The other point raised by the Appellant is as to the rate of interest up to the date of the decree. The Chief Commissioner has reduced this to $3\frac{3}{4}$ per cent., but in the view taken on the main question by the Board the interest must be at contract rate, i.e., 10 annas per mensem simple, up to the date of the decree. After that the rate is in the discretion of the Court.

The appeal must, therefore, be allowed, and the case must go down that the account may be stated in accordance with the view above expressed. The Respondents will pay the costs of the appeal and in the Court of the Chief Commissioner. Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly.

Hindu Law—Mitakshara (Southern school)—Succession, order of, amongst atma-bandhus—Division into ex parte paterna and ex parte materna, and preference of former to latter, if justifiable—Doctrine of spiritual benefit, if determines preference—Propinquity alone, if ground of preference—The rule in Mitakshara, if open to question as spurious or as incomplete—Enumeration of heirs, illustrative—Viramitrodaya, authority of, in Southern India—Maternal uncle's place in the order of succession.

The passage in the Mitakshara, Chap. II, sec. 6, para. 1, laying down the order of succession amongst the bandhus has been accepted by a series of Commentators and by eminent Hindu Judges in the British Indian Courts, and any doubt at this stage as to its character or authority will lead only to perplexity and confusion. The enumeration of bandhus in the passage being intended, by way of illustration only, the rule is not open to objection on the ground of incompleteness.

The question being whether according to the law of the Mitakshara as recognised in the Dravira Country, the maternal uncle or the son of the paternal aunt's son (both of whom are atma-bandhus) should succeed as the preferential heir :

Held—That there is nothing in para. 598 of the Sarasvati Vilasa, to justify the division of the atma-bandhus in two sub-classes, viz., ex parte paterna and ex parte materna or the preference of the former to the latter.

That, in the absence of express authority varying the rule, the propositions enunciated in MUTTUSAMI v. MUTTUKUMARASAMI (3), furnish a safe guide, and the maternal uncle, who was undoubtedly nearer in degree and who offered oblations to the father and grandfather of the deceased whilst the son of the paternal aunt's son offered none, was the preferential heir.

The place assigned by Sarbadhikary and Mayne to the maternal uncle in their tables of succession questioned.

Although the Smriti Chandrika in the Southern Presidency is regarded as the most authoritative commentary on Vijnaneshwara's work, the Viramitrodaya holds, as in Western India, a high position.

These were consolidated appeals from a judgment of the High Court of Judicature at Madras.

The facts of the case will appear from their Lordships' judgment.

The contest in this appeal was between the maternal uncle and father's sister's son's son of one Sankaramurthi Mudaliar deceased.

The Subordinate Judge decided that both the claimants were atma-bandhus of the deceased, but the maternal uncle being nearer in degree and also conferring greater spiritual benefit on the propositus was entitled to succeed in preference to the father's sister's grandson.

The High Court was of opinion that the maternal uncle being related to the deceased through the mother's side was to be postponed to the father's sister's grandson who was related to the deceased through the mother's side. The High Court thought the case was covered by Sundaramal v. Rangasami (7) and Balusami v. Narayana (8) and applying the distinction of ex parte paterna and ex parte materna they said that the father's sister's son's son was the preferential heir.

Mr. B. Dubé (with Mr. J. C. Hazra) for the Appellant contended that the distinction of ex parte paterna and ex parte materna ought not to be applied to the case.

The text of Yajnavalka simply says in default of the gentiles (agnates) the cognates (bandhus) come.

In Giridhari Lal Roy v. The Government of Bengal (2), it was laid down for the first time that the succession amongst the bandhus is to be governed in the following way: First come the atma-bandhus, next the pitri-bandhus and last the matri-bandhus. It was not decided in that case in what order succession will be governed amongst persons of the same class.

The principle amongst persons of the same class ought to be the nearer in degree and ought to exclude the more remote. Applying that test the maternal uncle is nearer in degree.

The maternal uncle is not mentioned in the text quoted by Yajnavalka—but his position as an atma-bandhu was first recognised in Guru Gobinda v. Anand Lal (9) and Buddha Singh v. Lattu Singh (10) lays down the principle of succession according to Mitakshara. A recent Full Bench of the Patna High Court has expressed di-approval of the cases in Sundaramal v. Rangasami (7) and Balusami v. Narayana (8) referred to above.

[Mr. AMEER ALI stopped Mr. Dubé observing that the text of Vrihaspati was quite clear as to the Mitakshara law of succession which says we must apply the text of nearness of relationship to the propositus and that concludes the case.]

Their LORDSHIP'S JUDGMENT was delivered by

MR. AMEER ALI.—The two actions which have given rise to the present consolidated appeal relate to the inheritance of one Sankarmurthi Mudaliar, a Hindu inhabitant of the Tinnevely District in the Madras Presidency, subject to the law of the Mitakshara as recognised in the Dravida country. The question for determination is of considerable importance and their Lordships cannot help regretting that, owing to the non-appearance of the Respondents, it has been heard ex parte. Sankaramurthi died in 1900 without leaving any male issue or a widow. Consequently, on his death his mother, Vedammal, who was alive at the time, succeeded to his estate. She held the property until her own demise in 1910. Thereupon the two claimants, Subramania (since deceased) and Vedachela, came forward alleging title as bandhus to Sankaramurthi's inheritance, each claiming by virtue of his relationship to be preferentially entitled.

The following table will show the position in which they stand to each other and to Sankaramurthi:—

A. S. VEDACHELA MUDALIAR v. K. I. RANGANATHAN CHETTIAR.

Subramania brought his action on the 27th January 1911, in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Tinnevely in which Vedachela was impleaded as the tenth Defendant. The other Defendants appear to be mainly assignees from Vedammal. Vedachela brought his suit shortly after, Subramania being the principal Defendant.

The two suits were numbered respectively 6 and 15 of 1911, and were tried together before the Subordinate Judge. The primary question for him to determine was which of the two claimants, viz., the son of the paternal aunt's son, or the maternal uncle was entitled to the inheritance in preference to the other. The Subordinate Judge after examining the authorities came to the conclusion that the maternal uncle, Vedachela, had the superior title. He accordingly dismissed Subramania's suit and decreed Vedachela's claim. From his decrees there were two appeals to the High Court of Madras. The learned appeal Judges differed from the Subordinate Judge as to the respective rights of the parties, and accordingly reversed his decision in both the suits, the result being that Subramania's claim was allowed and Vedachela's was rejected. The present consolidated appeal before the Board is from the judgment and decrees of the High Court.

The point for determination turns on the construction of the rule laid down in the Mitakshara as to the succession of bandhus, for which the English word "cognate" has been used as a synonym in English translations and treatises on Hindu law and in a long series of judgments. The history of the law relating to bandhus, and the principles governing their right to inherit have been explained at considerable length in the case of Ramchandra Martand Waikar v. Venayak Venkatesh Kothiekar (1). It is sufficient to observe here that under the Mitakshara the right of inheritance depends on sapinda relationship, in other words, "community of blood." Sapinda relations are divided into two groups, viz., samana-gotra sapindas (blood relations of the same gotra or stock) and bhinna-gotra sapindas (consanguineous relations belonging to another gotra), in other words blood relations connected through females who have passed into other families or gotras. The bhinna-gotra sapindas on whom the law confers the right of inheritance are the inheriting bandhus.

The rule in the Mitakshara as to the succession of these bandhus is rendered into English by Mr. Colebrooke in the following words, Mitakshara, Chap. II, sec. 6, para. 1 :—

"(1) On failure of agnates, the cognates are heirs. Cognates are of three kinds; related to the person himself, to his father, or to his mother as is declared by the following text. 'The sons of his own father's sister, the sons of his own mother's sister, and the sons of his maternal uncle, must be considered as his own cognate kindred. The sons of his father's paternal aunt, the sons of his father's maternal aunt, and the sons of his father's maternal uncle, must be deemed his father's cognate kindred. The sons of his mother's paternal aunt, the sons of his mother's maternal uncles, must be reckoned his mother's cognate kindred.'

"(2) Here, by reason of near affinity, the cognate kindred of the deceased himself, are his successors in the first instance; on failure of them, his father's cognate kindred; or, if there be none, his mother's cognate kindred. This must be understood to be the order of succession here intended."

Mr. Colebrooke's rendering of the first part of para. 1 is a paraphrase of the original terms, atma-bandhu, (pitri) pitru-bandhu and (matri) matru-bandhu. Then what follows has been judicially construed to be merely illustrative of what the three classes severally mean. It will be noticed that in the enumeration of bandhus in this illustration, several important bandhus, such as the maternal uncle and sister's son, are omitted. The maternal uncle's position as an inheriting bandhu was established so early as the sixteenth century by Mitra Misra, whose well-known commentary on the Mitakshara, named the Viramitrodaya is regarded as a high authority wherever the law of that school is in force. Mitra Misra gives first an exposition of the rule enunciated in the Mitakshara :—

"On failure of the samanadakas the 'cognates' or 'bandhus' are heirs. The cognates are of three descriptions; the cognates of a man himself, the cognates of the father, and the cognates of the mother. To this effect is the following passage of the Smriti: 'One's father's sister's sons, one's mother's sister's sons and one's maternal uncle's sons are known to be one's own cognates; the father's father's sister's sons, the father's mother's sister's sons and the father's maternal uncle's sons are known to be the father's cognates; the mother's father's sister's sons, the mother's mother's sister's sons and the mother's maternal uncle's sons are known to be the mother's cognates.' "

"Amongst these also the order is that, by reason of greater propinquity, first one's own cognates, after them the father's cognates, and after them the mother's cognates."

He then goes on to add :—

"The term bandhus in the text of Vijnaneswara and Yajnavalkya must comprehend also the maternal uncles and the rest, otherwise the maternal uncles and the rest would be omitted, and their sons would be entitled to inherit, and not they themselves, though nearer in the degree of affinity; a doctrine highly objectionable."

The Judicial Committee in Giridhari Lall Roy v. The Government of Bengal (2) recognised the authority of the Viramitrodaya, and acting upon its exposition held that the maternal uncle, although not mentioned specifically in the illustration, was an inheriting bandhu. In that case the contest was between the father's maternal uncle and the Crown claiming the property by escheat. The Board held that as the maternal uncle was a bandhu of the deceased, the father's maternal uncle was a bandhu of the father. The maternal uncle's place, however, among the bandhus of his own class was not defined, and he has had many battles to fight in consequence.

The Subordinate Judge in the present case has held that both the claimants are no doubt atma-bandhus, but that the maternal uncle, both on the ground of nearness of blood as well as superior efficacy of oblations, was the preferable heir. One part of his judgment deserves notice. Referring to the decision in Giridhari Lall Roy's case (2) he says as follows :—

"Their Lordships relied on the passages quoted from the Viramitrodaya in that case as well as on the passage in the Mitakshara dealing with the property of a trader dying abroad. The reference here is to Vignaneswara's commentary on Sloka 264. Chap. 11 of Yagnavalka. It occurs in the perkaranam (section) called Sambooya Samuthanam (concerns between partners). The sloke says that the property of a trader dying abroad goes to his (1) dayadas; (2) bhandhavas; (3) gnatis; (4) returning partners, and on failure of these in order, to the king. Vignaneswara explains dayadas as 'sons and the rest,' bhandhavas as 'on the mother's side the maternal uncle and the rest,' and the gnatis as 'gotraja sapindas as distinguished from the descendants.' It is clear from this that among the bandhus related through the mother, the mathula or maternal uncle takes the first place."

The learned Judges of the High Court on appeal proceeded on a different line. Mr. Justice Miller felt himself constrained to follow certain previous decisions of his own Court in holding that the maternal uncle's claim must be overruled. Whilst his learned colleague, Sadasiva Ayyar, J., considered the passage in the Mitakshara laying down the order of succession among bandhus as "spurious" and "non-Shastraic." His view should be given in his own words :—

"As I pointed out in the course of the arguments, the text is illogical, incomplete and inconsistent. However, it has to be accepted though, in my opinion, it is not a Shastraic text, for, I am bound by the authority of the Privy Council not to rely upon the more ancient and authoritative Shastras where the Law has been settled by the Courts according to the custom and practice of the Hindu community resident in a certain Province, even though the custom is based upon less authoritative treatises. (The mother's sister's son is unconditionally stated to come under the term 'bhinna-gotra sapinda,' though very frequently he is of the same gotra as the propositus, that is when the mother and her sister have married husbands of the same gotra.) Though the bandhus are classified as atma-bandhus, pitru-bandhus and matru-bandhus, all three come in as heirs because they are bandhus of the propositus himself though the first class alone is technically called atma-bandhus (or own bandhus). With the greatest deference the fourth proposition laid down by Sir T. Muthuswami Aiyer, J., viz., that between bandhus of the same class the spiritual benefit they confer on the propositus is a ground of preference, does not commend itself to me, though guarded obiter dicta to the same effect are found in other learned judgments also both earlier and later in date than Muthusami v. Muttukumarasami (3). Some of the pitru-bandhus and matru-bandhus mentioned in the text itself confer no spiritual benefit whatever on the propositus, and I fully agree with those judicial observations which hold that according to the Mitakshara (and ignoring the Benares branch of that school) the question of spiritual benefit or of death pollution, or of the right of performance of obsequial ceremonies, should not be introduced when considering the question of heirship. I go further and say that the introduction of such questions would lead only to inextricable confusion."

And the learned Judge went on to add :—

"The enumeration in the Vridha Sata-tapa's text being clearly not exhaustive, several bandhus have been brought in by the decisions of the Courts even in precedence of the three atma-bandhus specially mentioned in the text (the said three being the father's sister's son, the mother's sister's son, and the mother's brother's son). When we once bring in others, atma-bandhus before pitru-bandhus it seems logical to hold that all atma-bandhus (lower in status to the three specially mentioned) should also be exhausted before even the first pitru-bandhu could come in. The only convenient and logical principle seems to me to so bring in all the atma-bandhus, though removed to the extreme limit of 5 degrees from the propositus, before bringing in a pitru-bandhu, though the latter may be removed by a less number of degrees from the propositus and (by the same analogy) to bring in all the pitru-bandhus even up to the fifth degree before a matru-bandhu though the latter is removed by less than 5 degrees."

It is hardly possible for their Lordships to pronounce an opinion on the authenticity of the passage condemned in such strong terms by a Hindu Judge. They can only observe that it appears to have been accepted by a series of commentators and by eminent Hindu Judges in the British Indian Courts. Any doubt at this stage as to its character or authority will, in their Lordships' opinion, lead only to perplexity and confusion. As regards the incompleteness of the rule, it is obvious that if the enumeration of bandhus was only intended by way of illustration the difficulty disappears, and the omission of such important bandhus as the mother's brother and the sister's son becomes easily intelligible, as both must have held in the social and religious system of the Hindus, a position which did not require a jurist's pronouncement to elucidate.

A. S. VEDACHELA MUDALIAR & K. I. RAN GANATHAN, CHETTIAR.

Respecting the learned Judge's view in the latter part of the passage quoted above, their Lordships do not consider they are called upon to express an opinion by the facts of the present case. Both the contestants are found to be atma-bandhus, and the sole question is who among the two is preferentially entitled to Sankaramurthi's inheritance. Recent writers on Hindu law have divided each class of bandhus into two sub-classes respectively designated as cognates ex parte paterna, and cognates ex parte materna. This subdivision is evidently based on an inference from the order in which the several bandhus are mentioned in the illustrative enumeration. For instance, among the atma-bandhus enumerated, the name of the father's sister's son is first given; then comes the mother's sister's son; and after him, the son of the mother's brother. Similarly, among the specifically named (pitri) pitru-bandhus first comes the son of the father's paternal aunt, and among (matri) matru-bandhus the son of the mother's paternal aunt. From this it has been inferred that the expounder of the rule in question intended that each class should be divided into two sub-classes according to the side of relationship, and that in every case preference should be given to the father's side. Their Lordships, again, in the view they take of the rights of the parties in the present case, do not think it necessary to express an opinion how far this proposition is in conformity with the express rule that in each class propinquity should be the governing factor. Assuming, however, the inference to be well-founded, the question arises, what is the place of the mother's brother among the atma-bandhus? He is not specifically named; his sons are. He is unquestionably the nearest sapinda; and according to the ancient rule relating to sapinda descent, "to the nearest sapinda, the inheritance next belongs," he would undoubtedly be entitled to Sankaramurthi's estate, unless he is cut out, as the learned Judges of the Madras High Court have cut him out in favour of the paternal aunt's grandson, by the inferential application of a rule of preference in each class to a person not named at all in the text, but who certainly stands nearest to the deceased by sapinda relationship.

The earlier decisions of the Madras High Court throw no light on the question at issue. In Narasimma v. Mangammal (4), where the contest was between the mother's brother and the father's sister, preference was given to the maternal uncle. Again in Chinnamal v. Venkatachala (5), where the contest was between the maternal grandfather of the deceased on one side and his paternal aunt on the other, the mother's father was preferred to the father's sister. In Muttusami v. Muttukumarasami (3), the contest was between a maternal uncle of the half-blood and the father's paternal aunt. Mr. Justice Muttusami Ayyar and Mr. Justice Parker held in favour of the maternal uncle, and their view was affirmed by the Judicial Committee [Muthuswami v. Muthukumarasami (6)].

It was in this case that the learned Judges laid down four broad principles for determining preferability among contending bandhus. (To one of these propositions Mr. Justice Sadasiva Ayyer, in the present case, has taken exception). They say as follows:—

"The conclusions we have come to are (1), that those who are bhinnagotra-sapindas or related through females born in or belonging to the family of the propositus are bandhus; (2) that as stated in the text of Vridha Satatapa or Baudhayana they are of three classes, viz., atma-bandhus, pitru-bandhus and matru-bandhus, and succeed in the order in which they are named; (3) that the examples given therein are intended to show the mode in which nearness of affinity is to be ascertained; and (4) that as between bandhus of the same class, the spiritual benefit they confer upon the propositus is, as stated in Viramitrodaya, a ground of preference."

In Sundaramal v. Rangasami (7), there was a triangular contest. The third Defendant was the deceased's mother's sister's son, the fourth and fifth Defendants were the daughters of his two sisters, whilst the Plaintiffs and two other Defendants were the sons of the daughters of the deceased's paternal uncle. The learned Judges overruled the claim of the sisters' daughters, and of the mother's sister's son. In rejecting the latter's claim the learned Judges used the following terms:—

"As between Plaintiffs and the third Defendant the latter is a bandhu ex parte materna, whilst the former are bandhus ex parte paterna. The decision in Muttusami v. Muttukumarasami (3) is not in point. There the competition was between a maternal uncle and the father's paternal aunt's son, both of whom were bhinna-gotra sapindas and bandhus."

In Balusami v. Narayana (8) on which the decision of the High Court mainly rests, the contest was between the deceased's maternal uncle's son on one side, and the son of his sister's son on the other. The learned Judges of the High Court held that the latter was nearer in degree to the propositus than the maternal uncle's son. Among other reasons for this conclusion they state at the end of the judgment, "another fundamental principle of the law, in favour of the third Defendant's preferable right is that among bandhus of a class, those who are ex parte paterna take before bandhus ex parte materna."

It is to be noticed that in Balusami v. Narayana (8), the learned Judges do not exclude from consideration in determining the question of preferability the fact of superior religious efficacy. They also recognise the high authority of the Viramitrodaya in the Mitakshara school.

The passage in the Mitakshara (Chap. II, sec. 6, paras. 1 and 2), which lays down the rules relating to the succession of bandhus has already been quoted in a previous part of this judgment. It is expressly declared that among the classes, each takes precedence according to the order mentioned, viz., the deceased's atma-bandhus come first, the (pitri) pitru-bandhus (the father's bandhus) come next, and the (matri) matru-bandhus come last. The ground on which the rule is based is stated in express terms to be "nearness" of blood. "Here," the text says, "by reason of nearness the atma-bandhus are his successors in the first instance," and so on.

In Southern India the Smriti Chandrika of Devananda Bhatta holds a parallel position to the Mayukha in the Bombay Presidency. Devananda Bhatta flourished before Mitra Misra the author of the Viramitrodaya for the latter frequently quotes Devananda. Although the Smriti Chandrika in the Southern Presidency is regarded as the most authoritative commentary on Vijnaneswara's work, the Viramitrodaya holds, as in Western India, a high position. It supplements many gaps and omissions in the earlier commentaries, and illustrates and elucidates with logical preciseness the meaning of doubtful prescriptions.

The Smriti Chandrika (Chap. XI, sec. 5, paras. 13-15) states the rule as to the succession of bandhus in the following terms :—

"13. Brihaspati bearing in mind all the above principles declares:—'Where there are many relatives (jnatayah), or remote kindred (sakulyah) or cognate kindred (bandhavah), whoever is nearest of kin, shall take the wealth of him, who dies without male issue.'

"14. (Jnatayah) sapindas, or kinsmen connected by funeral oblations of food (sakulyah) samanodakas or distant kinsmen connected by libations of water (bandhavah) cognate kindred. A description of these is given, as follows, in a different Smriti, according to their order of relationship.

"The sons of his own father's sister, and the sons of his own mother's sister, and the sons of his maternal uncle must be considered as his own cognate kindred. The sons of his father's paternal aunt, the sons of his father's maternal aunt, and the sons of his father's maternal uncle, must be deemed his father's cognate kindred. The sons of his mother's paternal aunt, the sons of his mother's maternal aunt and the sons of his mother's maternal uncle, must be reckoned his mother's cognate kindred."

"15. Of the kinsmen, distant kinsmen, and cognate kindred, in default of one that stands nearest in the order expressly given, he that may be somehow viewed to stand on a par with him may be selected; it being generally declared by Gautama:—'Let those take the inheritance who give the funeral cake (pinda) who are the descendants from the same gotra, or who are sprung from the same Rishi.'"

The Sarasvati Vilasa, according to the editor of the Vivada Chintamani, is another work of authority in Southern India. It frequently refers to the Smriti Chandrika, and, consequently, its author must have flourished later than Devananda Bhatta. In the Sarasvati Vilasa, the principle relating to the succession of bandhus is thus given :—

"Para. 595. The bandhus are mentioned in another Smriti in the order of their propinquity. The sons of one's father's sister, the sons of one's mother's sister, and the sons of one's mother's brother should be known as one's atma-bandhus. The sons of one's father's father's sister, the sons of one's father's mother's sister, and the sons of one's father's mother's brother should be known as one's pitru-bandhus. The sons of one's mother's father's sister, the sons of one's mother's mother's sister, and the sons of one's mother's mother's brother should be known as matru-bandhus."

"Para. 596. These have a claim upon the wealth in default of the gotrajas."

"Para. 597. Even there, one's atma-bandhus take the wealth first by reason of their propinquity. In default of them, the pitru-bandhus take the wealth, and in default of them the matru-bandhus. This order should be known." Setlur's Collection of Hindu law Books on Inheritance. p. 183.

And then comes the passage on which the Judges in Balusami v. Narayana (8) relied in their division of atma-bandhus in two sub-classes, viz., ex parte paterna and ex parte materna. That passage runs thus :—

"Para. 598. Nor could it be urged here that the mother being nearer than the father, the matru-bandhus take the wealth before the pitru-bandhus. From the text, 'of these the mother is more important than the father'; (2) the mother's precedence alone is stated and not that of the mother's bandhus. Therefore, we think it sound that the matru-bandhus should take the wealth only after the pitru-bandhus."

A very small consideration would show that that passage has nothing to do with the members of the same class inter se. It only explains why pitru-bandhus are to be preferred to matru-bandhus, the mother's position being special to herself under an express rule.

The passage in the Viramitrodaya bearing on the subject has already been referred to, but attention may once more be directed to the words of Mitra Misra in which he declares the position of the maternal uncle as an heir—"otherwise the exclusion of the maternal uncle and the like would be the result. And it would be extremely improper that their sons are heirs, but they themselves though nearer are excluded."

Among modern writers both Golap Chandar Shastri, p. 296, and Raj Coomar Sarbadhikary, p. 726, affirm that nearness of blood is the governing principle in the succession of bandhus. The Shastri lays down the rule in the following words: "(1) The nearness in degree on whichever side is to be preferred to one more remote: (2) of those equal in degree, one related on the father's side is to be preferred to one related on the mother's side; (3) when the side is the same, the circumstance of one being related through a male and another through a female makes no difference." And Professor Raj Coomar Sarbadhikary states that in a case of a contest between two members of the same class and of the same degree or equally remote, the question of efficacy of oblations "determines the preferable right." The tables of succession in Professor Sarbadhikary's lectures, and in Mr. Mayno's and Mr. Bhattacharji's erudite works are very valuable in judging of the bandhus belonging to each class. But their Lordships are not satisfied that the place they have suggested for the maternal uncle in their respective tables of succession is correct.

Their Lordships think that, in the absence of any express authority varying the rule, the propositions enunciated in Muttusami v. Muttukumarasami (3), which on appeal was affirmed by the Judicial Committee, furnish a safe guide.

In the present case before their Lordships, the Appellant and the deceased were sapindas to each other; and he (the Appellant) is undoubtedly nearer in degree to the deceased than Subramania. He also offers oblations to his father and grandfather to whom the deceased was also bound to offer pinda. The deceased thus shares the merit, resulting from the Appellant's oblations to the manes of his ancestors, whereas the father's sister's son's son offers no pinda to the deceased's ancestors. On all these grounds their Lordships think the view taken by the Subordinate Judge was well founded. They will therefore humbly advise His Majesty to reverse the judgment and decrees of the High Court and restore those of the first Court with costs.

Solicitor: Mr. John Josslyn for the Respondents.

Where the Court of execution allowed the reversioner to make a deposit under that section, he exercised a jurisdiction not vested in him by law or was acting in the exercise of his jurisdiction illegally or with material irregularity within the meaning of sec. 115 of the Civil Procedure Code.

This was a Rule granted on the 1st March 1921 against an order of the Munsif of Contai (Babu Bishnupada Roy), dated the 7th October 1920, an appeal from which order was dismissed by the District Judge of Midnapur (M. Yusuf, Esq.), on the 17th November 1920 as incompetent.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

Babu Sitaram Banerjee for the Petitioners.

Babu Apurba K. Mukherjee for the Opposite Party.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

SANDERSON, C. J.—This is a Rule which was granted by my learned brothers Mr. Justice Chatterjea, and Mr. Justice Suhrawardy, calling upon the Opposite Party to show cause why the order complained of should not be set aside. The order complained of is an order of the learned Munsif sitting at Contai, and the matter arose in this way : The Petitioners in this Court, at whose instance the rule was granted, are the landlords. They obtained a decree against a purdanashin widow for arrears of rent, and an execution case was instituted for the purpose of putting the property up to sale. The Opposite Parties are admittedly the reversioners, and they applied to the learned Munsif to be allowed to deposit the decretal amount under sec. 170 sub-sec. (3) of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The learned Munsif allowed the application and there was an appeal to the learned District Judge who held that the appeal did not lie. The learned Vakil, who supported this Rule, agreed that there was no right of appeal to the learned District Judge. By reason of the appeal proceedings, considerable delay took place in making the application for this Rule : but that matter was taken into consideration by the learned Judges who granted this Rule, and, in my judgment it is not necessary for us to deal further with that part of the case. The learned Vakil's argument was based upon the words of sec. 170 (3). His argument was that inasmuch as sec. 170 (3) provided that "the judgment-debtor or any person having in the tenure or holding any interest voidable on the sale, may pay money into Court under this section" the Opposite Parties, who are merely holders of a reversionary interest in the property, were not persons entitled to make the deposit.

The whole question depends upon whether the reversioners can be said to be persons having an interest in the tenure or holding voidable on the sale. In my judgment those words must mean an interest, which is in existence at the time of the sale and which will become liable to be avoided on the sale taking place at the option of some one. The question is whether the interest of the reversioners is such an interest. In my judgment it is not. Assuming, for the sake of argument that the reversionary interest would be an existing interest at the time of the sale, when it took place, in my judgment it could not be said to be an interest which would become liable to be avoided on the sale taking place : consequently in my judgment the reversioners have not within the meaning of the words of the section an interest in the tenure or holding voidable on the sale.

MOHENDRA NATH NANDA v. BAIDYA NATH TRIPATHI.

It was argued by the learned Vakil who showed cause against the Rule that we should not make this Rule absolute, because this was not a case which would entitle the Court to exercise the powers of revision conferred upon the Court by sec. 115 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The learned Munsif by his judgment held that the reversionary heirs were persons, who were entitled to deposit the money, within the meaning of sec. 170 (3) of the Bengal Tenancy Act. In my judgment, as I have already said, the reversioners were not persons who were entitled to pay money into Court under that sub-section. Consequently the learned Munsif in allowing the reversioners to deposit the decretal amount, was exercising a jurisdiction not vested in him by law, or he was acting in the exercise of his jurisdiction illegally or with material irregularity. Consequently the provisions of sec. 115 of the Code of Civil Procedure apply to this case. In my judgment therefore this Rule must be made absolute.

The objection, which the Petitioners took may or may not be a purely technical one. I do not know whether the reversioners in applying to make the deposit were acting entirely in their own interest or whether they were acting partly in their own interest and partly in the interest of the widow. I mention this, because it was admitted by the learned Vakil who appeared in support of the Rule, that even now it is not too late for the widow, who is the judgment-debtor and who clearly comes within sec. 170 (3), to pay the money into Court in accordance with the provisions of that sub-section, if she can provide the money out of her own pocket or if she can induce the reversioners or other persons to advance the money to her.

For the above mentioned reasons in my judgment this Rule should be made absolute. Having regard to the facts of the case, we do not make any order as to costs.

CHOTZNER, J.—I agree.

RULE No. 763 OF 1920.

RICHARDSON, J.
21, June.

GHISULAL AGARWALLA, Petitioner,
v.
TODARMULL AGARWALLA,
Opposite Party.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), sec. 73 and Or. 38, r. 5, money deposited by sureties for release of an attachment before judgment, whether can be treated as "assets held by Court"—Rateable distribution of such money among different decree-holders, if allowable—Sec. 115, High Court's power of revision.

In a money-suit certain property belonging to the Defendant was attached before judgment and then released on two persons standing sureties for the amount of the claim. The suit was ultimately decreed and the decree-holder applied for execution, whereupon the sureties deposited the decretal amount in Court. On that very day just before the deposit was made, the Petitioner who also held a money-decree against the same judgment-debtor, applied for execution of his decree and prayed for rateable distribution of the amount deposited. The application was refused by the Trial Court and the money paid out to the attaching creditor on the latter giving an undertaking to refund the amount in case the High Court reversed the order rejecting the Petitioner's application for rateable distribution:

Held—That the amount deposited was subject to rateable distribution under sec. 73, C. P. Code. The natural interpretation of the wide language of the section would include any asset in the possession of the Court and at the disposal of the Court for the purpose of satisfying a decree against a judgment-debtor. There is no reason why it should be restricted to what is paid in by virtue of a process taken in execution. Besides, the assets in the present case though not strictly speaking realised in process of execution were realised by a process in the nature of an anticipatory execution.

HARAI SAHU v. FAZLUR RAHAMAN (1) and SORABJI v. KALA RAGHUNATH (2) referred to.

THIRAVIYAM v. LAKSHMANA (3) discussed.

In cases like these where no appeal is allowed, it has been the practice of the High Court to interfere under the powers conferred by sec. 115, C. P. Code.

This was a Rule granted on the 19th November 1920 against an order of the Munsif of Dhubri (Mr. P. Singh), dated the 18th August 1920, refusing the application for rateable distribution presented by the Petitioner.

The material facts of the case are as follows:—In a money-suit brought by Todarmull Agarwalla and another against Hazarimull Todi, certain property of the latter was attached before judgment and then released on two persons standing sureties for the amount of the claim. A decree was ultimately passed in the suit on the 30th July 1920, and on the 4th August execution was applied for, whereupon the sureties deposited the decretal amount in Court on the 7th August. The Petitioner Ghisulal Agarwalla also had a money decree against the same judgment-debtor, Hazarimull Todi, and applied for execution of his decree on the same date just before the said money was deposited by the sureties. The Petitioner Ghisulal prayed for rateable distribution of the amount under sec. 73, C. P. C., which was refused by the Munsif on the ground that the "assets" contemplated by the section referred to what came to the hands of the Court by virtue of a process taken in execution, and that the present assets not having been realized by a process taken in execution, were not subject to rateable distribution under sec. 73, C. P. C. Against that order the present Rule was granted.

Babu Giriya Prasanna Sanyal for the Petitioner.—The question is whether the money held by the Court answers the description of "assets" within the meaning of sec. 73 of the Civil Procedure Code. That section has undergone a considerable change in the Code of 1908. The provision in the old Code was "Whenever assets are realised by sale or otherwise in execution of a decree" and it has been replaced by a simple phrase "assets held by the Court."

[RICHARDSON, J.—Which is the section that refers to attachment before judgment?]

Or. XXXVIII, r. 5. The Rule requires that the security furnished for resisting an attachment before judgment is to be produced and placed at the disposal of the Court. The Code nowhere limits the discretion of the Court to applying it exclusively to the benefit of the attaching creditor or perhaps because it would be giving a preference as between one creditor and another—a preference that frustrates the policy of law and stultifies the provision in sec. 73. (Reads sec. 73 of the Civil Procedure Code).

The section places all creditors on the same footing provided they satisfy the two conditions of being holders of money decrees and of having applied for execution thereof prior to the receipt of the assets in question. It is not disputed that the said conditions want fulfilment in this case. (Reads sec. 145).

Sec. 145 restricts the liability of the surety to the sum for which he has furnished security.

[RICHARDSON, J.—Is there any decision on the point?]

The case seems to be one of first impression but I do not stand absolutely unsupported by authorities in that the proposition of law I contend for has been endorsed inferentially in certain decisions.

Refers to Harai Sahu v. Fazlur Rahman (1).

It was conceded on both sides and accepted by the Court in its judgment that the term "assets" would include any money held by the Court to the credit of the judgment-debtor. But an exception to this rule was found on the special provision of the law as embodied in Or. XXI, r. 89 on which the current of authorities lay uniformly in one direction.

The decision in Thiraviyam v. Lakshmana (3) raises the very same issue now before your Lordship. (Refers to Mulla, 7th Edn., pp. 198 and 199—Illustration C) and Murugappa v. Palaniyappa (4).

Babu Bhupendra Kumar Ghosh for the Opposite Party.—The money was deposited by the surety with a view to securing the claim of my client and could be applied solely for that purpose. It has not been paid in process of execution and cannot be called assets. Refers to Sorabji v. Kala Raghunath (2).

The money has besides been paid out to my clients.

Babu Giriya Prasanna Sanyal in reply.

The decision in Sorabji v. Kala Raghunath (2) seems to dote upon the corpse of the old law which was given a burial in 1908 and it has been rightly dissented from in Thiraviyam v. Lakshmana (3). The construction put upon the term "assets" is beyond cavil too narrow in view of the language used in sec. 73. . .

My client applied for the retention of the money by the Court pending the decision of this Hon'ble Court. But it was paid out to the Opposite Party on condition of his depositing it upon requisition by the Court.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

This Rule raises a question under s. 73 of the Civil Procedure Code.

On the 7th August 1920, the Petitioner filed an application for the execution of a decree for money which he had obtained against Hazarimull Todi, the Opposite Party No. 3, referred to hereafter as the judgment-debtor.

Meanwhile in another suit brought against the judgment-debtor by the Opposite Parties Nos. 1 and 2, certain property belonging to him had under Or. XXXVIII been attached before judgment and then released on the Petitioner furnishing security for the sum of Rs. 250, representing the amount of the claim in the suit and costs. Two persons stood as sureties for the judgment-debtor for the payment of that amount.

On the 30th July 1920, the Opposite Parties Nos. 1 and 2 obtained a decree. On the 4th August they applied for execution and on the 7th August 1920, the sureties deposited the amount of Rs. 250 in Court.

The Petitioner's application for execution was also made on the 7th August, as I have said the Munsif says that the application was made just before the money was paid in or in other words before the receipt of the assets by the Court.

The question which arises is whether the decree so deposited is "assets held by a Court" within the meaning of sec. 73, and therefore liable to be rateably distributed under that section. The learned Munsif answered this question in the negative and refused the Petitioner's application for rateable distribution. The order was out on the 18th August 1920. On the 28th September 1920 the amount deposited was paid out to the Opposite Parties Nos. 1 and 2 on the condition that they would refund the amount in the event of the order rejecting the Petitioner's application for rateable distribution being reversed by the High Court. The Petitioner obtained this Rule on 19th November 1920 on the re-opening of the Court after the long vacation.

The effect of sec. 73 of the Code has been considered in more than one case. In Harai Sahu v. Fazlur Rahman (1), Stephen and D. Chatterjee, JJ., held that money paid into Court under Or. XXI, r. 89 for the purpose of setting aside a sale in execution could not be rateably distributed inasmuch as the Rule expressly requires the deposit to be made for payment to the purchaser and the decree-holder. The learned Judges, however, took occasion to observe that the scope of sec. 73 was far wider than that of the corresponding provision contained in sec. 295 of the old Code.

The learned Pleader for the Opposite Parties Nos. 1 and 2 has relied on the decision of the Bombay High Court in Sorabji Coovarji v. Kala Raghunath (2), where it was held that property having been attached in execution of a decree, money paid in under Or. XXI, r. 55, for the purpose of removing the attachment by satisfying the decree was not subject to rateable distribution. The learned Judges were of opinion that sec. 73 was only applicable to "assets held in the process of execution."

For the Petitioner reference was made to Thiraviyam v. Lakshmana (3). There judgment-debtor had been authorized under Or. XXI, r. 83 to make a private alienation of property attached in execution of a decree and had paid in the money under that Rule to satisfy the decree. The Court allowed rateable distribution and Sheshagiri Ayyar, J., speaking for himself and Napier, J., said this:—"A significant change has been made in the language of sec. 73 of the present Civil Procedure Code. In the old Code, the words were 'when- ever assets are realised by sale or otherwise in execution of a decree.' In the present Code, the words are 'where assets are held by a Court.' The change was apparently intended to set at rest the question whether the word realization should not be restricted to what is paid in by virtue of process taken in execution, but apparently the legislature has not succeeded in the object. There can be no question that the language of the present Code is wide enough to cover cases where monies are in the hands of the Court by whatever process the same has been realized. It is true that the learned Judges of the Bombay High Court held that even under the new Code, the money to be held by the Court must have reached its hands in execution." The learned Judge then referred to the case of Sorabji v. Kala Raghunath (2) and another case, and continued:—"It is not necessary to express an opinion on this question as we are of opinion that when permission is granted under Or. XXI, r. 83 to raise money by private alienation, the money is paid under a pending execution application."

The Bombay ruling therefore was distinguished rather than dissented from but the view which the Court was disposed to take is sufficiently indicated by the observations which I have quoted and by the further observations which occur later in the judgment. "The policy of the legislature," it was said, "seems to be to bring all monies realized at least in process of execution to the hotchpot to be shared by all the decree-holders. It is analogous to distribution on an insolvency." Then after referring to Or. XXI, r. 72, where sec. 73 is expressly mentioned, the judgment goes on:—"The intention of the legislature is to afford every creditor equal opportunities of obtaining a rateable advantage in the available assets of the judgment-debtor."

These observations encourage me to adopt what I regard as the natural interpretation of the wide language of sec. 73. I see no reason why the words "assets held by a Court" should receive a narrow or limited construction, or—speaking generally and apart from any express provision applicable to a particular case—why the words should not apply to any assets in the possession of the Court and at the disposal of the Court for the purpose of satisfying a decree obtained against a judgment-debtor.

The assets in question in the present case may not strictly speaking have been realized in process of execution, but they were realized by a process in the nature of an anticipatory execution. Or. XXXVIII, r. 7 states in terms that "save as otherwise expressly provided, the attachment (before judgment) shall be made in the manner provided for the attachment of property in execution of a decree." Or. XXXVIII, r. 10 shows that, the legislature did not intend that attachment before judgment should restrict the rights of persons holding decrees against the Defendant.

The result is that, in my opinion, the learned Munsif erred in refusing to allow rateable distribution in respect of the money here in question.

I have considered whether this is a case in which I ought to interfere under sec. 115 of the Code. The rule was obtained on the footing that the learned Munsif declined to exercise a jurisdiction vested in him. The Code confers no right of appeal from the Munsif's order and it has been pointed out at the bar that the practice of this Court has been to deal with cases such as the present under the powers conferred by sec. 115. I am not, therefore, in any way initiating a new practice when I reverse the order of the learned Munsif and substitute therefor an order that the application for rateable distribution should be allowed and the case sent back to the Munsif for the purpose of doing what further may be necessary. It may be that, if the money had been paid out to the Opposite Parties Nos. 1 and 2 without any undertaking on their part to refund it in whole or in part, I should not have interfered. But as they gave the undertaking and as I am told that the property which was attached before judgment is not now available, I have the less hesitation in making the rule absolute in the sense I have indicated.

The parties will bear their own costs.

(2) I. L. R. 42 Cal. 172; s. c. 18 C. W. N. 971 (F. B.) (1914).

NEWBOULD, J.—These two appeals have been heard together as the point on which they both depend is the construction of a clause in a kabuliyat which is common to both the suits. This clause has been translated in the judgment of the learned Additional District Judge of the 24-Perganas against whose decision Appeal No. 2645 of 1919 is preferred as follows :—

“ If at every transfer, in any way, of the lands under this kabuliyat one-fourth of the proper value of the land be not deposited in the office of yourself, your heirs and successors-in-interest, such transfer will not be recognised and to this no sort of plea or objection by any of us will be allowed. If we, the vendor and the vendee both, jointly or each of us separately and our heirs and legal representatives do not pay amicably that amount to you, your heirs and representatives, you will be entitled to take khas possession of the land under this kabuliyat or if you so desire, you can realise the money by suing the transferor or the transferee either jointly or separately.” The tenure in respect of which this kabuliyat was given was sold in execution of a money decree and was purchased by the second Defendant in each of these suits. In his suits in addition to other reliefs the Plaintiff claimed different sums as due as chouth salami under this clause. Both the Courts in each of these suits have held that this clause gives the lessor no right to chouth salami after a sale in execution of a decree.

On behalf of the Appellant two points have been taken. The first is that the words of the kabuliyat are wide enough to cover an involuntary sale; and secondly that the sale in execution of a decree stands on the same footing as a voluntary sale.

As regards the first point, the lower Courts in interpreting the document have given great weight to the Bengali words used for "transferor" and "transferee." These words are বিত্ত and বিত্তী, and it appears that these are the words commonly used in documents of voluntary sales. Each of these suits was heard by different Munsifs and each appeal was heard by different Judges. Three of these four officers are Hindu gentlemen and I am not prepared to hold that they have wrongly interpreted the meaning of the Bengali words in the kabuliyat. Further it has been repeatedly held by this Court that a condition in a lease restraining transfer is not applicable to a case of involuntary transfer unless there are words in the covenant which clearly make it applicable to such a transfer. We therefore hold that so far as the first point of the Appellant's argument is concerned, the lower Courts were right and the words in the kabuliyat are not wide enough to cover an involuntary sale.

As regards the second point, the argument is based on a remark of the learned Chief Justice in the case of Dwarika Nath Roy Choudhury v. Mathura Nath Roy Choudhury (1). But in that case the covenant especially provided for the case of a sale by auction and also what is more important in connection with the point now in consideration, the transfer in that suit was by sale in execution of a mortgage decree. A sale in execution of a mortgage decree stands on a different footing from a sale in execution of a money decree. In the Full Bench case of Dayamayi v. Ananda Mohun Roy Choudhury (2), it has been decided that "a sale is made involuntarily, where it is in execution of a money decree but not of a decree founded on a mortgage or charge voluntarily made." Other authorities might be cited, if necessary, in support of the same view. Here the transfer was in execution of a money decree, and it cannot be treated as on the same footing as a voluntary sale.

We therefore hold that the lower Courts were right and dismiss both these appeals with costs.

No. P. R. 559/20, now pending against the Petitioner in the Court of the 4th Presidency Magistrate of Calcutta, may be quashed.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

The petition of complaint was as follows :—

The complainant was the manager of the firm of Sulaman Daud Mahamed, carrying on business as general merchants on a big scale at 6, Amratala Street, Calcutta and also at Colombo.

About five months ago, the accused entered into an agreement to serve in the complainant's firm for a period of one year and after he took up service in the complainant's firm, the complainant sent him to Singapore, his duties being to carry out orders of the complainant, by sending to different places goods he would purchase with money sent by the complainant and to render accounts to the complainant at Calcutta for all monies he would receive.

The complainant alleged that between the 1st February 1920 and 19th April 1920, the accused drew money from the complainant's firm to the extent of Rs. 80,000, besides taking ghee worth Rs. 2,536 annas 13 for sale but he accounted for Rs. 67,621 only by sending goods to Colombo twice, once of the value of Rs. 35,889, and again of the value of Rs. 24,500, and by sending goods to Calcutta once of the value of Rs. 7,232.

Upon these allegations the accused was charged with committing criminal breach of trust in respect of cash Rs. 12,379 and ghee of the value of Rs. 2,536-13.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

In this case the allegations made in the complaint against the accused-Petitioner are that while the accused was in the service of the complainant's firm at Singapore he committed criminal breach of trust in respect of a sum of Rs. 12,379 and goods to the value of Rs. 2,386-13. The complaint was made to the Presidency Magistrate of the Northern Division on the 17th of June and the accused obtained the present rule on the 10th of January 1921. His contention is that on the allegations made by the prosecution the offence complained of, if any, was committed and completed in Singapore and that the Courts in Calcutta have no jurisdiction to try the case. In support of this contention reliance is placed on the provisions of sec. 181 (2) of the Code of Criminal Procedure and the decision of this Court in Simhachalam v. Emperor (1).

But here the further case of the prosecution was that for all monies received the accused was to account at Calcutta. Thus the decision directly in point is that in Colville v. Kristo Kishore (2). Following that decision we must hold that on the allegations made the Courts in Calcutta have jurisdiction.

We therefore discharge this rule.

[CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION.]

APPEAL FROM ORIGINAL DECREE

No. 195 OF 1919.

SATISH CHANDRA GHOSE, Defendant,
Appellant,
v.
KALIDAS DASI,
Plaintiff, Respondent.

MOOKERJEE, J.
BUCKLAND, J.
15, July.

Pardanashin lady, suit for cancellation of document executed by—Rules by which Court should be guided to determine validity of document—Rule that case of fraud must depend strictly on proof of fraud alleged, how far applicable to action brought by pardanashin lady.

The Plaintiff, a pardanashin lady, sought to have a deed of partition executed by her in favour of her husband's brother immediately after her husband's death cancelled:

Held—That it is well settled that the Court when called upon to deal with a deed executed by a pardanashin lady must satisfy itself upon the evidence first that the deed was actually executed by her or by some person duly authorised by her with a full understanding of what she was about to do; secondly that she had full knowledge of the nature and effect of the transaction into which she is said to have entered; and thirdly that she had independent and disinterested advice in the matter.

In cases where the person who seeks to hold the lady to the terms of her deed is one who stood towards her in a fiduciary character or in some relation of personal confidence, the Court will act with great caution and will presume confidence put and influence exerted and in cases where the person who seeks to enforce the deed was an absolute stranger and dealt with her at arm's length, the Court will require the confidence and influence to be proved intrinsically.

In the former class of cases, the principle formulated in sec. 111 of the Indian Evidence Act applies, viz., that where there is a question as to the good faith of a transaction between parties one of whom stands to the other in a position of active confidence the burden of proving the good faith of the transaction is on the party who is in a position of active confidence. It is an elementary principle that whenever any person derives a benefit under a deed, if any confidential or fiduciary relation subsists between the parties, the Courts so far presume against the validity of the instrument as to require some proof, varying in amount according to circumstances, of the absence of anything approaching to imposition, over-reaching, undue influence or unconscionable advantage.

Independent and competent advice which it is necessary that a pardanashin lady should have does not mean independent and competent approval; it simply means that the advice shall be removed entirely from the suspected atmosphere and that from the clear language of an independent mind free from taint of interest the party acting should know precisely the nature and consequences of the transaction.

The fairness of the bargain is the crucial test, and the Court must have regard to the intellectual attainments of the lady concerned and will naturally be disinclined to set aside the deed where she is proved to have been of business habits, to have been literate, and to have possessed a capacity to judge for herself.

That in the present case the Defendant in whose favour the document was executed stood towards the Plaintiff in a relation of personal confidence and the document was executed under circumstances which according to the rules applicable to the execution of documents by pardanashin ladies rendered it liable to be cancelled.

Every variance between pleading and proof is not fatal. The Court must carefully consider whether the objection is one of form or of substance.

Per BUCKLAND, J.—The rule that a case of fraud can succeed only on proof of the fraud specified in the plaint may be applicable in cases between man and man but where a pardanashin lady is involved other and equally well known rules have to be applied and conformity with them has to be established.

That a pardanashin lady must have independent legal advice is not necessary as an inflexible rule. But, excluding such rare cases where the experience and attainments of the lady or the circumstances of the case render such advice superfluous, a pardanashin lady must have advice, the adviser should have no adverse interest and should be such a person as is capable of explaining to her fully her rights in general and in particular under the document which she intends to sign, if necessary contrasting them with her rights should the intended document not be executed by her; if the circumstances are such that unless he has a knowledge of law he is not competent to advise her, then and in that case independent legal advice is essential.

This was an appeal against the decree of Babu Shyama Charan Ukil Banerjee, Subordinate Judge of Zillah Hooghly at Howrah, dated the 15th of July 1919.

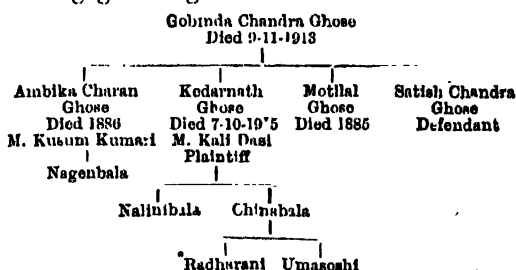

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

Mr. T. C. P. Gibbons, Advocate-General, Babu Jogendra Nath Mukherjee, Dr. Sarat Chandra Basak and Babu Parash Nath Mookerjee for the Appellant.

Dr. Dwarka Nath Mitter and Babus Manindra Nath Banerjee, Narendra Krishna Bose and Rama Prosad Mookerjee for the Respondent.

MOOKERJEE, J.—The subject-matter of the litigation which has culminated in the present appeal is an estate of considerable value left by one Kedarnath Ghose who died intestate on the 7th October 1915. The foundation of the fortune of the family was laid by his father Govinda Chandra Ghose who executed a Will on the 21st August 1905 which was registered, but was not probated after his death on the 9th November 1913. The relationship of the members of the joint family composed of the descendants of Govinda Chandra Ghose will appear from the following genealogical table:—

Govinda Chandra Ghose had four sons, Ambika Charan and Matilal, who died in his life-time, and Kedarnath and Satish Chandra who survived him. When Kedarnath died, he left him surviving his brother, Satish Chandra, his widow Kalidasi, his widowed daughters Nalinibala and Chinabala, and two grand-daughters, Radharani and Umasoshi. The widow Kalidasi had two brothers, Kamini and Raj Kumar, and was the daughter of a family of Deotis whose genealogical table is set out below:—

Shortly after the death of Kedarnath Ghose, a partition deed was executed on the 4th November 1915 between his brother Satish Chandra and his widow

SATISH CHANDRA GHOSE v. KALIDASI DAS.

Kalidasi, and the document was registered on the 8th December 1915. On the 28th June 1916, the widow instituted the present suit for cancellation of the partition deed on the ground of fraud and unfairness, for declaration of exclusive title to a hardware business, its assets and the properties acquired from its income, for declaration of joint title to other properties, for partition and accounts, and for incidental reliefs. The Defendant denied all the material allegations in the plaint, repelled the imputation that the partition deed had not been fairly obtained, asserted that the properties claimed as exclusively owned by the husband of the Plaintiff really formed part of the joint family estate, and repudiated all liability to render accounts. On these pleadings, the following issues were framed and set down for trial :—

1. Has the Plaintiff any cause of action?

2. Can the suit proceed without ad valorem court-fees being paid on the value of the entire properties in suit?

3. Is the suit bad for non-joinder of parties?

4. Was the deed dated the 4th November 1915 read over and explained to the Plaintiff and was it understood by her? Was it executed by her with free will and consent? Or was it obtained from her by fraud as alleged in the plaint?

5. Was Kedarnath Ghose the sole owner of the Karbar at 78, Clive Street, Calcutta? Or, did it belong to his father Govinda Chandra Ghose, and was it inherited, on his death, by his two sons Kedar and Satish? Was it their joint property?

6. Was the house at Benares the joint property to Kedar and Satish? What is the Plaintiff's share in it?

7. Did the Plaintiff's husband purchase the garden at North Bantra from the widow of Bellilios in benami of the Defendant?

8. Is the suit barred by the principles of estoppel, acquiescence and waiver?

9. Was the manufactory at Bantra an independent Karbar? Or, did it form one karbar with the karbar at 78, Clive Street?

10. Is the Defendant liable to render accounts of the karbar at Bantra and of the karbar at 78, Clive Street, if so, for what period?

After a protracted trial, the Subordinate Judge decreed the suit in part. He held on the fourth and eighth issues that the deed had been executed by the Plaintiff under circumstances which made it inoperative against her as an illiterate pardanashin lady, and that there was no question of estoppel, acquiescence or waiver. He also held, upon the fifth, sixth, seventh and ninth issues that the hardware business at 78, Clive Street which stood in the name of Kedarnath Ghose was an ancestral joint family concern, that the smithy and manufactory in the family dwelling-house at South Bantra in the District of Howrah was not an independent business, that the lands and houses in Calcutta and Benares had been acquired with joint funds and formed part of the family estate, and that the garden at North Bantra purchased from Bellilios must be included in the same category. He further held, on the tenth issue, that the Defendant who was in charge of the business at 78, Clive Street, and at South Bantra was bound to render accounts from the date of the death of Kedarnath Ghose. On these findings, the Subordinate Judge has set aside the partition deed, declared that all the properties in suit were jointly owned and possessed in equal shares by Kedarnath Ghose and Satish Chandra Ghose, and directed partition and accounts; he has also ordered the parties to bear their respective costs. Neither the Plaintiff nor the Defendant is satisfied with this decision, as the latter has appealed and the former has preferred a memorandum of cross-objections. The substantial question argued on the appeal relates to the validity of the partition deed; the principal point raised in the memorandum of cross-objections refers to the true character of the properties claimed by the Plaintiff as the separate acquisitions of her husband. Neither the memorandum of appeal nor the memorandum of cross-objections bore adequate court-fees, and the Court was called upon to decide the point during the course of the arguments. Each memorandum bore a court-fee of Rs. 10 only; this was plainly inadequate. The Defendant-Appellant had obviously anticipated the objection and had made a note on his memorandum at the time of presentation to the following effect. "The suit was valued at Rs. 1,21,360. The appeal is for a declaration." This note must have been recorded in view of cl. 17 (iii) of Sch. II of the Court Fees Act, 1870, which provides that the plaint or memorandum of appeal in a suit to obtain a declaratory decree where no consequential relief is prayed must bear a court-fee of Rs. 10. But the plaint in the present case was unquestionably not a plaint in a suit of this description and bore a court-fee of Rs. 1,187-8. The memorandum of appeal also could not be treated as a memorandum in a suit of that nature; indeed, the appeal itself was not in essence for a pure declaration. The trial Court had cancelled the partition deed, had determined the question of title to the properties, had directed partition of all the properties in suit, and had rendered the Defendant liable for accounts. An appeal directed against a decree so comprehensive in scope, can, by no stretch of language or recourse to legal fiction, be described as an appeal for a declaration, even if we were to assume that an appeal, which really seeks nothing beyond a declaration, in a suit other than a suit for a pure declaratory decree without consequential relief, was ever intended to be included within cl. 17 (iii) of Sch. II of the Court Fees Act, 1870. Similar remarks were applicable to the memorandum of cross-objections. The Appellant and Respondent were consequently called upon to value the reliefs sought in the appeal and by way of cross-objections respectively. It is not necessary to set out the details of the calculations made for the purpose of valuation; suffice to state that, as a result of this investigation, it was found that the Appellant and Respondent were liable to pay Rs. 1,105 and Rs. 825 respectively, as deficit court-fees on the memorandum of appeal and the memorandum of cross-objections. It was also found that the fee paid ad valorem on the plaint in the Court below was insufficient and that an additional sum of Rs. 155 was leviable on that account from the Plaintiff-Respondent. The Appellant duly paid the deficit court-fee and thus regularised the memorandum of appeal. The Plaintiff-Respondent paid the additional sum leviable on the plaint, but not the deficit court-fees required to validate the memorandum of cross-objections. There is, consequently, no valid cross-objection which may be considered by the Court, and the memorandum must be rejected. The arguments on both sides have thus centered round what is the root-question in this case, namely, the validity of the partition deed taken by the Appellant from the Respondent. Before, however, we investigate the circumstances which led up to the execution of the deed we may usefully recall the well-established cardinal principles now recognised as applicable to a case of this description where the Court is called upon to throw a protective cloak upon a pardanashin woman who is unable to protect herself.

It is well-settled that the Court, when called upon to deal with a deed executed by a pardanashin lady, must satisfy itself upon the evidence, first, that the deed was actually executed by her or by some person duly authorised by her, with a full understanding of what she was about to do; secondly, that she had full knowledge of the nature and effect of the transaction into which she is said to have entered; and, thirdly, that she had independent and disinterested advice in the matter. The leading judicial decisions which recognise these principles are collected in the judgment of this Court in Mariam Bibi v. Ibrahim (1), and on examination they will be found to fall broadly into two groups, namely, first, cases where the person who seeks to hold the lady to the terms of her deed is one who stood towards her in a fiduciary character or in some relation of personal confidence; and, secondly, cases where the person who seeks to enforce the deed was an absolute stranger and dealt with her at arm's length. In the former class of cases, the Court will act with great caution and will presume confidence put and influence exerted; in the latter class of cases, the Court will require the confidence and influence to be proved intrinsically. This is a fundamental distinction which does not appear to have been always kept in view, with the result that observations made in the one class of cases have been applied without scrutiny to the other class of cases. Illustrations of the conclusion which has resulted from this failure to discriminate between the two classes of cases, are furnished by the decisions in Rani Usmat Koowa v. Tayler

SATISH CHANDRA GHOSE v. KALIDASI DAS.

v. Bhuggobutty (27). In the former case, where the transaction was between a husband and a wife, their Lordships observed that the burden of proving the reality and bona fides of the purchases pleaded by her husband was properly thrown on him. In the latter case, which was one of a death-bed gift in favour of the donor's brothers in their wives' names to the exclusion of her husband's adopted son, their Lordships pointed out that the Judicial Committee and the Courts in India had always been careful to see that deeds taken from parda women had been fairly taken and that the party executing them had been a free agent and duly informed of what she was about. The substance of the matter then is that the fairness of the bargain is the crucial test. This principle runs through the later decisions of the Judicial Committee, though the rule is more specially enforced in cases where a fiduciary relation involving trust and confidence is shown to exist; *Fuzzul Hossein v. The principle thus enunciated was adopted as the basis of the judgment pronounced by Sir John Edge in Matilal Das v. Eastern mortgage and

Agency Company (48). It will be observed that the Court must thus have regard to the intellectual attainments of the lady concerned and will naturally be disinclined to set aside the deed where she is proved to have been of business habits, to have been literate and to have possessed a capacity to judge for herself; *Sunitibala v. The case before us belongs to the first class mentioned above, where the person who seeks to hold the lady to the terms of her deed is one who stands towards her in a relation of personal confidence. Here, he is the younger brother of her husband; the two brothers had lived jointly in amity, and Kalidasi who was some years older than Satish, was on the best of terms with her brother-in-law. On the death of her husband, Satish though younger in age, became ipso facto the head of the joint family; she would thenceforth have to live under his care, look upon him as his natural protector and continue to repose confidence in him properly to safe-guard her rights. This position is in absolute conformity with the normal structure of a joint Hindu family and is recognised by ancient texts of Hindu law, such as the text of Nārada XIII, pp. 28, 29 cited by Jimutavahana in his Dayabhaga Chap. XI, sec. 1, para. 64 which provides that when the husband is deceased, his kin is the guardian of his childless widow, and it is only when the husband's family becomes extinct or contains no male or is helpless, that the kins of her own father are entitled to be her guardians. This is not archaic and obsolete law, but has been recognised in modern decisions; Khudiram v. Banawari (52). In such circumstances, the principle formulated in sec. 111 of the Indian Evidence Act applies, viz., that where there is a question as to the good faith of a transaction between parties, one of whom stands to the other in a position of active confidence, the burden of proving the good faith of the transaction is on the party who is in a position of active confidence. It is an elementary principle that whenever any person derives a benefit under a deed, if any confidential or fiduciary relation subsists between the parties, the Courts so far presume against the validity of the instrument as to require some proof, varying in amount according to circumstances, of the absence of anything approaching to imposition, over-reaching, undue influence, or unconscionable advantage (Story on Equity Jurisprudence, secs. 308-323; referred to in Taylor on Evidence, sec. 151). As Story puts it, Courts of Equity do not arrest or set aside an act or contract merely because a man of more honour would not have entered into it; there must be some relation between the parties which compels the one to make a full discovery to the other or to abstain from all selfish projects. But when such a relation does exist, Courts of Equity, acting upon this superinduced ground, in aid of general morals, will not suffer one party, standing in a situation of which he can avail himself against the other, to derive advantage from that circumstance, for it is founded in a breach of confidence. The general principle which governs in all cases of this sort is that if a confidence is reposed and that confidence is abused, Courts of Equity will grant relief. Equity demands in such circumstances the most abundant good faith (uberrima fides) in the transaction between the parties. There need not necessarily be misrepresentation by one party to the other to invalidate the deed; if there is any concealment of material fact, any failure to disclose material information or any just suspicion of artifice, equity will interpose and pronounce the transaction void and as far as possible restore the parties to their original rights; Baker v. Bradley (53), Bank of Montreal v. Stuart (54) and In re Coomber (55). We must not lose sight, however, of the fact that the question is one of substance and not merely one of burden of proof, and where, as in the present case, evidence has been adduced by both the contestants in support of their respective cases and the relevant facts are before the Court, the question of burden of proof is immaterial, and importance should not be attached to the question on whom the initial onus lay; see the observations of Viscount Haldane in Kundunlal v. Begumun-nessa (56) and of Sir Lawrence Jenkins, in Sethu Ratnam v. Venkatachela Gouden (57). We must now determine, how the case before us stands when tested in the light of these principles.

Kedarnath Ghose, as previously stated, died on the 7th October 1915. The partition deed now in controversy was executed on the 4th November 1915, that is, as the Subordinate Judge points out, twenty seven days after the death of Kedarnath Ghose and three days before his Sradh ceremony had been performed, but the deed was based on a draft which had been prepared ten days earlier, on the 25th October, when the parties were about the middle of the period of mourning. The provisions of the partition deed have been correctly summarised by the Subordinate Judge. The document recites that the hardware business at 78, Clive Street as well as the house at Benares belong jointly to Kedarnath and Satish Chandra in equal shares and that the widow gave up her claim to those properties as also to the remainder of the joint estate in consideration of the benefits granted to her, which may be enumerated as follows: (a) Kalidasi would become absolute owner of the house at Benares as also the house at Howrah; No. 8, Kali Prosad Chakravatty Lane; (b) that Satish would pay to Kalidasi Rs. 20,000 by annual instalments of Rs. 2,000 each, the entire sum to be charged on the ancestral dwelling-house at 3 and 4, Kali Prosad Chakravartty Lane; (c) that Satish would pay, within three months from the date of execution of the deed, Rs. 2,000 to Nalinibala and Rs. 4,000 to Chinabala; (d) that Satish would pay Rs. 2,500 on the occasion of the marriage of each of the two daughters of Chinabala, named Radharani and Umashoshi; and (e) that Satish would maintain Kalidasi, her two daughters, and the two grand-daughters, in the family dwelling-house, and if Kalidasi should live apart, Satish would pay her Rs. 10 per month for her maintenance and after her death Rs. 10 per month for the maintenance of her two daughters, Nalinibala and Chinabala. The deed recites, on the face of it, that this distribution of the family estate gave effect to the intentions of Kedarnath Ghose as expressed immediately before his death. The case for the Plaintiff is that this allegation, which goes to the root of the entire transaction, is unfounded. It is, consequently, necessary to investigate the incidents which actually happened before the death of Kedarnath Ghose. The evidence makes it abundantly clear that Kedarnath Ghose did intend to make a testamentary disposition of his properties during his last illness. He gave instructions for the preparation of a draft Will, which was drawn up by one Aghorenath Maiti. A fair copy was then made by one Akhsoy Kumar Ghose. The intended Will was, however, never executed; for when the document was taken to Kedarnath Ghose for signature, it was found that he had lost consciousness. He never regained consciousness and the end came immediately afterwards. While he was on his death-bed, thus lying unconscious a discussion took place among the persons present as to what steps might be taken to carry out the projected disposition of the estate. One Badal Chandra Ghose, a pleader, suggested that after the death of Kedarnath Ghose a deed of family arrangement might be executed between Satish Chandra Ghose and Kalidasi, and forthwith prepared a draft for such a deed. No further steps appear to have been taken for some days after the death of Kedarnath Ghose, but on the 25th October 1915 the draft of a partition deed was drawn up by one Nilmoni Bose and was executed as well by Kalidasi as by Satish Chandra Ghose. On the basis of this draft, a fair copy was subsequently prepared, and the partition deed in its final form, which is the subject matter of this litigation, was executed on the 4th November 1915. It may be stated here that as Kalidasi was illiterate, her name was, at the request of Satish, signed on the draft as well as on the final deed by her daughter Chinabala who, as the evidence shows, is a half-crazy girl and herself writes Bengali very imperfectly, as may be seen from an inspection of the original signatures on the record. The draft of the intended Will made by Aghorenath Maiti, the draft of the partition deed made by Nilmoni Bose, and the partition deed as executed and registered, have been produced; but the fair copy of the intended Will and the draft of the deed of family arrangement prepared by Badal Chandra Ghose have not been produced; there can be little doubt, as will presently be seen, that they have been designedly withheld by the Defendant, because they would have materially weakened his case. The draft of the Will is full of alterations and interlineations; these were not indicated in the paper-book placed before the Court, and the hearing had to be adjourned, so that the Court might be supplied with a fresh translation of the deed, indicating the draft in its original form as also the various alterations and interlineations. As inspection of the draft in this form makes manifest the vital changes introduced into the deed. This inevitably raises the question, whether the draft in its original form or the draft as altered corresponded to the actual instructions given by Kedarnath Ghose. The Subordinate Judge has held that the draft in its original form contained the instructions given by Kedarnath Ghose before his death, and that the changes introduced into the draft did not form part of those instructions. I feel no doubt that the view taken by the Subordinate Judge is correct. It is needless to determine, how far the instructions given by Kedarnath Ghose were voluntary, or how far, in the precarious state of his health, he acted under the influence of his brother. The fact remains that to some at any rate of the persons present, the terms seemed ungenerous, and one of them Asutosh Banerjee, pressed for liberal treatment of his wife and children. Let it be assumed, however, for our present purpose, that the instructions were voluntarily given; these were correctly represented by the contents of the draft as drawn up by Aghore Nath Maiti. The changes in the draft were, in my opinion, no part of the instructions; indeed, it has not been definitely disclosed by the Defendant when and by whom the changes were made. It was rather doubtfully suggested that they were in the handwriting of Asutosh Banerjee, who was present in Court at one stage but was not examined. If, now, we compare the draft Will in its original form, as representing the last wishes of Kedarnath Ghose, with the partition deed in its final form, which purports to give effect to those intentions, what is the result? In original draft Will, we find that Rs. 20,000 was to be paid to Kalidasi, in one instalment; in the partition deed, we find that the payment was to be spread over ten years; this accords with the interlineation. Again, according to the original draft Will, Kalidasi was to take an absolute right in the two houses at Benares and Howrah; by the partition deed, a life estate is conferred on Kalidasi and her two daughters; this also accords with the interlineation. There is another significant alteration which cannot be overlooked; wherever in the draft Will, the singular word amar (my) occurred, it has been altered into the plural amader (our). In my opinion, there is ample indication that the draft Will was so altered, after the death of Kedarnath Ghose, that it might serve as a draft for a partition deed to be executed by two persons, namely, Kalidasi and Satish Chandra Ghose. This also explains why the fair copy of the Will made by Akshoy Kumar Ghose and the draft deed of family arrangement made in accordance therewith by the pleader Badal Chandra Ghose, have both been withheld; those two documents were in agreement with the draft Will in its original form, and if they had been produced, they would have completely demolished the theory that the draft Will with alterations represented the last intentions of Kedarnath Ghose. This fits in further with the significant circumstance, emphasised by the Subordinate Judge, that the intended Will of Kedarnath Ghose was never shown to the Plaintiff. We may also observe that the partition deed in its final form departs, in at least one particular, from its draft which also contains alterations and interlineations, namely, that the maintenance for Kalidasi and her two daughters at Rs. 20 per month is reduced to Rs. 10 for herself and nothing for her daughters until her death. There is no explanation on whose authority, the alterations in the draft deed of partition was made by Nilmoni Bose who has not been examined on the plea of absence at Waltair. In my view, there is no escape from the conclusion that the partition deed, as executed, departs in very material particulars from the true intentions of Kedarnath Ghose as expressed shortly before his death, and that as the assent of Kalidasi thereto was secured on the untrue representation that its provisions carried out the last wishes of her husband, the deed was in essence obtained from her by false pretences and must on this ground alone be set aside. But there are other grounds, equally weighty, which destroy the operative character of the deed.

The schedule to the partition deed sets out the values of the properties. The Subordinate Judge has held it conclusively proved, by local investigation and the other evidence adduced in the case, that the properties reserved for Satish were grossly undervalued, while the two houses given to the Plaintiff were overvalued. This conclusion of the Subordinate Judge is amply sustained by the evidence and he is undoubtedly right in his view that the properties taken by Satish are the cream of the estate while those assigned to the Plaintiff are the worst of all. It is further important to note that inasmuch as Satish takes under the deed the entire joint estate, with the exception of what is expressly given to Kalidasi, it is an obviously damaging circumstance that some valuable properties are not mentioned at all in this deed of partition. Upon the question of undervaluation, the most flagrant instance is the value of the stock-in-trade of the hardware business and the workshop appurtenant thereto, which is stated in the schedule to the deed to be only Rs. 31,000, but is now shown to be at least Rs. 60,442. Another instance, equally striking, is that of premises Nos. 10 and 12, Raja Woodmunt Street, and

No. 72-2, Clive Street, which are described as worth Rs. 1,001 only; this ignores what was well known to Satish, namely, that the price had been fixed at Rs. 20,000 and that Kedar had paid Rs. 15,000 in part payment to the vendor to satisfy a mortgage on the property. A third instance, in no way less impressive, is that of the ancestral dwelling-house, which was valued Rs. 21,000 but has now been found to be worth Rs. 35,746. It is significant that all these instances of under-valuation relate to properties taken by Satish; on the other hand, the value of what has been assigned to Kalidasi has been demonstrated to be in fact much less than the estimated amount. As an instance of total omission, mention may be made of an incident which is by no means creditable to Satish. It appears, that after the death of Kedar, he signed the name of Kedar and on the 18th October 1915, withdrew from the National Bank of India, a sum of Rs. 11,200 which stood in the name of Kedar, and deposited the sum in his own name in the Mercantile Bank of India. No mention was made of this amount in the partition deed. In the face of these circumstances it is impossible to hold that the Defendant observed that "utmost degree" of good faith which his sister-in-law was entitled to expect from him in his dealings with her, on well-recognised equitable principles. This by itself would manifestly justify the cancellation of the deed.

But it has been strenuously argued by the Defendant that the lady had the benefit of independent advice and cannot consequently impeach the transaction. In my opinion, there is no solid foundation for this contention. There is no satisfactory evidence to show that Raj Kumar Deoti, the brother of Kalidasi, did in fact advise her in this matter, or was able and willing to give her the requisite assistance.

11th July 1917.—Order for grant of certificate to Satish in respect of G. P. Notes set aside on appeal.

It is by no means clear from the evidence on the record that Kalidasi acted under the advice of her brother. Raj Kumar was one of the executors named in the Will intended to be executed by Kedarnath Ghose. He was no doubt aware of the terms of the Will, and it is improbable that he should have been a party to variations therefrom to the prejudice of his sister. This is confirmed by the significant fact that as early as 23rd January 1916, Raj Kumar took a certified copy of the partition deed from the Registration Office, evidently with a view to take steps to secure to his sister her full rights in the estate left by her husband. It is further remarkable, if Raj Kumar was really present throughout and advised his sister, that he should not have read over the deed and explained it to her, become an attesting witness thereto, or even identified her before the Registering Officer. Nor can we overlook the fact that Kamini Kumar, the eldest brother of Kalidasi and Raj Kumar, is conspicuous by his absence from the scene. It has moreover been suggested on behalf of the Plaintiff that Rajkumar was perhaps more anxious to improve his own prospects than to safeguard the interests of his sister. There is no direct evidence to prove this hypothesis; though it must be conceded that the circumstance that Rajkumar was able to borrow Rs. 3,000 from Satish shortly afterwards, is calculated to excite suspicion. On the other hand, it has been suggested on behalf of the Defendant that the present suit has been engineered by Raj Kumar to wreak his vengeance on Satish who had enforced his claim for recovery of the loan. This theory is not improbable; but even if true, it does not justify the inference that Kalidasi has made an unfounded claim against Satish, who might perhaps have postponed the evil day for a while, if he had been diplomatic enough to keep Raj Kumar under obligation for a longer period. I am not unmindful that as observed by Fletcher Moulton, L. J., in In re Coober (55), independent and competent advice does not mean independent and competent approval; it simply means that the advice shall be removed entirely from the suspected atmosphere and that from the clear language of an independent mind, free from taint of interest, the party acting should know precisely the nature and consequences of the transaction. I see no reason to doubt the correctness of the conclusion of the Subordinate Judge that Kalidasi had not the benefit of such independent advice from Raj Kumar or any other person. It is, I think, also clear that even if Raj Kumar be assumed to have been entirely beyond the sphere of influence of Satish, he was really not able to give the requisite advice. To secure a fair transaction, a full appreciation by the lady of the value and nature of her rights was essential. No doubt, as pointed out by Lord Buckmaster in Sunitibala v. Dhara Sundari (47), it is not necessary to insist in such cases upon a test which depends upon a clear understanding of each detail of a matter which may be greatly involved in legal technicalities; it is sufficient that the general result of the compromise should be understood and that people disinterested and competent to give advice should, with a fair understanding of the whole matter, advise the lady that the deed should be executed. Tested from this point of view, the evidence does not show that Raj Kumar himself was fully acquainted with the facts, duly appreciated the effect of the transaction and was able to advise his sister. To mention one aspect only; the deed as executed might well raise the point whether the transaction was a device for division of the estate between a limited owner and a reversioner and whether Satish could validly transfer to Kalidasi, as he did, his reversionary interest in two of the properties, indeed, the question involved was precisely such as required consideration by a lawyer, in view of the recent pronouncements of the Judicial Committee in Khumni Lal v. Gobind Krishna (58), Amrit Narain v. Gaya Singh (59), Rangaswami v. Nachiappa (60) and Sureswar v. Mahesrani (61) and other cases reviewed in Annada Mohan Roy v. Gour Mohan Mullick (62). Although it may be conceded that, as pointed out in Buchi v. Jagapathi (63), the presence of a professional adviser cannot be deemed necessary in every case, the Subordinate Judge has properly commented on the fact that while a pleader was called to witness the execution of the intended Will of Kedar-nath Ghose and two pleaders were called to witness the registration of the partition deed, not a single pleader, not even a competent disinterested person, was called to advise Kalidasi in a matter of such vital moment to her, either at the time when her assent was obtained to the draft partition deed or at the time when the deed was executed. No doubt, as pointed out by Jenkins, C. J., in Keshab v. Radha Raman (14), the absence of advice would not have by itself necessarily vitiated the transaction, if it had been otherwise established to be righteous, that is, such as a right-minded person might be expected to do. All the indications in the present case, however, point to a contrary conclusion; and from this point of view, much weight cannot be attached to the evidence which shows that the draft partition deed was read over and explained to Kalidasi by one Fakirchand Ghose, who himself, as is clear from his testimony, did not fully appreciate the nature and effect of the transaction. On the other hand, there is abundant indication that full advantage was taken by Satish of the deeply distressed condition of his sister-in-law, who had shortly before lost both her sons-in-law, and had hardly recovered from the shock, when she lost her husband. Before the period of mourning was over, her brother-in-law expedited the execution of the deed with what cannot but be characterised as indecent haste. During this period of mourning, arrangements had to be made for the performance of the prescribed ceremonies on a suitable scale. The lady was anxious that the poor of the locality and the adjoining villages should be fed in a proper style. This request, somewhat insistently made, was refused to put pressure upon her and to make her agree to terms which her brother-in-law considered advantageous to himself. This furnishes an illustration of what is felicitously described by Lord Macnaghten in Mahomed Baksh v. Hossaini Bibi (33) as "a subtle form of undue influence." There can be little doubt that Satish himself must have realised that the deed had been taken by him from his sister-in-law under circumstances which made it open to successful attack; this alone affords a plausible explanation of his conduct in the succession certificate cases, where he did not set up the partition deed till a very late stage of the proceedings. But weightier than all these circumstances put together, we have the outstanding fact that Satish, on his own initiative, took steps to prepare, at his expense, a supplemental deed of family settlement to rectify to some extent the unfairness of the partition deed he had taken from his sister-in-law; the attempt, however, came too late. It is difficult to conceive what more convincing proof could have been brought forward to establish the true character of the deed challenged by the Plaintiff.

It has finally been urged on the merits that the partition deed was in essence a deed of family settlement and should consequently be supported, even though there were no rights actually in dispute at the time of making it; in such cases, as was said in Upendranath v. Bindeswari (64) and Mariam Bibi v. Ibrahim (65), the Court should not scan with much nicety the quantum of consideration. The principle invoked may be conceded and is, as pointed out in Helan v. Durgadas (66) and Satya Kumar v. Satyakripal (67), supported not only by the authority of Williams v. Williams (68) and Lucy's case (69), but also by the decision of the Judicial Committee in Gajapati v. Gajapati (70), Mantapa v. Baswant (71), Mewa Kuwar v. Hulas Kuwar (72), Greender v. Trailakshaya (73), Mahomed Imam Ali v. Husain (74) and Khunni Lal v. Govind Krishna (58). But it is equally well-settled that, as James, L. J., puts it in Moxon v. Payne (75), to make a compromise of any value the parties must be at arm's length, on equal terms, with equal knowledge and with sufficient advice and protection; one side must not know more about the matter than the other, unless what he knows could not possibly have affected the other party's decision; Gilbert v. Endean (76) and Maynard v. Eaton (77). This accords with the rule enunciated in Gordon v. Gordon (78), which was repeatedly argued before Lord Eldon, namely, that a family arrangement to be operative must be without fraud; it would not be supported if founded in mistake of either party to which the Opposite Party was an accessory; or, if either party has been misled by the concealment of material things, for the essence of the matter is mutual communication of all relevant circumstances. To the same effect are the decisions in Hoghton v. Hoghton (79), Lawton v. Campion (80) and Bentley v. Mackay (81), which show that a Court of Equity will not permit a family arrangement to bind the parties when the transaction has been unfair and founded upon falsehood or misrepresentation. Tested in the light of these principles, the position of the Defendant is full of insoluble difficulties from which no ingenuity on the part of the most skilful legal adviser can extricate him.

As a last resort, it has been contended, on behalf of the Defendant that no relief should be granted to the Plaintiff in the present suit as framed, inasmuch as the Plaintiff who alleged fraud can succeed only on proof of the fraud, specified in the plaint, and no variation between pleading and proof can be allowed. In support of this position, reference has been made to the following passage from the judgment in Bansiram v. Panchami (82). "Two principles, it is well settled, are applicable in these circumstances. In the first place, as pointed out by the Judicial Committee in Ganga Narain v. Tiluck Ram (83), where reliance was placed upon the observations of Selborne, L. C., in Wallingford v. Mutual Society (84), when a Plaintiff impeaches a transaction on the ground of fraud, the facts which constitute the alleged fraud must be distinctly, specifically and accurately stated; Gilbert v. Lewis (85), for, in the language of Fry, J., in Redgrave v. Hurd (86), it is only fair play between man and man that the Defendant should know what is charged against him. (Clydesdale Bank v. Paton (87) and Lawrence v. Norreys (88). In the second place, a charge of fraud must be substantially proved as laid, and, when one kind of fraud is charged, another kind of fraud cannot, upon failure of proof, be substituted for it [Abdul Hossein v. Turner (89)]. The rule that the Court will grant only such relief as the Plaintiff is entitled to upon the case made by his pleadings, is strictly enforced when the Plaintiff relies upon fraud. Wilds v. Gibson (90) and Hickson v. Lombard (91)." But there is plainly no real substance in the contention in the circumstances of the present litigation. The essence of the case for the Plaintiff is that the Defendant, who was her trusted brother-in-law, took advantage of her helpless situation as an illiterate parda-nashin Hindu widow and obtained her assent to a deed, the true effect whereof was not appreciated by her as she had no competent independent advice. It cannot thus be seriously maintained that there has been an infringement of the rule formulated by Lord Westbury in Eshan Chunder v. Shyama Churn (92), by Sir Barnes Peacock in Mylapore v. Yeckay (93) and by Sir Lawrence Jenkins in Malraju v. Venkatadr (94), that the determination in a cause should be founded upon a case either to be found in the pleadings or involved in or consistent with the case thereby made; nor can it be suggested that there has been any violation of the elementary rule of procedure laid down by Sir Barnes Peacock in Abdul Hossein v. Turner (95) and by Lord Shaw in Bal Gangadhar Tilak v. Srinivas Pandit (96), that a charge of fraud must be substantially proved as laid, so that when one kind of fraud is charged, another kind of fraud cannot, upon failure of proof be substituted for it. We must further bear in mind that every variance between pleading and proof is not fatal: the Court must carefully consider whether, in the words of the Judicial Committee in Radha-Mohan v. Jadumoni (97), the objection is one of form or of substance. The rule that the allegations and the proof must correspond is intended to serve a double purpose, namely, first, to apprise the Defendant distinctly and specifically of the case he is called upon to answer, so that he may properly make his defence and may not be taken by surprise, and, secondly, to preserve an accurate record of the cause of action as a protection against a second proceeding founded upon the same allegations. Tested from these points of view, the objection urged by the Defendant proves to be groundless. There is no room for doubt that the contending parties fully appreciated the real points in issue and have adduced all the material evidence. The fundamental point in controversy was really of a very simple character, namely, what were the circumstances under which the partition deed was executed; Each side had full opportunity to give in minute detail its own version of the incidents, and the Court was called upon to determine the true state of things from the conflicting narratives. There is plainly no question of surprise. But if it were necessary to adhere to matters of form with the strictest accuracy, the plaint could well have been amended to enable the Court to do that substantial justice between the parties for which alone Courts exist; Mahommed Zahoor Ali v. Rutta Koer (98), Sunitibala v. Dhara Sundari (47), Charandas v. Amir Khan (99) and Ma Shwe Mya v. Maung Mo (P. C. decided 25th January 1921). In this connection a well-known passage from the judgment of James, J., in Moxon v. Payne (75) may be usefully re-called. "A great part of the argument which was addressed to us on behalf of the Defendant Payne was that the case alleged against him by the bill was one of gross and premeditated fraud, and that unless the actual fraud as alleged was proved, the bill must fail. It was contended that the Plaintiffs were bound to make out, and had failed to make out, the case alleged in the tenth paragraph of the bill. It is true that when a case is based on fraud, the fraud must be proved, and no relief could be given in this suit on any different ground. But the obtaining of property, or of any benefit, through the undue and unconscientious abuse of influence by a person in whom trust and confidence are placed, has always been treated as a fraud of the gravest character; and if such frauds are alleged and proved, the allegation that they were parts of a scheme very early conceived and deliberately carried out is, whether it be made out or not, of no material consequence in such a suit. It is at most a rhetorical exaggeration, which a person who commits the frauds has no right to complain of. If a man robs his fellow-traveller, and is indicted for so doing, the allegation that he became the companion of his victim with a pre-conceived design to rob him is wholly immaterial. Much the same line of defence was taken in the case of Huguenin v. Baseley (100) and it may be worth while to quote what Lord Eldon said in that case: "I agree, further, that the relief must proceed upon what is alleged and proved by the persons complaining, that their complaints must be treated as effectual or ineffectual according to what they have, not what they could have, represented . . . I have, therefore looked through this bill with reference to the frame of it, and I have no doubt this case might have been more clearly reached if the situation of the parties had enabled them to go through all the difficulties as to amendment; also that many circumstances might have been brought forward on behalf of the Defendants, which I am bound not to look at. But, taking the case as it stands, though there is in this bill much foul allegation which, if not true, ought not to be there and a great deal of which is denied and clearly disproved, there is enough upon the bill and in evidence to shew that this deed cannot stand, if the whole transaction taken together cannot stand."

In my judgment, the Subordinate Judge was unquestionably right in his conclusion that the Defendant obtained the partition deed from the Plaintiff by an untrue representation that its terms were in conformity with the last wishes of her husband, as well as by a concealment of the true extent of the assets of the family business and the value of the family properties; he also took advantage of her distressed condition during the period of mourning immediately after she had lost her husband; she had further no competent independent advice as to the nature, value and extent of her rights in the estate left by the deceased and the true effect of the deed upon her position as his heiress. In these circumstances, she was entitled substantially to the reliefs granted by the decree of the Subordinate Judge.

The result is that the decree of the trial Court must be affirmed and this appeal dismissed with costs. The memorandum of cross-objections is rejected without costs.

BUCKLAND, J.—This appeal is against the judgment and decree in a suit brought by one Srimati Kalidasi Dasi to have it declared that a deed described in the plaint as a partition deed, executed by her on the 4th November 1915 in favour of the Appellant Satish Chandra Ghose, is fraudulent and void and to have it cancelled and for partition of the immoveable property mentioned in the schedule to the plaint and to recover a hardware business in Calcutta to which she alleges she is entitled as widow of her deceased husband. One Gobinda Chundra Ghose who died in November 1913 left two sons—Kedarnath Ghose and Satish Chandra Ghose. The latter is the Appellant. Kedarnath was the husband of the Plaintiff and by her he had two daughters—Chinabala and Nalinibala. The Plaintiff has two brothers called Kamini Kumar and Raj Kumar and this completes the list of the relatives of the parties whose names have been introduced into the case. The learned Subordinate Judge has found that the hardware business was the property of Gobinda Ghose on whose death his two sons inherited it jointly. The Respondent who claimed the whole of this business has abandoned her cross-objections on this point and it is not necessary further to consider the question.

The Respondent's case is that shortly after the death of her husband Kedarnath Ghose which took place on the 7th October 1915, the Appellant came to her and asked her to entrust him with the management of the hardware business. To this she says that she agreed. The deed of the 4th November 1915 was prepared; it was signed by the Respondent by the pen of her daughter Chinabala; no explanation of its terms was given, nor was the deed read over to her. On the 8th December it was registered, again without explanation. After registration the Respondent disclosed the existence of the deed to her brother Raj Kumar who took her to task and said that he would obtain a copy of it and see her about the matter. This Raj Kumar did and told her that Satish had defrauded her of everything. Subsequently on the 28th June 1916 she filed this suit. This is the broad outline of the Respondent's story as told by her and her witnesses. It is not necessary to analyse this case in detail because the Subordinate Judge himself has paid very little attention to it. It is not possible to say from his judgment what view he takes of it, for he deals exclusively with the case made by the Appellant. He has refused to accept the Appellant's case in all its details, but he has treated it as representing more or less what took place, and he finds in language admitting of no ambiguity that taking the case made by the Appellant substantially to represent what occurred, fraud was practised on the Respondent in whose favour he has made a decree setting aside the deed of the 4th November 1915.

It has been argued by the learned Advocate-General on behalf of the Appellant that in a case of fraud, it will not suffice to find fraud otherwise than as alleged on behalf of the Plaintiff, and that even should the Court find that fraud was practised, if such fraud is other than the fraud alleged the Defendant is entitled to have the suit dismissed. This is a proposition which may be applicable in cases between man and man, or, stated more appropriately to this case, where a pardanashin lady is not concerned. But where a pardanashin lady is involved, other and equally well-known rules have to be applied and conformity with them has to be established. As I read the judgment of the learned Subordinate Judge, it is according to these rules that he has found that the Appellant fails even assuming his case to be true. I propose therefore to state the history of the matter and examine it from this point of view.

For some years before his death Kedar-nath Ghose had been an invalid and at the time of his death he was bed-ridden. He had spoken to his wife some two or three days before his death about a Will and on or about the 28th or 30th September a draft Will was prepared for him. The materiality of the Will which Kedar-nath intended to execute arises from the circumstance that the case put forward by the Appellant in his written statement and in the evidence is that it was in order to give effect by deed to the wishes of her deceased husband, which the intervention of death prevented him from carrying out by Will, the Respondent executed the instrument which is the occasion of these proceedings. The draftsman of the Will was Aghorenath Maity a man who describes himself as a trader, dealing in building materials and also with deeds, who has been called as a witness for the Appellant. Aghore Maity's evidence is that he was summoned by one Ashutosh Banerjee to write out the Will: that Kedar Babu stated his intentions at some of which Ashutosh Banerjee protested and after discussion with Asutosh Banerjee he wrote out the terms. This draft has been produced. It contains a number of alterations but it has not been proved by whom these alterations were made. Aghore Maity did not make them though he says they were made on the same day as the draft was written, but he cannot say by whom. The suggestion is that the alterations were made by Asutosh Banerjee who, however, has not been called by either side though present at the trial of the suit. The importance of these alterations will appear later. The Will was fair copied on the 6th October. This appears from the evidence of the Appellant, and of a witness named Boloram Ganguly, an attesting witness to the deed in suit. This man says that on the day preceding the death of Kedar he went to Kedar's house where he saw Akhoy Ghose, Jotin Ghose, Shyama Charan Bhaduri, Asutosh Banerjee and Raj Kumar Deoti. The document was being dictated by Akhoy Ghose to his son Jotin who was writing a fair copy. This fair copy has not been produced and no explanation of the omission to produce it is forthcoming. On the 7th October Kedar-nath Ghose died without having executed the Will though on the morning of that day the several persons whom I have named, a pleader called Badal Chandra Ghose, the doctor Sarat Chandra Das, and a person of the name of Pulin Behary Mondal had collected, most of them for the purpose of being present at the execution of the document. But nothing could be done as Kedar had become unconscious. Kedar died and did so intestate. The Appellant and also Asutosh Banerjee and Jharilal Bhaduri then asked what was to be done. Whereupon a suggestion was made by Badal Chandra Ghose that as the Will could not be executed a deed which in his evidence he called a deed of family arrangement might be executed in its terms. This suggestion was made in the absence, it is to be observed, of the Respondent. All of this is most significant: It suggests the thought that the death of Kedarnath Ghose intestate was regarded by these persons as a catastrophe. So far as he could do ought to remedy it, Badal Chandra Ghose lost no time and he then and there as he says dictated a draft to Akhoy Ghose's son Jatindra. This draft too is not forthcoming nor is its absence explained. Some few days later the Appellant suggested to the Respondent that a deed should be executed. He made the suggestion at a time when expenses to be incurred for the Sradh of Kedarnath Ghose were under discussion. The Respondent was most anxious that a feeding of the poor should take place. This appears to have afforded to the Appellant the opportunity which he desired, for he demurred and said he would consent if the Respondent would execute what he called a family arrangement. A number of persons whom it is unnecessary to specify, their names recur throughout the evidence at each stage of the incidents leading up to the final conclusion, also met and discussed the matter with the Appellant and Respondent. As regards this discussion, suffice it to say, that it related to arrangements regarding the immoveable property and that according to the witness Fakir Chandra Ghose the Respondent intimated that if the Sradh would only cost Rs. 5,000 or Rs. 6,000 she would execute a deed in accordance with the terms of the Will which her husband had proposed to execute. There appears to have been more than one such interview with the Respondent as the Appellant says that terms were discussed in his presence, while Fakir Chandra Ghose says: "We came back and told Satish that Kalidasi had agreed." It is not a simple matter to disentangle the evidence as to these several interviews, but on each occasion the Appellant's adherents were present and the impression on my mind, whether or no she was alive to her own interests, or advised as to them, a point I shall deal with hereafter, is that the Respondent was being importuned in the interests of the Appellant to put her hand to the document which he was anxious to obtain. The Appellant says that the Respondent agreed to certain terms and accordingly in furtherance of the project on the following day a draft of the Will of Kedar and the draft deed prepared by Badal Babu and "perhaps also the fair copy of the Will" were made over to an individual of the name of Nilmony Bose to prepare a "partition deed" in the terms arranged. Nilmony Bose has not been called as a witness and the explanation given for his absence from the witness box, that he was travelling to Waltair, is wholly insufficient. His evidence might have thrown some light upon the failure to produce the draft prepared by Badal Chandra Ghose and the fair copy of the Will. The importance of the omission to produce these papers lies in the fact that as already stated it is the Appellant's case that subject to such alterations as were agreed upon between him and the Respondent the object of the deed was merely to give effect to the wishes of Kedarnath Ghose which the deceased had not been able to carry out before his death. The learned Subordinate Judge has found that the alterations in the draft of the Will were interpolated subsequently in order to bring the Will into conformity with the partition deed. The alterations in the draft in various respects are not such as one would expect to find in a Will but are such as might well find a place there if the draft Will had been used as a rough draft for the purpose of engrafting upon it the deed of partition. This does not improve the position for the Appellant and it is not necessary to come to any definite conclusion one way or the other. But the Appellant's case being what it is, that the draft Will as altered and the deed in suit represent the testamentary wishes of the deceased, the omission to produce the fair copy of the Will and the draft prepared by Badal Chandra Ghose suggests the inference that were they produced they would show that neither the fair copy of the Will nor the draft partition deed were in accordance with the Will which Kedarnath Ghose intended to execute. This omission and the failure fully to explain their non-production throw the gravest suspicion on the Appellant's case.

About the time when Nilmoni Bose had been told to prepare a draft, in particular on the 19th October, the Appellant, who had charge of the hardware business in Calcutta drew from the National Bank of India practically the whole of the cash balance of the business which stood in Kedar's name amounting to Rs. 11,000 and transferred it to an account in his own name at the Mercantile Bank of India. At that time, of course, the Respondent knew nothing about this. It came to light in circumstances to which I shall presently refer. Four or five days after receiving instructions Nilmoney produced a draft which according to the Appellant was read over and explained to the Respondent on the 25th October 1915 in presence of some ten persons by Fakir Chandra Ghose, who also explained it. The draft was approved and executed by the Respondent through her daughter Chinabala. Fakir again lent his services in the same manner some days later when the fair copy was executed by the parties in similar fashion as regards the Respondent. That took place on the 4th November 1915. On the 8th December the deed was registered. A Vakil of the name of Bhupendra Nath Bose has been called to support this part of the case and he produced a diary in which he had made a note as to his presence on the occasion and the reading over of the document to the Respondent by one Shyama Charan Bhaduri. There is nothing in the note to show that the document was explained to the Respondent on the occasion in the manner in which that should have been done and this witness's evidence does not carry the case for the Appellant very far.

Raj Kumar having been informed by his sister of what had occurred, obtained a copy of the deed, which he says he procured on the 22nd or 23rd January 1916. On the 26th January he borrowed a sum of Rs. 2,000 from the Appellant the significance of which will have to be considered in dealing with his connection with this affair. On the 31st January, the Respondent made an application to the Court of the Subordinate Judge for a succession certificate to enable her to realise a sum of Rs. 2,825 for which her late husband had been insured in the Phoenix Insurance Company, Ltd. On the 23rd February she filed a further petition asking that Government promissory notes of the total approximate value of Rs. 7,500 should be included in the application. Raj Kumar Deoti signed this application on behalf of the Respondent. The need for the application according to Raj Kumar was that his sister was going to bring a suit to set the deed aside which would cost a good deal of money, and in order to raise funds he made enquiries and from these made at the Bank it came to his knowledge that the Appellant had withdrawn Rs. 11,000 and was about to withdraw the Government Promissory Notes. From the Insurance Co., he learnt that a succession certificate would be necessary before the money could be paid. While this application was pending, events took a singular turn, for Raj Kumar, who professes to have been interested in securing for his sister her just rights, entered into negotiations with the Appellant for the preparation and execution by the Respondent of a deed to supplement the partition deed by making provision as regards items of property not comprised in it; in particular the items which were the subject of the application for the succession certificate. Raj Kumar says he asked Satish to make a draft but at no time did he consult his sister in the matter. The Appellant's evidence as to this is that Raj Kumar asked him whether a supplemental deed should be executed with regard to the Government Promissory Notes and the life policy which had been omitted from the partition-deed. A draft was accordingly prepared and made over to Raj Kumar. Then, according to the Appellant, Raj Kumar told him that if he would discharge him from a debt of Rs. 3,500 which Raj Kumar owed him he would allow the Respondent to execute it, otherwise he would prevent her from so doing. This statement, considered in the light of all the evidence, has the ring of truth about it. But as will be seen when I discuss Raj Kumar's position in relation to his sister and the deed in suit, so far from helping the Appellant it militates against his success. Our attention has been drawn at some length to the details of the supplemental deed and errors in and omissions from the original deed which, an examination of the supplemental deed discloses. For instance the valuation of the hardware business in Calcutta is given in the deed of the 4th

November as Rs. 31,000 while from the supplemental deed the net value appears to be 56,851 rupees. It is admitted by the supplemental deed that mistakes have been made in incorporating certain matters in the deed of the 4th November; and in his evidence the Appellant admitted the incorrectness of the valuation of the properties mentioned in the first deed. The supplemental deed was never executed. On the 8th April 1916 the Appellant objected to the Respondent obtaining a succession certificate and himself filed a petition to the Subordinate Judge for a succession certificate in respect of the Government Promissory Notes. In that petition he stated that he was the reversionary heir and claimed the sums in question as such, making no mention either of the partition deed or of the agreement only recently entered into for a supplemental deed. On the 16th May, the Appellant filed a suit against Raj Kumar Deoti to recover Rs. 3,668-4-0 borrowed by him which sum included the Rs. 2,000 borrowed on the 26th January 1916. On the 18th of May according to the Appellant's deposition in the proceedings for a Succession Certificate the Respondent executed the am-mukhtearnama in favour of Raj Kumar. On the 20th May the applications for succession certificates were disposed of and the Court ordered that succession certificate should issue to the Appellant as regards the Government Promissory Notes and as regards the insurance money to the widow. On the 28th June of the same year the suit which has resulted in this appeal was filed. This is the case which the Subordinate Judge has considered and which he says is a fraud on the Respondent.

The rules laid down by a long series of decisions for the protection of purdanashin ladies are well-established and it is unnecessary that I should repeat them.

SATISH CHANDRA GHOSE v. KALIDASI DAS.

It is with their application that we are concerned and we have to consider whether or not those rules were observed in the circumstances in which the deed in question was executed. In my opinion, they were not. I have already indicated what the course of events suggests to my mind with reference to the Will. That the Appellant was aware of the contents of the proposed Will I have no doubt, nor that his disappointment that it had not been executed was intense. But there was no need for the execution of a deed such as this immediately after the death of the husband of the Respondent. There was no dispute and no "family arrangement" was necessary. But immediately her husband had died the Respondent was importuned by the Appellant and his adherents to execute this deed. That he saw his opportunity when she wanted a considerable sum to be spent in feeding the poor I feel convinced. The business which was the source of her income was in his hands. The shradh ceremony had to be performed. Whatever her rights may have been money had to be forthcoming at once for the purpose. Accordingly she agreed to the proposal, thinking that she was but giving effect to her husband's wishes. That she was doing so is extremely doubtful, either on the view taken by the Subordinate Judge as to the draft Will, or in the view to which I inclined. But in any event she was entitled to be held by the Appellant at arm's length and to receive independent advice and this is the point upon our view as to which the decision of the appeal must depend. There is nothing to show that the Respondent ever had independent advice. That a pardanashin lady must have independent legal advice is not necessary as an inflexible rule. But what I conceive to be the effect of the decisions is that, excluding those rare cases where the experience and attainments of the lady or the circumstances of the case render advice superfluous, a pardanashin lady must have advice, that the adviser should have no adverse interest, and should be such a person as is capable of explaining to her fully her rights in general and in particular under the document which she intends to sign, if necessary contrasting them with her rights should the intended document not be executed by her; if the circumstances are such that unless he has a knowledge of law he is not competent to advise her, then and in that case independent legal advice is essential. Considerable argument has been addressed to us on behalf of both parties as to the need for independent legal advice in this case. I am not prepared to say that it was not necessary. But inasmuch as I am of opinion that the lady had no independent advice at all, it is unnecessary to consider that aspect of the matter. All that has been proved, assuming the evidence to be true, is that the document was read to her for I cannot give any weight to bald assertions that the document was explained without details of what such explanation consisted of. It has not been proved that she was aware what her rights were apart from the document, or that she was giving up any rights for what she obtained. It has been argued by the learned Advocate-General that she knew her rights, and that the discussions with her prior to the execution of the draft establish this. But this I do not think is the case. She was undoubtedly aware that the source of her income was the hardware business in Calcutta, but it has not been established that she knew what her rights were as a Hindu widow either with reference to the business or with reference to the immoveables; or that she knew what she was giving up or what she was to obtain in return or the legal consequences of what she was doing. Yet these were matters of which she was entitled to be, and ought to have been made fully cognisant. Who would naturally have been the people to explain matters to the Respondent? The document which she was executing was for the benefit of her husband's brother. Ordinarily he would be the person whose duty it would be to protect her interests. In the circumstances she would turn to her own nearest male relatives. These are Kamini and Raj Kumar. But Kamini hardly comes into the case. It has not been suggested that he took the slightest interest in his sister's affairs and he may be ignored—What was Raj Kumar's position in the matter? He says that he heard about the deed from his sister. He obtained a copy of it from the Registration Office. He says that he brought it and told her that she had been defrauded. Taking those statements as an index to his state of mind in January, how is it to be explained that in March he was entering into negotiations with the Appellant for the execution by the Respondent of a supplemental deed with reference to which he never consulted his sister at any time? He was a man who, it must be borne in mind, was in debt to the Appellant. It would have been a matter for surprise had he advised his sister to execute the supplemental deed. At the same time as he was thus negotiating he was lending his sister his support in her application for a succession certificate. His attitude with regard to the supplemental deed and the succession certificate cannot be reconciled with his conduct with reference to the deed as soon as he had obtained a copy of it. In May the Appellant filed a suit against Raj Kumar who responded by obtaining ammuktearnama from his sister for the purpose of filing this suit. From that time onwards Raj Kumar sided with the Respondent. It is quite impossible to regard Raj Kumar as a disinterested person. So far from being disinterested. I think that it is abundantly clear that throughout the whole period till the 18th May he was actuated solely by self-interest. Raj Kumar is stated by the Appellant and his witness to have been present on the various occasions when the matter was discussed with the Respondent. In the view that I take of Raj Kumar's connection with and attitude towards this matter, it is quite possible that he was there. But that he was advising his sister and acting in her interests, I do not think, is in the least degree probable. So far from that being the case I think that the inference which may very fairly be drawn from the facts and circumstances is that he was furthering the interests of the Appellant for his own advantage in the first instance and that he eventually sided with his sister when the institution of the suit for Rs. 3,668-4-0 showed him that the Appellant was not prepared to treat him favourably. It is impossible, on a view of the evidence most favourable to the Appellant, to take the view that Raj Kumar Deoti is a person who can be regarded as an independent adviser of the Respondent.

I concur in the order to be made.

Hindu joint family estate—Losses in management—Agreement providing for surrender of share—Subsequent letter affirming agreement, not registered—Registration Act (XVI of 1908), secs. 17 (b) and 49—Mere attestation, if operates as estoppel—Indian Evidence Act (I of 1872), sec. 115.

Where the manager of a Hindu joint family estate entered into an agreement with his co-sharers that on proof of losses in the management of the estate they should pay their share of such losses and in case the losses be not paid when demanded, their shares in the estate would pass to the former:

Held—That the agreement by itself was sufficient to transfer the shares upon the event happening as contemplated, and that a subsequent letter to the manager admitting the loss and surrender was not an operative conveyance which required registration.

Held also—That the fact that the manager had been an attesting witness to a conveyance by which his co-sharers subsequently purported to transfer the property did not estop him from denying their title.

Attestation of a deed by itself estops a man from denying nothing whatever excepting that he has witnessed the execution of the deed. It conveys, neither directly nor by implication, any knowledge of the contents of the documents. To operate as estoppel, the signature must be shown by independent evidence to have been meant to involve consent to the transaction.

Appeal from a judgment and decree of the Court of the Judicial Commissioner, Central Provinces, dated the 28th April 1917, reversing a decree of the District Judge, East Berar, dated the 21st October 1915.

The Plaintiff-Respondent claimed to recover possession by partition of an eight annas share in a village called Khandal. His title rested on two conveyances which were not challenged but it was denied that the original vendors Kanhoba and Vishwanath had power to convey the property.

Pandurang, the present Appellant, resisted the claim on the ground that the property had passed to him under an agreement with Kanhoba and Vishwanath which was further evidenced by a letter passed by them. The Plaintiff-Respondent replied that the letter alone could have passed the title, and that being unregistered it was invalid: and further he alleged that as Pandurang was an attesting witness of one of the conveyances on which the Plaintiff relied, he was estopped from denying the latter's title.

The facts are fully set out in the judgment of their Lordships.

Mr. B. Dubé for the Appellant.—A loss was incurred while Pandurang was manager of the property and Kanhoba and Vishwanath were liable for their share. On their failure to pay the property ipso facto passed to Pandurang under the provisions of the deed of compromise of September 1916. The letter of April 1910 would be useless as a document of title but my contention is that it is not a document of title but merely evidence of the fact that a relinquishment had taken place.

The letter is admissible in evidence but even without it my title is good.

He referred to Indian Registration Act, XVI of 1908, secs. 17 (b) and 49,

.. Mr. L. DeGruyther, K. C. (with Mr. J. M. Parikh) for the Respondent No. 1.—

The registration certificate is conclusive of the facts it contains, therefore the sale to Damle was good and bond fide. Pandurang was only manager but not merely of Khandal but of all three villages. It has not been shown that there were losses in all three villages. [Lord Buckmaster. This point was never taken before and there is no evidence on it]. Pandurang's evidence shows that Vishwanath and Kanhoba were not able to pay the amount due so they agreed to pass a letter or give a conveyance. No title passed under the deed of agreement, and but for the second document there would be no interest in land. Moreover the agreement refers to all three villages, if there was to be a forfeiture under the agreement there would be a forfeiture of all three villages. The surrender of a single village was a new contract.

As to estoppel, Damle had notice from the sale deed itself that Pandurang was manager and that there was some agreement in connection with it. Damle asked Pandurang if he consented and he did consent, so Pandurang is now estopped from denying that the vendors had power to sell.

[LORD CARSON.—Not one word of this was put to Pandurang and the burden of proving estoppel rests on you.

LORD BUCKMASTER.—The only estoppel raised in the issues is from Pandurang's attestation of the deed. The estoppel you are raising is not pleaded.]

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by

LORD BUCKMASTER.—The Plaintiff in the suit out of which this appeal has arisen is the first Respondent. His plaint asked that a joint estate in certain property known as Mauza Khandal should be partitioned, and that it might be declared that he was entitled to an 8-anna share in the property. The suit was dismissed by the District Judge of East Berar, but was granted in the Court of the Judicial Commissioner. The Respondent's title rested on two deeds, the first, dated the 2nd February 1914, by which two grantors, Kanhoba and Bishwanath, the sons of Raghu, purported to convey the property in question to one Hari Gobind Damle for Rs. 9,100, and the second, dated the 26th June 1914, by which Hari Govind Damle conveyed the same parcels to the said Respondent for Rs. 15,000. So far as the documentary title is concerned, it is complete, and if in fact Vishwanath and Kanhoba had the right to convey the two shares covered by the deed of the 2nd February 1914, there could be no answer to the Respondents' claim. The first question that arose in the suit and remains for decision upon this appeal is whether those two signatories possessed that right or no, and the second whether if no such right existed, the Appellant was estopped from setting up the defect. The dispute arises in these circumstances. The village in question was originally part of the joint estate of a joint Hindu family, which had separated before 1906, leaving this village undivided. The joint family had been constituted by the four sons of Raghu. The eldest of these, Krishna, died before the separation. The Appellant Pandurang was one of the sons of Krishna, and so also were the second and third Respondents. The other Respondents, with the exception of No. 8, were descendants of two of the dead sons of Krishna, and Respondent No. 8 Musumant Sakhubai represented Luxman, the second son of Raghu, who was also dead. The two other sons of Raghu were, as has already been stated, Kanhoba and Vishwanath, who were each entitled to a one-fourth share.

Pandurang was the registered holder of the land. In 1906 disputes, with the exact nature of which their Lordships are unacquainted, had arisen between him and the other joint members. Accordingly on the 8th September 1906, a document was executed which has given rise to the question that has now to be determined. It was stated to be a deed of settlement by Pandurang in favour of Kanhoba and Vishwanath and Sakhubai, the widow of Luxman, and it took the form of a statement made by Pandurang to his two uncles. It sets out their relationship to him, that a partition has been effected between them and him in respect of the ancestral property, and that only certain ancestral izra villages remain, of which Mauza Khandal is one. It continues by referring to the fact that disputes had often arisen and tended to arise between them and himself, and it then proceeds to put forward the terms of the settlement. The effective part of those terms is this, that he, Pandurang, will manage in future all the village affairs and take Rs. 180 per annum as his salary and remuneration for doing it; that he will pay the necessary expenses, and that if the village profits were not sufficient to meet the expenses and there might be a loss, his two uncles should pay on account of the loss in proportion to their shares. It then concludes in this way: "If you raise contentions in future in respect of the loss, they shall not be heard, and you shall be held to have lost, under this vyavastha patra (deed of settlement), your shares in the villages. The shares shall, however, be lost if the losses are demanded and not paid in the presence of the panch." It finally refers to a suit pending between himself and his uncles in respect of the villages, and states that it has been compromised under the settlement. That document was signed by Pandurang alone, but it was presented for registration by Vishwanath, one of the two uncles of Pandurang, and registered accordingly. Nothing appears to have been contained in the document affecting Sakhubai, and her only defence to the suit is a statement that Pandurang is estopped from disputing the sale deed of the 2nd February 1914. Pursuant to the arrangements made in that agreement, Pandurang continued to manage the estate and to make the payments. It must also be assumed that the civil suit was compromised. It appears that in the course of management there was a loss in respect of this particular village, Mauza Khandal. The other villages, although the exact accounts have not been produced, apparently roughly balanced, but as to Mauza Khandal, there was, in 1910, a loss for the four years of a total of Rs. 1,069. The fact that this loss had been incurred was mentioned to the two uncles of Pandurang, and a letter to him in the handwriting of Vishwanath was drawn up on the 11th April 1910, and signed by both of them in these terms: "You have demanded from us Rs. 533-1-3 pies (rupees five hundred and thirty-three, one anna and three pies) found due on account of loss in Khandal Izara for four years from 1907. But we cannot pay the same. You are therefore liable for the profit or loss which accrued up till now and may accrue in future. We are not to take a share and pay the loss. You may make a management as you like."

It was not registered. The arrangements evidenced by those two documents would be sufficient for the purpose of conveying the shares of Kanhoba and Vishwanath to Pandurang, but the real argument that has been brought before this Board against that effect being given to these transactions is that the first document was not formally signed by Vishwanath and Kanhoba and that the second document was not registered and therefore could not be given in evidence. Their Lordships think that both these contentions fail. With regard to the first, the arrangement was a perfectly good one according to Hindu law, if accepted by Vishwanath and Kanhoba and acted upon by Pandurang, even although the document was not in fact signed by the persons to whom it was addressed. That Pandurang did act upon it is beyond dispute. The only question that follows is whether the subsequent letter was an effective instrument necessary for the purpose of transferring the property, or whether it was only a piece of evidence not constituting acceptance of the earlier proposal but showing that it had been accepted and that Vishwanath and Kanhoba admitted that the condition upon which the first agreement was to operate had in fact arisen. Their Lordships think that the latter is the true interpretation. The document itself contains no statement of conveyance or release. It repeats that Vishwanath and Kanhoba are not to take a share and pay the losses because they are unable to do so, and read, as it must be read, as a sequel to their earlier document which had been drawn upon in 1906, it is a recognition that the share will pass as that document provides. There was consequently no need for its registration.

It is then urged that in point of fact the original document dealt with the share in all the villages as one, and the evidence goes to show that the only village with regard to which the accounts were placed before Vishwanath and Kanhoba was the village of Mauza Khandal, to which alone the letter relates. Their Lordships think that there is no weight in this contention. There would be no reason, even on the original agreement, to prevent the parties dealing with the one village instead of the three. The terms are clumsily expressed, and the letter merely shows that all parties accept the interpretation of the earlier document as permitting each share to be dealt with individually instead of all being necessarily grouped together. It is therefore not surprising that this contention does not appear to have been raised at any time prior to the actual hearing before their Lordships.

There remains the matter which, so far as can be gathered from the judgments in the Courts from which this appeal has proceeded, has been the real controversy, and that is that whatever be the true effect of the transaction Pandurang is estopped from setting it up against the Respondent. The first estoppel that is put forward, which was undoubtedly the estoppel upon which the real issue was taken, was said to arise by virtue of the fact that Pandurang had himself attested the first deed which had been executed on the 2nd February 1914, conveying the property to Damle. The issue is framed in these words: "Is Defendant No. 1 (i.e., Pandurang) estopped from questioning the right title and interest of Defendants Nos. 9 and 10 (i.e., Vishwanath and Kanhoba) in the property transferred under the sale deed dated the 2nd February 1914, on account of the fact that he attested that deed." And then a further issue is raised as to whether he attested with knowledge and consented to the transfer. Before their Lordships consider the circumstances in which that attestation took place, they think it is desirable to emphasize once more that attestation of a deed by itself estops a man from denying nothing whatever excepting that he has witnessed the execution of the deed. It conveys, neither directly nor by implication, any knowledge of the contents of the document, and it ought not to be put forward alone for the purpose of establishing that a man consented to the transaction which the document effects. It is, of course, possible, as was pointed out by their Lordships in the case of Banga Chandra Dhur Biswas v. Jagat Kishore Acharya Chowdhuri (1), that an attestation may take place in circumstances which would show that the witness did in fact know of the contents of the document, but no such knowledge ought to be inferred from the mere fact of the attestation. Their Lordships think that a mistake has arisen in this case, not for the first time, from assuming that attestation carries some greater weight. In the present instance the learned District Judge says in his judgment at page 47 :—

My impression is that Pandurang did not understand the nature of the consequences that may accrue from his conduct and what interpretations would be put upon the fact of his signing the deed as an attesting witness. I therefore hold that the Defendant Pandurang is not estopped from raising the question that he was not bound by his mere signature to show that he consented to the result that he was not entitled to them.

That is the wrong way of approaching the question. Pandurang is not estopped by his mere signature unless it can be established by independent evidence that to the signature was attached the express condition that it was intended to convey something more than a mere witnessing of the execution, and was meant as involving consent to the transaction. The statements made by the learned Judicial Commissioners at page 61 of the record are even more startling; and they appear to show that the error as to the effect of attestation must be very wide-spread. They state there: "The mere attestation of a sale deed does not work an estoppel unless it is pleaded and proved that such attestation has induced a belief followed by action." Estoppel does not arise from any such circumstance. As already stated, attestation itself does not effect it, nor does the belief of other parties as to the meaning of attestation affect the man who has placed his signature as a witness, unless it can be established that he knew that that belief would arise, and signed with that intent. A similar statement is to be found later on in the judgment, where the learned Judges say :—

We think that attestation by a person who has or claims any interest in the property covered by the document must be treated, in the absence of any evidence to show that he was tricked into making the signature, prima facie as a representation by him that the title recited in the document is true and will not be disputed by him as against the obligee under the document.

Their Lordships are bound to point out that that is an entire misapprehension of the law of estoppel, and that if that misapprehension be not corrected, much mischief may be done in the administration of justice in India. They think it well to recall the precise words in which estoppel is defined in the Indian Evidence Act of 1872, sec. 115, which is in these terms :—

When one person has, by his declaration, act or omission, intentionally caused or permitted another person to believe a thing to be true, and to act upon such belief, neither he nor his representative shall be allowed, in any suit or proceeding between himself and such person or his representative, to deny the truth of that thing.

If the clear rule there laid down had been observed, the difficulties which have embarrassed this case would not have arisen. It is then said that attestation in this particular case had greater weight because of the circumstances associated with the execution of the deed. Those circumstances, when they are carefully examined, amount to this: That it is alleged that Pandurang knew of the deed's contents; that he was warned against signing it; that he said he did not mind signing it because he had no objection; and that there were circumstances from which it is possible to infer that he in fact consented to the sale. No one of these suggestions was put to Pandurang himself and their Lordships are unable to draw that inference from the other evidence. There can be no doubt that in 1910 Pandurang had obtained a formal acknowledgment of the fact that the condition under which his title to these two shares arose had in fact taken place. He must be assumed to have known that his right was then established, subject to whatever argument might be raised as to the question of registration, which obviously was not in the mind of either of the parties. He thought that the property was worth some Rs. 4,000, it was to be sold for Rs. 9,100, and the whole of the right and interest that arose to him by virtue of the fact that the Rs. 533 that were owing to him had not been paid was to disappear; he was to get nothing whatever out of it, and he was to relinquish the right to which the non-payment of the monies had given rise. It seems to their Lordships impossible to think that in such circumstances a man could have attested a deed for the purpose of relinquishing for no consideration whatever a right which, upon the face of the document, would have been one of great value. Their Lordships do not think that the evidence that Pandurang knew of the contents of this deed and attested for the purpose of evidencing his consent can be accepted, and the burden of establishing that contention lay upon the Plaintiff. If in fact there be a practice, as is suggested from the evidence, that when the consent of parties to transactions is required, it can be obtained by inducing them by one means or another, to attest a signature of the executing parties, the sooner that practice is discontinued the better it will be for the straightforward dealing essential in all business matters.

Their Lordships therefore think that this estoppel has not been made out, and for the reasons already given they think that this appeal ought to be allowed. The judgment in the Court of the Judicial Commissioner should be reversed and the suit dismissed with costs, the Appellant to have his costs of this appeal and in the Courts below, and they will humbly advise His Majesty to this effect.

ratory suit without seeking consequential relief, maintainability of—Plaintiff if bound to sue for all the reliefs—Adverse possession against co-owners of joint property—Cause of action, accrual of, for a declaratory suit—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Art. 120, applicability of.

A declaratory suit was brought for determination of Plaintiff's share in certain joint ancestral lands, on the allegation that he was in joint possession of the share claimed by him, but he did not seek any consequential relief. The Defendants pleaded that the title of the Plaintiff was extinguished by adverse possession on the part of the predecessor of one of the Defendants. The suit was, however, dismissed under the provisions of sec. 42 of the Specific Relief Act, inasmuch as the Plaintiff had omitted to claim further relief:

Held—That the possession by one co-owner is not presumed to be adverse to the others but is ordinarily held to be for the benefit of all. The possession of one joint tenant is the possession of all and there can be no dispossession by one joint tenant, in the absence of an assertion of a hostile title by him to the knowledge of the other joint tenants sought to be excluded from the joint tenancy.

COREA v. APPUHAMY (1), MUTTU NAYAGAN v. BRITO (2), HARDIT v. GURMUKH (3) and VARADA PILLAI v. JEEVARATHNAMMAL (4) referred to.

Art. 120 of the Second Schedule to the Indian Limitation Act is applicable to a suit for declaration of title to immoveable property, which must consequently be brought within six years from the date when the right to sue accrues.

MAHABARAT v. ABDUL (8), SHYAMANAND DAS v. RAJ NARAIN DAS (9) and KALI v. BHAGABAN (10) and other cases referred to.

Denials of title, which are not accompanied or followed by overt acts, are not calculated to cast a cloud upon the title of a person, and do not accordingly give rise to a cause of action.

Held, further—That in sec. 42 of the Specific Relief Act, the expression used by the legislature is, not "other relief" but "further relief." A suit for a declaratory decree ought not to be dismissed on the ground that it is barred by the proviso to sec. 42 of the Specific Relief Act, unless it is quite clear that the Plaintiff ought to seek further relief which he has failed to claim, although such relief flows directly and necessarily from the declaration sought for. The proviso to sec. 42 forbids a suit for a pure declaration without further relief, but it does not compel a Plaintiff to sue for all the reliefs which could possibly be granted, or debar him from obtaining a relief which he wants unless at the same time he asks for a relief which he does not want. Where the Plaintiff is in joint possession of immoveable property, whether such possession be actual possession of his share of the whole or actual possession of a part coupled with a constructive possession of the remainder, he is entitled to maintain a suit for declaratory relief with a view to remove a cloud on his title created by the act of the Defendant disputing his share; in a suit so framed, declaration of title is all that the Plaintiff needs and he is

MOOKERJEE, J.—This is an appeal by the Plaintiff in a suit for declaration of title to a village called Udaipore in the District of Bankura. The Plaintiff and the Defendants are descended from a common ancestor, Jugal Kishore Sen Ukil, who had two sons, Kesab and Matiram. Kesab had three sons, Prasad, Sridhar and Nilmohan; Matiram also had three sons, Damodar, Srinivas and Adwaita. The Plaintiff represents the branch of Nilmohan. The first Defendant is the widow of Prankrishna, the descendant of Prasad. The second and third Defendants represent the branch of Srinivas, while the fourth, fifth and sixth Defendants represent that of Adwaita. The case for the Plaintiff is that in the disputed property, which admittedly belonged to the common ancestor, his share is one-third, while the first Defendant owns one-twenty-fourth and the remaining Defendants fifteen-twenty-fourth. The first Defendant asserts, on the other hand, that the share of the Plaintiff is one-fourth, her own share is one-fourth and that of the remaining Defendants one-half. The substantial controversy is between the Plaintiff and the first Defendant and the dispute reduces to the devolution of the share of Sridhar, which was inherited by his son Syam and then passed into the hands of Sahachari, the widow of Syam. According to the Plaintiff, this share, after the death of Sahachari, passed into the hands of his father Gopal (the son of Nilmohan) as the sole surviving reversioner at the time. According to the first Defendant, that share was divided equally between the representatives of Prasad as well as Nilmohan. In these circumstances, the Plaintiff instituted this declaratory suit, and, on the allegation that he was in joint possession of the one-third share claimed by him, he did not seek consequential relief. The claim for declaratory relief was resisted on the grounds, amongst others, that it was barred by limitation, and that even if it was well-founded, in fact, the suit was not maintainable under sec. 42 of the Specific Relief Act inasmuch as the Plaintiff had omitted to claim further relief. The Subordinate Judge found on the evidence that the shares of the Plaintiff was one-third as alleged by him, that he was in joint possession of that share and that the claim for declaratory relief was not barred by limitation. The Subordinate Judge held, however, that the Plaintiff might have claimed further relief by way of partition, and in this view he dismissed the suit. The Plaintiff has appealed against the decree and has assailed the reason assigned by the Court below for withholding the declaration justified by the facts found. The Respondents have attempted to support the decree of the Subordinate Judge on the ground assigned by him, but they have further contended that the Subordinate Judge came to an erroneous decision on the merits and should have held that the claim was barred by limitation, that the share of the Plaintiff was not one-third but one-fourth, and that he was not in joint possession of the one-third share. The points in controversy between the parties have thus been all re-opened in this Court.

The first point which requires examination is the question of the extent of the share of the Plaintiff in the joint property; the solution depends upon the determination of two factors, namely, the time of the death of Sahachari when the succession opened out to the reversionary heirs of her husband and who were the persons alive at that time competent to take as such reversionary heirs. The Subordinate Judge has found that she died in 1862 and that the share of her husband thereupon passed to the father of the Plaintiff who was then alive, as the grand-father of the husband of the first Defendant had previously died. We see no reason to doubt the correctness of the conclusion of the Subordinate Judge which is amply supported by the evidence on the record. The story that the share was allowed to be enjoyed by other members of the family, although the father of the Plaintiff became entitled thereto as reversionary heir, is not supported by any reliable evidence or intelligible hypothesis. As a last resort, it was argued in the Court below—and the argument has been repeated in this Court—that the title of the father of the Plaintiff was extinguished by adverse possession on the part of the husband of the first Defendant. The requisites essential for the establishment of title by adverse possession as between co-owners of joint property have not, however, been made out. As has been frequently pointed out in recent years by the Judicial Committee, for instance, by Lord Macnaghten in Corea v. Appuhamy (1), by Lord Dunedin in Muttu Nayagan v. Brito (2), by Lord Buckmaster in Hardit v. Gurumukh (3) and by Viscount Cave in Varada Pillai v. Jeevarathnammal (4), the entry and possession of land by one co-owner will not be presumed to be adverse to the others but will ordinarily be held to be for the benefit of all; the difference between the possession of a co-owner and other cases is that acts, which if done by a stranger, would per se be a disseisin, are, in the case of tenancies in common, susceptible of explanation consistently with the real title; acts of ownership are not, in tenancies in common, acts of disseisin; the law will not presume that one tenant in common intends to oust another; the facts, if the contrary is asserted, must be notorious and the intent must be established in proof. The position is now firmly settled that the possession of one joint tenant is the possession of all and there can be no dispossession by one joint tenant, in the absence of an assertion of a hostile title by him to the knowledge of the other joint tenants sought to be excluded from the joint tenancy. Balaram v. Syamacharan (5), Lokenath v. Chakeswar (6) and Narendra v. Jogendra (7). Tested in the light of these principles, the case for acquisition of title by adverse possession completely breaks down. The Defendant has not adduced satisfactory evidence of exclusive possession; on the other hand, the Plaintiff has proved that in one instance at least he succeeded in realising a decree from one Imam for an one-third share of the sum at which the latter had purchased a jungle belonging to all the co-sharers. No doubt, the evidence shews that the husband of the first Defendant had asserted, from time to time, title to a larger share than he possessed, but such bare assertion could, in no sense, be deemed to constitute ouster or disseisin. In our opinion, the Subordinate Judge has rightly held that the share of the Plaintiff amounted to one-third but such title was not extinguished by adverse possession, and that he was in joint possession of the disputed property to the extent of his share at the date of the institution of this suit.

The second point which requires examination is, whether the claim for declaratory relief is barred by limitation. It was pointed out in the case of Mahakarati v. Abdul Hamid (8) that Art. 120 of the schedule to the Indian Limitation Act is applicable to a suit for declaration of title to immoveable property which must consequently be brought within six years from the date when the right to sue accrues. [Shyamand Das v. Raj Narain Das (9), Kali v. Bhagaban (10), Tarak v. Syama (11) and Kuloda Prosad v. Kali Das (12)]. It is plain that if there is a right to sue, it cannot be impossible to define when it originates, but the answer obviously depends upon the circumstances of each case. There has been some divergence of judicial opinion on the question, whether there may or may not be instances of successive accruals of causes of action for relief by way of declaration. Thus it was ruled in Thirumala v. Kadeswar (13), that when a Plaintiff brings a declaratory suit on the ground that the Defendant has denied his title, there is only one cause of action which accrues from the date of knowledge in the Plaintiff that the Defendant denied his title. This view was rested on the decisions in Akbar Khan v. Turaban (14) and Raja of Venkatagiri v. Isakapalli (15), which, it was explained, could not be reconciled with the opinion expressed in Anantharazu v. Narayanarazu (16) and Sheopher v. Deonarayan (17). On the other hand, the decision in Alla Jilai v. Umrab Husain (18) and Latafat v. Kalker (19), furnish instances where the possibility of a fresh cause of action for declaratory relief is recognised, and the doctrine is broadly formulated that a Plaintiff seeking a declaration is entitled to sue upon each successive invasion of his right. Similar instances may be found in Ilaki v. Harnam (20), Skinner v. Sunkarlal (21), Brij Bihari v. Sheo Sankar (22) and Ramji Ram v. Sadhu Saran (23). In the case before us, the Subordinate Judge has found that the cause of action arose in 1914, within six years before the date of the institution of the suit, when the first Defendant, in denial of the title of the Plaintiff, mortgaged and sold shares in the disputed property in excess of her lawful interest therein.

JOY NARAYAN SEN UKIL v. SRIKANTHA ROY.

But it has been contended on her behalf that a cause of action had arisen in 1898 when her husband filed a written statement and gave his deposition in a suit in which he denied that the Plaintiff had one-third share and himself claimed a one-fourth share. The Subordinate Judge has held that these assertions, which were not accompanied or followed by an overt act, were not calculated to cast a cloud upon the title of the Plaintiff and did not accordingly give rise to a cause of action. This, in our opinion, is a reasonable view. But it is also clear that the present cause of action is entirely distinct from and is in no sense a continuation of a prior cause of action, even if it should be held that a cause of action did arise in 1898. We accordingly affirm the conclusion of the Subordinate Judge that the claim for declaratory relief is not barred by limitation.

The third and final point which requires consideration is, whether the suit has been rightly dismissed under the proviso to sec. 42 of the Specific Relief Act, which is in the following terms:—

“Any person entitled to any legal character, or to any right as to any property, may institute a suit against any person denying, or interested to deny, his title to such character or right, and the Court may in its discretion make therein a declaration that he is so entitled, and the Plaintiff need not in such suit ask for any further relief.

Provided that no Court shall make any such declaration where the Plaintiff, being able to seek further relief than a mere declaration of title, omits to do so.”

It was successfully contended in the Court below and the same view has been reiterated in this Court on behalf of the Respondent that inasmuch as the Plaintiff could have sought further relief than a mere declaration of title by way of partition, omission to do so must draw upon him the penalty of the refusal of declaration he seeks. In support of this view, reliance has been placed upon the decision of the Madras High Court in Suryanarayana v. Tammanna (24). In the case mentioned, it was ruled that a Plaintiff suing for a declaration that property bequeathed by his father to the Defendant was ancestral and that his father had no power to bequeath it and that he was entitled to it by survivorship along with the Defendant, ought to pray for partition of the property even if it be in the possession of tenants. With regard to this decision, as also the two earlier cases of Sardar Singh v. Ganapat Singhji (25) and Strinivasa Ayyangar v. Strinivasa Swami (26), Sir Frederick Pollock has remarked in his commentary on the Specific Relief Act that they mark the extreme limits of the application of the proviso to sec. 42. We are inclined to adopt the same view and it appears to us to be fairly clear that assuming that the Plaintiff was in possession in the case of Suryanarayana v. Tammanna (24), that decision does not give due weight to the fundamental fact that the expression used by the legislature is, not “other relief” but “further relief.” The further relief must consequently be relief in relation to the legal character or right as to property which the Plaintiff is entitled to and whose title to such character or right the Defendant denies or is interested in denying; it must also be relief appropriate to and necessarily consequent on the right of title asserted. This view is supported by the decision in Aisa Siddika v. Bidhu Sekhar (27), which was recently followed in Sivaramalinga v. Sabharathna (28). These cases emphasise the standpoint that a suit for a declaratory decree ought not to be dismissed on the ground that it is barred by the proviso to sec. 42 of the Specific Relief Act, unless it is quite clear that the Plaintiff ought to seek further relief which he has failed to claim, although such relief flows directly and necessarily from the declaration sought for. Thus, when a person is out of possession of the land in respect of which he seeks to have his title declared, possession of the land in dispute is further consequential relief appropriate to the declaration prayed for and should as a general rule be sought. Basavayya v. Abbas Saheb (29), Panga v. Unni (30) and Ramaswami v. Muniandi (31). This is manifestly right on principle, for it would lead to multiplicity of litigation if the Plaintiff were allowed to seek the full measure of relief piecemeal, namely, first, a declaration of title in a suit for declaratory relief, and next, ejectment in a suit for recovery of possession. Ganpatgir v. Ganpatgir (32) and Chokalinga v. Achiyar (33). The position, however, is different where the Plaintiff is in joint possession of joint property to the extent of the share claimed by him and is driven to ask for declaratory relief, because the extent of his share is disputed by the co-owner. In a case of this description, it is difficult to appreciate on what principle the Plaintiff should be driven to seek for partition as a consequential relief. One of the incidents of joint property is that it may be enjoyed jointly; another incident is that its joint character is liable to be terminated. If a co-owner is content to enjoy joint property as such, there is no reason why he should be driven to seek for partition, merely because his co-owner chooses to dispute the extent of his share. The proviso to sec. 42 forbids a suit for a pure declaration without further relief, but it does not compel a Plaintiff to sue for all the reliefs which could possibly be granted, or debar him from obtaining a relief which he wants unless at the same time he asks for a relief which he does not want. It may be that the Plaintiff requires nothing more than a mere declaration and in those circumstances to refuse to make the decree asked for will be a denial of justice. Kunj Bihari v. Keshva Lal (34) and Chinuappa v. Thulsi (36). On this ground, it has been maintained that if the Plaintiff is only entitled to what is called constructive possession by receipt of rent from the Defendants, a declaration of title is all he needs; Loke Nath v. Kesiah Ram (37), Satis v. Satya (38) and Farasram v. Bhimbai (39). Reference may in this connection be made to the decision in Velammam v. Vavammal (40). There the Plaintiff, one of several sharers, sued to have it declared that a decree passed on a hypothecation made by his co-sharers did not affect his share; it was ruled, notwithstanding the decision in Suryanarayana v. Tammanna (24) that the Plaintiff need not ask for a general partition, even though he had impleaded those co-sharers as Defendants. This is obvious good sense, but rather difficult to reconcile with the opinion expressed in Ganapati v. Butchu (41) on the authority of the earlier decisions in Chinna v. Surjya (42) and Subramaniya v. Padmannava (43). The view that in cases of this description it is not obligatory upon the Plaintiff to ask for partition was however maintained by Chamier, C. J., in Asman Singh v. Tulsi Singh (44) which is consistent with the view indicated in Chinnammal v. Varada Rajulin (45). We hold accordingly that where, as in the case before us, the Plaintiff is in joint possession of immovable property, whether such possession be actual possession of his share of the whole or actual possession of a part coupled with constructive possession of the remainder, he is entitled to maintain a suit for declaratory relief with a view to remove a cloud on his title created by the act of the Defendant disputing his share; in a suit so framed, declaration of title is all that the Plaintiff needs and he is consequently not called upon to ask for consequential relief by way of partition. The conclusion follows that the Subordinate Judge has erroneously held that the proviso to sec. 42 of the Specific Relief Act is a bar to the relief claimed by the Appellant.

The result is that the appeal is allowed and the suit decreed with costs in both Courts payable by the first Defendant. The Plaintiff will have a declaration in terms of the first clause of his prayer in the plaint.

APPEAL FROM ORIGINAL DECREE

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), sec. 19, valid acknowledgment, what is—Endorsement on the back of a mortgage bond stating only that a certain sum on account of the principal was paid, if is a valid acknowledgment saving limitation

In a suit upon a mortgage bond securing an advance of Rs. 5,700, the question was whether an endorsement made on the back of the mortgage bond by the mortgagor in the following terms: "Paid on account of the principal as per separate accounts Rs. 1,751 only" was a valid acknowledgment within sec. 19 of the Limitation Act.

* Held—That the expression "the principal" must be taken to refer to the principal mentioned in the bond on the back whereof the endorsement was made. The examination of the bond shows that the principal advanced being Rs. 5,700, a payment of Rs. 1,751 on account of that principal cannot be taken to wipe out the liability and there was thus an acknowledgment of the right of the mortgagee to recover whatever might be found to be due. Therefore, the endorsement constituted an acknowledgment within the meaning of sec. 19 and consequently saved limitation.

PROSANNA KUMAR ROY v. NIRANJAN ROY:

This was an appeal against the decree of Babu Jagadish Chandra Goswami, Subordinate Judge, second Court of Zillah Chittagong, dated the 31st of May 1919.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

Sir B. C. Mitter and Dr. Sarat Chandra Basak and Babus Chandra Sekhar Sen, Probhat Chandra Dutt and Rama Prosad Mookerjee for the Appellant.

Babus Bipin Behari Ghose, Probodh Kumar Dass, Paresb Chundra Sen, Nripendra Nath Das and Surendra Nath Bose for the Respondents.

MOOKERJEE, J.—This is an appeal by the Plaintiff in a suit to enforce a mortgage security executed on the 4th June 1892 by three persons whose representatives are the Defendants in the action. The sum advanced was Rs. 5,700 and carried interest at the rate of Rs. 14 per mensem. The loan was repayable in two years. The present suit was instituted on the 4th June 1918, and consequently the question of limitation arose for consideration. The Plaintiff relied upon sec. 19 of the Indian Limitation Act and based his contention on an endorsement in the following terms, made on the back of the mortgage bond on the 27th May 1906 by two of the mortgagors and the representatives of the third mortgagor: "Paid on account of the principal as per separate accounts, rupees one thousand seven hundred fifty one only." The Subordinate Judge has held that this did not constitute a valid acknowledgment within the meaning of sec. 19 and that the suit is accordingly barred by limitation. On the present appeal, we have been invited to consider one question only, namely, whether the suit is or is not barred by limitation.

Sec. 19 provides that where before the expiration of the period prescribed for a suit or application in respect of any property or right, an acknowledgment of liability in respect of such property or right has been made in writing signed by the party against whom such property or right is claimed or by some person through whom he derives title or liability, a fresh period of limitation shall be computed from the time when the acknowledgment was so signed. The question for determination is, whether the endorsement constitutes an acknowledgment of the right claimed by the Plaintiff, namely, the right to recover his dues under the mortgage-bond. In the Court below reliance was placed on behalf of the Defendants upon the decision in Shearman v. Fleming (1), and in this Court the argument has been fortified by a reference to the decision in Madhavrao v. Gulabbhai (2). On behalf of the Plaintiffs, on the other hand, reference has been made to the decision of the Madras High Court in Joganadha Sahu v. Rama Sahu (3) which follows the earlier decision in Visvanatha v. Sri Ram Chandra (4) based on the decision of the Judicial Committee in Maniram Seth v. Seth Rup Chand (5). Reference has also been made to three later decisions of the Madras High Court in Ramakrishna v. Venkata Subbiah (6), Pamulapati Venkata Krishniah v. Kondamudi Subbarayuddu (7) and Reguna Nagendram Chetty v. Kuppusami Aiyen (8). Whether a particular endorsement does or does not constitute an acknowledgment of the right claimed by the Plaintiff must obviously depend upon its terms, and no useful purpose can be served by a meticulous examination of other endorsements made under different circumstances and expressed in different phraseology. We may point out, however, that the decision in Shearman v. Fleming (1) is plainly of no assistance to the Defendants, because the terms of endorsement in that case, namely, "a remittance to old accounts" do not imply that when credit had been allowed for the sum remitted, any sum would remain due from the remitter. It may also be pointed out that the decision in Madhavrao v. Gulabbhai (2) merely shows that a promise to pay, unaccompanied by an acknowledgment of the existence of a debt, cannot save limitation. The endorsement which we are called upon to consider is in our opinion, sufficiently plain and admits of one interpretation only. No doubt it does not specify the principal sum due at the time of the endorsement; but, the expression "the principal" must be taken to refer to the principal mentioned in the bond on the back whereof the endorsement was made. An examination of the bond then shows that the principal advanced was Rs. 5,700. Consequently, a payment of Rs. 1,751 on account of that principal cannot be taken to wipe out the liability and there was thus an acknowledgment of the right of the mortgagee to recover whatever balance might be found to be due. In this connection reference may usefully be made to a passage from the judgment of the Judicial Committee in Maniram v. Seth Rup Chand (3): "In a case of very great weight, the authority of which has never been called in question, Mellish, L. J., laid it down that an acknowledgment to take the case out of the statute of limitation must be either one from which an absolute promise to pay can be inferred, or secondly, an unconditional promise to pay the specific debt, or, thirdly, there must be conditional promise to pay the debt and evidence that the condition has been performed." Then follows the important observation: "An unconditional promise has always been held to imply a promise to pay, because that is the natural inference, if nothing is said to the contrary. It is what every honest man would mean to do." We feel no doubt whatever that the endorsement relied upon by the Plaintiff in the present case constituted an acknowledgment within the meaning of sec. 19 and that consequently the claim is not barred by limitation.

The result is that this appeal is allowed, the decree of the Subordinate Judge set aside and the case remitted to him for trial of such other questions as may be in controversy between the parties. The Plaintiff is entitled to his costs in this Court as also one-half of the costs (other than Court-fees) already incurred in the Court below. The costs of the trial after remand will be in the discretion of the Subordinate Judge.

The Appellant will be entitled to a refund of the Court-fee paid on the memorandum of appeal under sec. 13 of the Court Fees Act.

A. S. M. Akram for the Respondent

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

This appeal arises out of proceedings in execution of a decree for money. The decree was passed by the 3rd Subordinate Judge's Court 24-Pergannahs in respect of a claim, the cause of action of which arose within Diamond Harbour. The previous application for execution of the decree was made in that Court. Subsequently, the business arising within the local limits of the Munsif of Diamond Harbour was assigned to the 4th Subordinate Judge's Court by the District Judge under sec. 13

 (2) of the Bengal and Assam Civil Courts Act (Act XII of 1887). The present application for execution was made in the 4th Subordinate Judge's Court, and a question was raised in the Court below whether the latter Court had jurisdiction to execute it. The question was answered in the affirmative by the Court below.
 The judgment-debtors have appealed to this Court, and it is contended on their behalf that under sec. 13 (2) of Act XII of 1887 the business is not transferred, but is merely assigned to the Subordinate Judges, so that the case does not come under sec. 150 of the Code, and that even if it does, the provisions of that section are subject to those of secs. 27 and 38 of the Code.

Sec. 13 of Act XII of 1887 runs as follows :—

(1) The local Government may by notification in the official Gazette fix and alter the local limits of the jurisdiction of any Civil Court under this Act.

(2) If the same local jurisdiction is ac-signed to two or more Subordinate Judges or to two or more Munsifs, the District Judge may assign to each of them such Civil business cognizable by the Subordinate Judge or Munsif as the case may be, subject to any general or special orders of the High Court as he thinks fit.

The effect of re-distribution of business by the District Judge under sec. 13 of Act XII of 1887, upon the power of the Court to execute decrees was considered in some cases under Act XIV of 1882. In the case of Kalipada Mukerjee v. Dinonath Mukerjee (1) A obtained a decree against B in the Court of the first Munsif of Howrah. After the decree, the local area within which the cause of action arose and the judgment-debtor resided, was transferred (evidently under sec. 13 of Act XII of 1887) from the first to the second Munsif. On an application by A for the execution of his decree in the Court of the second Munsif which, allowed execution, it was held that the second Munsif had no jurisdiction to entertain the application and allow execution, and that the application ought to have been made in the Court of the first Munsif which passed the decree. Similarly in the case of Bechu Koer v. Golab Chand (2), it was held that the Court of Subordinate Judge which passed a decree is the only Court competent to execute it, and that the District Judge is not competent under sec. 13 (2) of Act XII of 1887 to assign to them different areas so as to limit or define their respective jurisdictions, the local limits of their jurisdiction being fixed by the local Government under sec. 13 (1) of the Act.

In cases of transfer of local jurisdiction by order of the local Government, it has been held with reference to the provisions of sec. 649 of Act XIV of 1882, that the application for execution of the decree may be made either to the Court which passed the decree, or to the Court to which the local jurisdiction has been transferred. See Latchman Pande v. Madan Mohon (3), Jahar v. Kamini Debi (4) and Udit Narain v. Mathura Prosad (5).

The Court below relied upon the provisions of sec. 37 (b) and sec. 150 of the present Code. There were no provisions in the old Code corresponding to those of sec. 150 of the present Code. Sec. 150 lays down "save as otherwise provided where the business of any Court is transferred to any other Court, the Court to which the business is so transferred shall have the same powers and shall perform the same duties as those respectively conferred and imposed by or under this Code upon the Court from which the business was so transferred."

We think that an assignment of business under sec. 13 (2) of Act XII of 1887 is not the same thing as transfer of business under sec. 150 of the Code and that being so the provisions of sec. 150 do not apply to the present case.

In Aminuddin v. Atarmoni (6) there was no assignment of business by the District Judge under sec. 13 (2) of Act XII of 1887 as in the present. It was held in the circumstances of that case that the Subordinate Judge's Court so far as it related to suits up to the value of Rs. 2,000 must be taken to have been transferred to the second Munsif's Court, upon that Court being vested with powers to try suits up to Rs. 2,000 in value which evidently was conferred by the local Government under sec. 19 (2) of Act XII of 1887. The question what effect the words "save as otherwise provided" in the opening line of sec. 150 have upon the power of the Court to which business is transferred, to execute decree passed by the Court from which the business is transferred, does not in the view, we take of this case, arise for decision.

The fourth Subordinate Judge's Court did not pass the decree, nor was the decree sent to it for execution, and the 3rd Subordinate Judge's Court has not ceased to exist nor has ceased to have jurisdiction to execute the decree.

We are accordingly of opinion that the fourth Subordinate Judge's Court had no jurisdiction to entertain the application for execution of the decree passed by the 3rd Subordinate Judge's Court in this case. The appeal is accordingly allowed, and the order of the Court below set aside. The application for execution of the decree will be returned to the decree-holder for presentation to the proper Court. APPEAL FROM ORIGINAL DECREE

No. 449 OF 1913.

RICHARDSON, J.

DYAM KHAN and ors.,
Plaintiffs, Appellants,

v.

SARAT CHANDRA DE and ors., Defendants,
Respondents.

Guardians and Wards Act (VIII of 1890), sec. 31 (3) (a)—Condition precedent distinguished from condition subsequent—Condition subsequent if vitiates a sale—bonâ fides of sale of minor's property.

1 condition precedent, if not complied with, vitates a sale but not a condition subsequent.

Where the District Judge acting under the Guardians and Wards Act empowers the guardian to sell a property of the minors for an alleged debt of theirs and further directs him to put in the bonds after these have been satisfied and so endorsed by the creditors, it does not follow that non-compliance with the latter direction vitates the sale if actually carried out and the vendee has all along been in possession of the purchased property.

Where the same property is held partly by adult co-sharers and partly by minors, the very fact that the minors' share was sold for a price a little over that for which the shares of adult co-owners was sold goes to indicate the bonâ fides of the transaction relating to the shares of the minors.

This was an appeal against the decree of Babu Surendra Nath Ghosh, Subordinate Judge, 2nd Court of Zillah Tippera, dated the 31st of July 1913.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

Dr. Sarat Chandra Basak and Babu Bipin Chandra Bose for the Appellants.

Babu Jatindra Mohan Ghosh for the Respondents.

This is an appeal by the Plaintiffs whose suit has been dismissed by the Subordinate Judge of Commilla. The Plaintiffs are Dyam and Abdul Hamid Bhunia, who are in the position of champertors, and Romjan Banu, Anarjan and Mahabat Ali, children of one Amanulla. Amanulla died about 1893 leaving by his first wife three children who had then attained their majority, and a widow Ayesha Bibi and four minor children by her. The majors were Syed Ali, Nayan Bibi and Meherjan Bibi, Defendants Nos. 7, 8 and 9.

Ayesha Bibi is Defendant No. 6, Romjan Banu, Anarjan and Mahabat Ali are Plaintiffs Nos. 3, 4 and 5; Mullickjan, the 4th child of Amanulla by Ayesha Bibi, is Defendant No. 10. Defendants Nos. 1 to 5 represent the firm of Khetra Mohan Dey and Co., who are said to have purchased from Ayesha Bibi towards the end of April 1898 the shares of her four minor children in the howla of Amanulla. This suit is brought to recover from Defendants Nos. 1 to 5 the seven annas fifteen gandas share of those children. It should be stated that Plaintiff No. 1 is alleged to have purchased the interest of Mullickjan, and Plaintiff No. 2 that of Romjan Banu.

in the property in suit. Anarjan, though she at first joined in the suit as a party Plaintiff, has now come to terms with Defendants Nos. 1 to 5 and declines to prosecute the suit or appeal any further.

It appears that in 1898 there were negotiations for the sale of the howla of Amanulla by his children to Khetra Mohan Dey and Co. The reasons ascribed for the sale were that the lands were low lying, they were being encroached upon by the town and jetties of Chandpur and were increasing in value as lands suitable for jute godowns but losing their value as mere cultivable lands. In February 1898 the widow of Amanulla joined with his major children in executing a bayana-patra or agreement to sell to Khetra Mohan Dey and Co. It was understood that for the sale of the shares of the minors leave of the District Judge would have to be obtained. That was no doubt in the minds of the parties, when they entered into that agreement. On the 17th of February 1898 Ayesha Bibi put in a petition before the District Judge asking to be appointed guardian of her minor children. One paragraph in that petition says that it was necessary to sell certain properties to clear debts incurred by the father of the minors. On 16th March 1898 Ayesha Bibi, as one of the heirs of her husband, joined with the major children in transferring their 8 annas 4 gandas odd share to Krishna Chandra Dey for Rs. 2,809-11 (Ex. E (1)). On 30th March 1898 Ayesha Bibi was duly appointed guardian of the persons and property of her minor children, and thereupon on 2nd April 1898 she filed a petition Ex. C) for leave to sell. On the same day the District Judge sanctioned the sale of the property provided the bonds, meaning the three bonds, mentioned in the petition Ex. C, on which the estate of Amanulla was still indebted, were produced before him endorsed as fully satisfied on 18th day of May 1898. The sanction having been given in that form another kobala was executed by Ayesha Bibi on behalf of her minor children conveying their 7 annas 15 gds. odd share to Krishna Chandra Dey for a similar sum of Rs. 2,809 as. 11. This kobala does not bear any date but we find that the stamp was purchased on 23rd April and the deed was registered on 28th April, so that it must have been executed within those six days. On the 18th May 1898 the bonds were not in fact produced before the District Judge though he twice gave time for their production. On the 27th July the District Judge made an order purporting to withdraw the conditional sanction of 2nd April 1898. The bonds as a matter of fact were never produced before him, but three registered receipts were put in on 27th June 1898 which purported to be executed by the obligees of those bonds stating that their respective bonds had been duly paid and discharged. They are Exs. F, F1 and Ex. (C). The sale had been carried into effect and possession given to Defendants Nos. 1 to 5, who have ever since been in possession of the land. *Plaintiffs Nos. 1 and 2 profess to have purchased the interests of Mullickjan Bibi and Romjan Banu by two kobalas which the learned Subordinate Judge has found to be sham transactions and without consideration. On the strength of these alleged purchases they obtained the concurrence of the other three Plaintiffs and filed this suit on 21st April 1910. The suit is obviously a purely speculative one brought by Plaintiffs Nos. 1 and 2. Finding that the value of the property in the locality had materially increased since 1898 they purchased this litigation with a view of making some profit out of it.

The only question with which we need deal is that of the sale in 1898. The learned Subordinate Judge has found that it was a perfectly good sale, that the interests of the minors passed and that the sale cannot now be rescinded. If the point be decided against the Plaintiffs it is obviously unnecessary to go into the further question, which the learned Subordinate Judge has also decided against them, namely, as to the validity of their own purchase from Mullickjan and Romjan Banu.

It has been argued that the sale in 1898 by Ayesha was in some way or other a fraud upon the minors. We had some difficulty in ascertaining from the learned Vakil for the Appellants what was the precise fraud which he now alleged. There is no doubt what was the fraud alleged in the plaint. But he stated here that the fraud of which he complained was that Syed Ali the elder brother of the minors misappropriated the money for which their shares in the property had been sold. Of that there is no evidence at all upon the record, and it need hardly be stated that if that were the fraud alleged the cause of action would be totally different. The suit would not be against Defendants Nos. 1 to 5 but against Syed Ali as having misappropriated the minor's property.

It has been suggested that the sale by Ayesha Bibi was defective because it was made under a conditional order of the District Judge and that the condition was not fulfilled. We agree with the learned Subordinate Judge in saying that the condition which the District Judge imposed was not a condition precedent affecting the sale but a condition subsequent, imposed in order that he might satisfy himself that Ayesha Bibi had properly applied the money realised by the sale in the discharge of the minor's debts. Had the learned District Judge imposed a condition such as that found in sec. 31,

(3) (a) of the Guardians and Wards Act (Act VIII of 1890) the sale could not have been completed without the sanction of the Court. He, however, did not do so, and we presume that he did not intend to do so. The condition which he imposed that the bonds should be shown to him fully discharged would not and could not affect the sale. It is obvious that the bonds could not be so produced before him until the sale had been completed, the money had been paid, and the sale proceeds had been applied in the discharge of the bonds.

Then it has been said the debts alleged did not in fact exist and that there was no bond out-standing against the estate of Amanulla for which the minors would have been liable. As to this we have no evidence on the record. The evidence that we have points to the bonds having been in existence and we have the registered receipts of the holders of these bonds that their debts had been discharged. The District Judge must have satisfied himself before granting the leave to sell that there were debts out-standing which had to be cleared off.

Then it is urged that the minors' estate would not have been liable for the whole sum of Rs. 921 said to be due upon those bonds, that they would be liable only in proportion to their share in Amanulla's property. This is perfectly true and must have been apparent to the District Judge when he granted the sanction. There is no reason to suppose that the number of heirs of Amanulla was concealed from him or that he was given to understand that the four minors were the only surviving children.

Then it has been suggested that the sale was for an inadequate price and in support of this reference has been made to the present prices said to be ruling for this and neighbouring property. There appears to be no force in this argument. We think it is a very strong circumstance in favour of the sale by the minors that the widow and major children of Aman-ulla were selling their shares at the very same time to the same people for a price much the same as was obtained for the minors' shares. The price paid for the minors' shares was indeed a little higher. This seems to put beyond all doubt the question of the bonâ fides of the sale in 1898.

It was alleged in the plaint that Defendants Nos. 1 to 5 were acting in some way in collusion with Syed Ali and his brothers-in-law Karim and Dengu Patari. Of this there is no evidence at all on the record, that can be believed. It is suggested that these persons were scheming in some way to defraud the minors. But this sale was duly carried out. The money was undoubtedly received and it is in evidence that Ayesha Bibi applied some of the money in building another bari to which she removed with her minor children.

There is one other fact urged with regard to the sale that it has not been shown as alleged in Ayesha's petition that the land was in fact, being washed away. The Plaintiff No. 1, Diam Khan, admits that there was some washing away by the khal. That, however, though given as a reason for the sale, could not be an essential condition for the sale.

The last point is whether the sale in 1898 which was carried through with the leave of the Court was a proper sale at a fair price. There is no doubt upon the evidence on the record that it was.

We accordingly agree with the Subordinate Judge in holding that the transfer to the principal Defendants in 1898 was valid and binding on the minors whose shares were thus transferred. It is unnecessary to investigate the title of the Plaintiffs Nos. 1 and 2.

The result is that this appeal must be dismissed with costs. Hearing fee Rs. 25.

SYED JIAUL HASAN
KHAN SYED SIRAJUL HASAN KHAN,
Respondent.

Pre-emption—Property owned by Mahomedans—Sale by a co-sharer to a Hindu, on the assumption that other co-sharers were to have the right to pre-empt—Right of pre-emption of latter—Vendor if may prescribe special conditions not imposed by law—Agreement of sale understood by parties as and represented to be sale—Accrual of right of pre-emption—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882) sec. 54, if determines date of sale.

Where in property owned by Mahomedans, co-owners entitled to a fourth share agreed to sell their share to certain persons who were Hindus, and in pursuance of the agreement, the vendors intimated to the remaining co-sharer that they had sold their share as aforesaid and gave the latter two days' time within which to exercise his right of pre-emption:

Held—That as all the parties had considered that there was a law of pre-emption which applied between the vendors and their co-sharer and that it was applicable to the purchasers, who too had assented to that view, it was not necessary to enquire whether there was a local custom of pre-emption or whether it could be enforced by a Mahomedan against a Hindu purchaser.

SITARAM BHURAQ DESHMUKH v. SYED JIAUL HASAN KHAN.

That the general law of pre-emption being what the parties contemplated as applying to the case, it was not open to the vendors to impose conditions other than those prescribed by that law for the exercise of the option of pre-emption.

That the vendors and the vendees having regarded the sale as complete at the date of the agreement, that was the date with reference to which the requisite religious or other formalities had to be performed.

JADU LAL SAHU v. JANKI KOER (1) referred to.

The Transfer of Property Act was not intended to alter directly or indirectly the Mahomedan law of pre-emption as it previously existed.

BEGAM v. MOHAMMAD YAKUB (2) approved.

Appeal from a decree, dated 5th February 1917, of the High Court at Bombay, affirming a decree, dated the 4th December 1913 of the Additional First Class Subordinate Judge at Thana.

The facts of the case sufficiently appear from the judgment.

Sir G. R. Lowndes, K. C. (with Mr. J. M. Parikh) for the Appellants.—The question is, is the law of Mahomedan pre-emption part of the law of Bombay. In Madras it does not apply. In Punjab and Oudh, it applies by statute. Bombay has not yet decided on this. I say Mahomedan law of pre-emption does not apply. Again among the Hanafi sect this right is a personal right and so the right dies with him. The other side contended that he was a Shafi. The District Judge found he was a Hanafi. The case was abated. But the High Court held that the man was a Hanafi but they would revive the law of pre-emption in favour of the heir and they sent it to the District Court to try it on the general questions of Mahomedan law.

[LORD ATKINSON.—In the deed you provide for pre-emption.]

If the uncle was willing to purchase we were willing to let him have it on our own condition. The suit is filed not on contract at all but on Mahomedan law.

[LORD HALDANE.—Is sec. 54, Transfer of Property Act, different from English law? Do rights acquired under a contract to purchase in English law differ from those under Hindu law?]

Jadu Lal Sahu v. Janki Koer (1) is authority and defines rights under a right to pre-emption, at p. 597.

Mahomedan law is applicable to India only so far as statute has laid it down. The only other instances are a few under the rule of equity and good conscience. You cannot have a title under Mahomedan law till the conveyance is completed and the vendor must have divested himself of all his rights. The right of pre-emption is an infirmity attached to the title or something which comes in only later.

Farman Khan v. Bhurat Chandra (3).

[SIR JOHN EDGE.—We decided, I believe in Begam v. Mohammad Yakub (2), that the Transfer of Property Act did not apply to pre-emption under Mahomedan law.]

This point in Jadu Lal Sahu v. Janki Koer (1) was not argued before the Privy Council. If your Lordships hold that I gave an option on this under the Mahomedan law to the vendee, then I cannot get beyond this. The case in Bombay holds that Mahomedan law is overruled by the Transfer of Property Act.

Mahomed Beg Amir Beg v. Narayan Meghaji (4).

This right of pre-emption exists, however, in certain parts of Bombay by custom.

Mr. Parikh.—Even under Mahomedan law there was no complete sale. Jadu Lal Sahu v. Janki Koer (1) holds that even if the vendor says it is sold it must be confirmed by outside evidence.

Under Mahomedan law no sale is complete unless the purchase-money is paid and possession is transferred. "Intention" alone is insufficient. What has happened here is only a contract of sale and is not a complete sale under the Mahomedan law, Begam v. Mohammad Yakub (2).

Mr. L. DeGruyther, K. C. and Mr. Raikes for the Respondent were not called upon to reply.

VISCOUNT HALDANE.—In this case several points have been referred to in the course of the argument which, if they arose, would be of great importance; but in the view their Lordships take, these points do not arise, and they therefore find themselves in a position to intimate at once the advice which they will tender to His Majesty.

The suit in which the question arises was brought by the original Plaintiff, who was the father of the present Respondent, as administrator, to recover from the Appellants a quarter undivided share in two villages, on the ground that the original Plaintiff was entitled to a right of pre-emption in regard to them under Mohomedan law. The question is whether the original Plaintiff had such a right of pre-emption. The case was heard before the Additional Subordinate Judge at Thana, and it went to the High Court at Bombay on appeal. It came before the Additional Subordinate Judge and before the High Court on various interlocutory points, but finally a decision was given on the issue defined by the Subordinate Judge, and that decision was affirmed by the High Court on somewhat different grounds, which are sufficient, in their Lordships' opinion, to dispose of the merits of the case.

The original Plaintiff, who is now dead, was in the middle of October 1908, entitled, as co-sharer with his nephew, to the two villages. The original Plaintiff had an undivided three-fourths' share, and the nephew had the remaining undivided quarter. On the 14th October 1908, the nephew sold to the present Appellants, who are Hindus. The document is called by the parties a deed of agreement of sale, and it states that the nephew being the owner of the fourth share in the two villages, certain persons, including the Appellants, have agreed to purchase the same for Rs. 29,999, Rs. 1,000 paid down, and the remainder payable in two quick instalments, and that there was to be a pukka deed of sale, which it was obviously contemplated would be registered. Then they say this, which is important:—

"You" (that is, the nephew) "should also give us a copy of the notice which you have to-day given to the owner of the three-fourths' share, and a receipt of the notice which he will receive on the day of the sale deed."

And a little further on:—

"If the owner of the three-fourths' share is willing to purchase your said share, and if you and he agree to purchase, you should immediately return to us the rupees which you have received from us."

That is an important document because

(2) I. L. R. 40 All. 344 (F. B.) (1894).

SITARAM BEAURAO DESHMUKH v. SYED JIAUL HASAN KHAN.

It shows not only that the parties considered that they had a full preliminary deed of contract of sale, to be carried out, no doubt, by a pukka deed to be registered afterwards, but they knew that under whatever was the law, the uncle might have a right of pre-emption under Moham-medan law or under some other law, and the whole transaction was made subject to the exercise by the uncle of that right. That they knew this is plain from the document itself, and contemporaneously with it there was a letter written by the nephew to the uncle, also on the 14th October 1908, which is in these terms:—

“My dear Uncle, I beg to intimate that I have this day sold my one-quarter share in the villages of Wahal and Patadhi, for a sum of Rs. 29,999, to”—the first Appellant and his brothers. “As you are an Inamdar of the three-fourths’ share in the said villages I give you this notice that if you are desirous of purchasing the said villages for the sum aforesaid, you will be good enough to send me a cheque for the amount, viz., Rs. 29,999, by return of post, and in the event of your not replying to this, or paying the money within two days after receipt hereof, I shall, without any further intimation to you, close the bargain and obtain the sale proceeds.”

The effect of that, which was obviously the document which the Appellants contemplated should be sent, appears to their Lordships to be a recognition that the uncle had a right of purchase as pre-emptor under the law which was treated as applying. It is far from clear that if that were true the nephew had the right to say: “If you do not reply to this letter or pay off the money within two days after receipt hereof, I will close the bargain and obtain the sale proceeds.” On the contrary, the effect of the document is an intimation, an admission, that there is a law of pre-emption which is doubtless, from the way in which it is referred to, a general law, and that the uncle holds under that general law. It is therefore to the general law that reference has to be made to see what these rights were. The uncle took the view, which indeed if the letter addressed to him were true he was entitled to take, that there had been a sale. The letter says: “I have this day sold my one-quarter share.” The uncle thereupon performed the ceremonies—there are concurrent findings that the ceremonies were fully performed—and asserted his rights. He died, and ultimately an administrator was appointed in whom his right, such as it was, was treated by the Courts below as having vested, the reason being this: that it was not a case of an unexercised option which was said to have passed to the administrator, but an option which the uncle in his lifetime had actually exercised, because the uncle, almost immediately upon the 17th October 1908, gave through his solicitor a formal notice to the vendor, declaring his intention to exercise his right of pre-emption and asking for the address of the purchaser and inspection of the deeds. The nephew, taking the view that the uncle had not complied with the terms of his—the nephew’s—letter within two days after receipt thereof, and that he had lost his rights, went on with the transaction. Whether he was within the time or not is not clear, because there is some evidence that the letter of the 14th October 1908, was not received until the afternoon of the 15th, and two days from the date of the receipt thereof, which was the expression used in the letter of the 14th, would not be until the 17th, and the letter of explanation is dated the 17th October. However, it is not necessary to go into that, because if the view suggested is the correct one, the rights of the parties would be governed, not by the mere terms of the letter, but by the general law.

SITARAM BEAURAO DESHMUKH v. SYED JIAUL HASAN KHAN.

The uncle having died, his administrator brings the suit to recover the land. The nephew had parted with it to the Hindus, assuring them that their right was a right that was incontestable, inasmuch as the uncle had not come forward within the time stipulated, and that they could safely complete, which they did, and ultimately a sale deed to them was registered. The proceedings are proceedings on the part of the representative of the uncle to get the land back. The learned Subordinate Judge who decided in favour of the Respondent did so on a variety of grounds, but when the case came to the High Court, the learned Judges there thought that it was not necessary to go into the question whether there was a local custom of pre-emption, or whether, if there was, it could be enforced by a Mohammedan entitled to it against a Hindu purchaser, which was another important point made in the case, the Appellants being Hindus, or whether, if there was a mere right of pre-emption, it could be enforced against a purchaser with notice of it, because they said the simple and obvious way of dealing with the matter was that all the parties had considered that there was a law of pre-emption which applied between the vendor and his co-sharer and that it was applicable to the purchaser, and that the Appellants had, in effect, assented to that view. Upon the question when the sale had taken place, which was material, inasmuch as it was with regard to that date that the question of whether the requisite religious and other formalities had been performed at the proper time must be determined, they thought they ought to look to what the parties represented to each other, and they followed a decision of the Calcutta High Court in a case of Jadu Lal Sahu v. Janki Koor (1). In that case there was a question as to whether there had been a sale for the purpose of determining the application of the Mahomedan principle of pre-emption, and the learned Judges who decided it laid down that the real solution was to be found in determining in each case what was the intention of the parties. In the case before them they thought there was no doubt that the vendor and vendee did not regard the sale as a complete sale until the price had been paid and the deed registered.

In the present case their Lordships agree with the learned Judges in the Bombay High Court in thinking that the parties represented a full sale as having taken place on the 14th October 1908, sufficient to justify the uncle in proceeding at once to the ceremonies, and treating that as the crucial time. The view taken by the High Court is consistent with what was said in the case of Begam v. Mohammad Yakub (2). The Chief Justice, Sir John Edge, there observes, at page 351, in connection with the question whether the Transfer of Property Act, which required registration, had altered the principle of the Mohammedan law, which determined what was a sale for the purposes of the date in reference to which the ceremonies should be performed:—

"I cannot think that it was the intention of the Legislature, in passing Act No. IV of 1882" (the Transfer of Property Act), "to alter directly or indirectly the Mahomedan law of pre-emption as it existed and was understood for centuries prior to the passing of Act No. IV of 1882."

That at all events is in harmony with the conclusion come to by the High Court at Bombay. The conclusion is, that you are to look at the intention of the parties in determining what system of law was to be taken as applying and what was to be taken to be the date of the sale with reference to which the ceremonies were performed. That view is expressed at length in the judgment of the High Court, and their Lordships agree with it. If that view is right, as their Lordships think it is, it disposes of the whole of the controversy in this case, with the result that the appeal fails and must be dismissed with costs, and their Lordships will therefore humbly advise His Majesty accordingly.

v.

BADAN SINGH, and ors., Respondents.

Hindu law—Family custom—Migration of family carrying custom of primogeniture—Custom if necessarily ceases with the cesser of office.

In a suit for partition of family properties, the principal Defendant claimed that succession in the family was governed by the rule of primogeniture, the properties being in consequence impartible and as such belonging exclusively to him as the holder of the gaddi and the title of Rana. It was not disputed that the family to which the parties belonged were Chohan Rajpoots who had migrated from their original homes into the Nimar District in the Central Provinces:

Held—That the presumption was that they carried with them to their new homes the customs and institutions to which they were subject in the land of their birth.

That the evidence showed that the custom of primogeniture which the family brought with them continued to govern the family under the Mahomedan, the Marhatta and the British rules up to the present time, and that the existence of the family as an entity through so many centuries was mainly owing to this custom, and the theory favoured in the Judicial Commissioner's Court that after the head of the family ceased to be the holder of a hereditary fiscal office, the junior members must naturally assert themselves as share-holders according to the ordinary Hindu law which in consequence would displace the custom was based on a priori reasoning of a speculative character.

The mere cessation of services to which watan lands are attached which are by custom impartible does not ordinarily destroy that custom.

RAMRAO v. YESHWANTRAO (1) approved.

This was an appeal from a decision of the Court of the Judicial Commissioner, Central Provinces.

The facts of the case will appear sufficiently from the judgment.

Sir Erle Richard, K. C. (with Mr. E. B. Raikes) for the Appellant.—The early history of the custom of primogeniture amongst Rajpoots in this province is given in Rao Kishore Singh v. Mumtaz Gahenabai (2) by Lord Atkinson. See also Captain Forsyth's Report, secs. 34, 38 and 111. References to this family occur at secs. 117, 135, 241 and 269. I want to establish that the old system of impartibility has not been changed.

[LORD SHAW.—That decision establishes that the discontinuance of the reasons for the existence of a custom does not alter the character of impartibility once it has been firmly established.]

The Judicial Commissioner says that this family is similar to the one treated as impartible in this Board's judgment.

There is this ancient custom of impartibility and as far as pedigree goes this is kept up. Property has always been with the eldest son.

Todd's Rajasthan (1829), Vol. II, p. 307. Primogeniture prevails in all Rajpoot families. Also Todd, Vol. I, p. 117. Forsyth, secs. 111, 118, 119, 33, 43, 59, 113, 128 and 111. There was sub-infeudation to members of the family. Pratapsing Shiasing v. Agar-singhji Raising (3). Since Rani Sartaj Kuari v. Deoraj Kuari (4), the Board has treated these families as joint though there was a custom preventing partition.

Mr. L. DeGruyther, K. C. (with Mr. J. M. Parikh) for the Respondents.—Cites Forsyth, sec. 119, Mahomedans recognised them as collectors of revenue only and not as Zamindars. The grants were of jagirs only, a right to take the revenue and not the land. The sanad is a grant of pension and the second sanad is a grant of jagir of the revenue. A custom must be shewn affecting the whole estate. This is the custom alleged; while on the evidence certain villages have not so descended. The pension from the Government is on a totally different footing. The mere fact that certain villages are held by the Raj does not make them im-partible. Impartibility must be proved with regard to every village. Forsyth, p. 182, sec. 241 and p. 135.

The holder of a raj may be able to throw self-acquired property into the impartible estate. Here there is no raj. Therefore family custom must be proved. Evidence of custom has failed, because it is not the sort of evidence that affects this class of property. Forsyth, sec. 269. As regards the two jagirs, they were part and parcel of the office. Three villages were originally so held. There is no doubt also that what these persons held was the revenue. The lands were settled under the settlement rules, while a sanad was given for the revenue. Srimanta Raju Yarlagaddu v. Srimanta Raja Yarlagadda Durga (5).

See Mayne's Hindu Law, sec. 469, Forsyth, sec. 119.

These persons were the watun-dars (office-holders) of the parganas. When the partition was made in 1844, he undoubtedly held the office. Each of the three brothers was to stand in exactly on the same footing as regards the zeerats, etc. There is no doubt as to a partition in 1844.

The settlement officer says, in 1864 sanads were granted to certain members of the family because they were found to be in fact share-holders by the settlement officers.

In 1892, Mahatab Sing says, they were a joint family. Forsyth, sec. 270.

The question of the two villages being held differently was never raised by the Plaintiff. Forsyth, secs. 34 and 59 (secs. 68 and 69). District Gazetteer of Nimar (1908), p. 87, sec. 97. Forsyth, sec. 133 (p. 68), secs. 134, 135 and 156 (p. 141).

In 1844 there was no real partition as in that case shares should have been equal. In 1866 (in the settlement) we find the eldest son is in possession of more than his proportionate share. There is an instance of one claiming merely maintenance without partition. Forsyth, sec. 269. Ramakanta v. Shyamanand (6) does not bear on this.

MR. AMER ALI.—This is an appeal from a judgment and decree of the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of the Central Provinces bearing date the 19th of April 1917, which, reversing the order of the District Judge of Nimar on the preliminary issue on which he had disposed of the suit, remanded the case for a further decision upon the merits. The present appeal to this Board is from that remand order. The facts of the suit have been set out at considerable length in the judgments of the two Courts in India. Their Lordships are thus relieved of the necessity of dealing with them at any length.

The parties to the action, excepting the second Plaintiff, are members of an old Rajpoot family settled in the District of Nimar for several centuries. Their possessions, which the Judicial Commissioners not without reason think must have been at one time considerable, have now dwindled to two revenue-free or muafi villages, Nadia and Pangra, two revenue-paying or malguzari villages, Peplod and Jirvan, and certain zirat and sir lands. The Plaintiff, Badan Singh, who is the younger brother of the principal and contesting Defendant, Mahatab Singh, alleges that upon the death of their father Umed Singh in 1892, he along with Mahatab and another brother Nirbhe Singh, who has since died, became entitled upon partition, as members of a joint Hindu family, each to a one-third share in the family property. He further alleged that his cause of action arose when he was ousted from joint possession in 1909, the Defendant having turned him out of the family dwelling-house. He accordingly sued for a decree for partition and for possession of his share. The second Plaintiff, who is the clerk of the pleader in the action and is admittedly financing the litigation, is the assignee from Badan Singh of a 4-anna share in the revenue-free villages, the most valuable part of the family property.

The suit was filed on the 20th September 1910, and the sons of Nirbhe Singh were made parties, as representing that branch of the family. The Defendant Mahatab, whilst admitting that the properties were ancestral, denied the right of the Plaintiff to obtain a partition. He alleged that by the custom that had prevailed in the family from time immemorial the property devolved on a single heir by the rule of lineal primogeniture, who alone was entitled to the gaddi and to the title of Rana which had existed in the family "from the time of Gourishah Badshah." He further alleged that by the custom of the family the junior members had a right only to maintenance and not to any share in the property. The principal controversy between the parties thus centred round this alleged custom, and the Dis-strict Judge among the points for determination made this the first issue in the case. It is in these terms :—

“Is there any custom of primogeniture in the family of the Plaintiff I and Defendants, and is Defendant I, for that reason, entitled to the whole of the family property to the exclusion of the Plaintiff I?”

The following genealogical table will explain the relative position of the parties and of the collaterals who have been examined in the case.

A considerable body of evidence was produced on behalf of the Defendant in support of the custom, and the District Judge examined it minutely in conjunction with the negative evidence on the Plaintiff's side. He dealt first with the oral testimony and then discussed with equal minuteness the documentary evidence, referring only to those, as he says, “on which the parties had relied when arguing the case.”

The conclusions which he drew from the oral evidence are expressed in the following words :—

“From the history of succession as shown by the oral evidence, it will be seen that the eldest son in each generation has succeeded to the gaddi and estate, while the younger members got land and pensions for maintenance. We find Hatesingh succeeding his elder brother Pitambar Singh, and his younger brothers and their sons remaining contented with maintenance. We next find Naharsingh, the eldest son, succeeding his father Hatesingh, and his two younger brothers and their sons remaining contented with maintenance.

We next find Umedsingh, the eldest son, succeeding his father Naharsingh, and his younger brother and his son remaining contented with maintenance. And it is many years after Defendant No. 1 succeeded his father that his youngest brother has disputed the custom which has regulated the succession for so many years and for three previous generations. Why should the younger brothers of Hatesingh, Naharsingh and Umedsingh have remained contented with maintenance if there was no custom of primogeniture? They remained quiet and their descendants are not asserting any claim to a share because the former knew, and the latter know, that only the eldest son succeeds to the gaddi and the estate and the title of ‘Rana.’”

It is to be observed that the first Plaintiff who started the case with the title of Rana attached to his name abandoned in the Court of the Judicial Commissioner any claim to the gaddi or to the title of Rana. The significance of this disclaimer does not appear to have been quite appreciated by the Appellate Court. It predicates the existence of a gaddi to which appears to be attached the title of Rana.

RANA MAHATAB SINGH v. BADAN SINGH.

dating its origin according to the Defendant's case based on family tradition, to the Ghoree Kings who held Nimar in the 14th Century.

Dealing with the documentary evidence on both sides he considered it consistent only with one hypothesis, viz. : The existence of the custom against partibility. He summed up his conclusion in the following words : " After a careful consideration of the evidence on both sides, I have no hesitation in finding the first issue in the affirmative." He accordingly dismissed the Plaintiff's suit.

On appeal the Judicial Commissioners have taken a different view. After analysing the evidence in great detail, they give their theory as to the status of this family.

They say, " We have summed up what we believe to be the history of the subject in our judgment in First Appeal No. 10 of 1911 already referred to." And then go on to observe :—

" Again, when the head of the family became the holder of a hereditary fiscal office, it was still necessary to apply a rule of primogeniture for succession to the office. But now the once ruler of the family had become merely the representative of the family for the management of such property and the receipts of such perquisite as attached to the hereditary office. Thereupon the ordinary Hindu law began to be reinstated, and junior members asserted themselves as share-holders. Still, while the ruling power recognised only the office-holder, the 'younger sons' were still to some extent under his sway, and their shares at his disposal. But the recurring demand for shares, and the advance of socialism in the family, due to education and the evanescence of all real authority in the head, made permanent partitions of estate necessary. The subsistence which the younger brother once received as a favour from the lord of the manor now became a share claimed by him as a right, ever increasing in quantum towards that equality which is favoured by the ordinary Hindu law from which only the particular circumstances had for a time diverted enjoyment of the family property."

The particular litigation (Appeal No. 11 of 1911) to which they refer related to the neighbouring estate of Bamgurh, where the head of the family or chief is styled Rao and not Rana as in the present case. This family is not pure Rajpoot, having intermarried in the long course of ages with the Bhils, the highest of the aboriginal races in that part of India. The family is thus called Bhil-halla. They also have a gaddi and from the public records produced in this case, particularly Captain Forsyth's report and the Gazetteer of the Nimar District published under the authority of Government, it is clear that the two families of Bamgurh and of Peplod (with which the present case is concerned) are intimately associated. The chief of Bamgurh, it is stated, installs the Rana of Peplod on the gaddi and places the teka or mark of chiefship on his forehead. It may be mentioned by the way that the Peplod family belong to the Chohan clan of Rajpoots which played a distinguished part in the history of mediæval India, and that the title of Rana is the same as that borne by the Maharaja of Odeypur who is styled Maharana. In early Mahommedan history he bore the title of Rana. In the Bamgurh case, the identical question relating to the custom of impartibility was raised in the same form as here. The District Judge, a different officer from the Judge in the present case, had found the issue in favour of the custom. The Court of the Judicial Commissioner, composed of the same Judges who have decided the present case, proceeding on the theory already referred to, came to a different conclusion and held against the existence of the custom of impartibility in regard to the Bamgurh estate. On appeal to the Board, their Lordships in reversing the judgment of the Judicial Commissioners quoted the very passage referred to and observed as follows: "It is unnecessary to determine whether this reasoning would be sound as applied to any case. It is sufficient to say the facts which it assumes and upon which it is based do not exist in the present case." The decision of the Appellate Court makes it necessary to consider once more whether the reasoning in question applies to the facts of the case now before the Board. Having regard solely to the question relating to custom, it seems to their Lordships that two distinct periods of time should be kept in mind, viz., that before the establishment of British rule in this part of the country and that subsequent to its acquisition by the East India Company. The District of Nimar with the adjacent territories or such portion of it as belonged to Scindia was taken over by the British between 1823 and 1825 for purposes of management. In 1844, says Mr. Morris, the Chief Commissioner of the Central Provinces in 1870, the sequestration was confirmed by the Treaty of Maharajpur. There was a settlement in 1856 for twenty years, which was revised in 1866. In connection with this settlement the task of preparing a comprehensive record of the conditions prevailing in the District was entrusted to Capt. Forsyth. His report on the revenue settlement of Nimar embodies the result of a searching inquiry into the customs and traditions among the tribes and clans inhabiting the soil and the system of taxation and administration under the former rule. His account of the principal Rajpoot families of the District is not the least interesting feature of the report.

It is not disputed that this particular family of Chohan Rajpoots migrated from their original homes under the pressure of Mahomedan arms into what is now called the Central Provinces. They established themselves in the Nimar District where they have lived ever since, with the exception of one short vicissitude in the reign of Ala-ud-Din Khilji towards the end of the 13th Century. It may safely and reasonably be assumed that they carried with them to their new homes the customs and institutions to which they were subject in the land of their birth. Colonel Todd, who, for many years in the early part of the 19th Century, was Political Agent to the Governor-General in Rajpootana, in his valuable work on the Rajpoots writes as follows:—

"It may be of use in future negotiations to explain the usages which govern the different States of Rajpootana in respect to succession. The law of primogeniture prevails in all Rajpoot sovereignties: . . . the inconclusive dicta of Manu on this as on many other points, are never appealed to by the Rajpoots of modern days; custom and precedent fix the right of succession, whether the gaddi of the State or to a fief in the eldest son. . . ." "Seniority is, in fact, a distinction pervading all ranks of life, whether in royal families or those of chieftains."*

In this connection, Captain Forsyth's observations in his Report (para. 3) deserve notice.

"The Rajpoots brought with them the institutions of their race. Each chief remained independent, if he could, or became the feudal vassal of a stronger, still the lord and master of his domain, but rendering military service for his fief. The succession to the gaddi (throne) was by primogeniture, but all descendants or cadets of the house were provided for by assignments from the productive lands of the chiefship, to be held also on tenure of military service; and so the subinfeudation proceeded, until the Rajpoots themselves began to till the land. Then personal military service became impossible except on rare occasions, and a rent in kind took its place as the condition of tenure. Still the land held by each cultivator was his property, subject to the payment of this rent. This is also shown by the terms of all early grants of arable lands by the Rajpoot princes as religious endowments, in which the rents only are assigned and the Crown tenants are enjoined to pay the same to the assignees."

This clearly was the custom which the Rajpoot settlers brought with them; and it remained intact throughout the Mohomedan rule. The historian Ferishta clearly indicates that until the close of the Ghoris and Farookee rule the feudal system among the chiefs of Nimar from whom the kings of those dynasties chiefly drew their armies was fully maintained. This tract of country was incorporated in the dominions of Akbar about the end of the 16th Century. His Institutes and all the contemporaneous records show that beyond relieving the cultivating classes from the burdens to which they had been subjected under their former rulers, altering the assessment of rent and revenue to lighten its incidence, and improving the administration, he left untouched the domestic and internal institutions of the people, the chiefs as well as the masses. In his work on "The Highlands of Central India," Captain Forsyth gives in a few graphic sentences the pith of Akbar's policy:—

"The impetus given to the development and civilisation of the dark regions of India by the wise rule of that greatest of eastern administrators can never be overrated. Before the absorption into his Empire of the minor Hindu and Mahomedan States, their history is one of a continuous lawlessness and strife; and the further we investigate, the more certainly we perceive that political order, the supremacy of law, and principles of taxation, a wise land system, and almost every art of civilised government owe their birth to this enlightened ruler. His treatment of these unsettled wilds and their people was marked with the same political wisdom. While, in the surrounding countries, which had already been in a measure reclaimed by Hindu races, he everywhere broke up the feudal system, under which strong government and permanent improvement were impossible, he asked no more from the chiefs of these waste regions than nominal submission to his Empire, and the preservation of the peace of the realm. Those on his borders, he converted into a frontier police, and the rest he left to administer their country in their own fashion. Acknowledgment of his supremacy he insisted on, however; and in case of refusal sent his generals and armies who very soon convinced the barbarous chiefs of their powerlessness in his hands. The influence of his power and splendour rapidly extended itself over even this remote region. The chiefs became courtiers, accepted with pride imperial favours and titles, and in some cases were even converted to the fashionable faith of Islam."

This policy of non-interference with the internal and domestic institutions of the chiefs and the people was wisely maintained throughout the Mogul rule, and was hardly disturbed even in the Mahratta times. In tracts largely settled by new and industrious immigrants from other parts of India he converted the feudal chief into a fiscal officer. Forsyth (Report, para. 119) thus sums up the general result of Akbar's policy:

"The feudal domination of the lord of the tract, or tappa, over all its villages was thus generally abolished; but in lieu of it the chiefs, besides retaining the headship (as Patels) of the villages actually in their own occupation, were further generally constituted the hereditary Zemindars, or fiscal officers, of their tracts (vide para. 113) with huqs (rights) of considerable value in the shape of percentages of revenue, collections and dues from the practisers of trades, &c."

Constant references will be found in the documentary evidence to the Pergunah Zemindar of Peplod indicating his position in the fiscal system of the Moguls;

RANA MAHATAB SINGH v. BADAN SINGH.

Before coming to the modern history, so to speak, of the family, it may be useful to refer to some observations in the Nimar Gazetteer.

'It first states that "the District contains a number of families of long standing, some of whom enjoyed important positions under native rule." It then goes on to say :—

"So far as can be ascertained succession goes by primogeniture in the families of the Mandlois of Khandwa, the Rana of Peplod, the Rao of Mandhata, the Thakur of Jeswari, the Thakur of Ghatakheri, the Rana of Punasa, the Thakur of Khandwa, the Mandloi of Beria and the Maslai, Bhamgarh and Selda families. On succession to the gaddi or headship of the house representatives of these families are marked with a teka or badge on the forehead and sometimes presented with a sword, and the investiture may be carried out by custom by the head of another house. Thus the investiture of the Rana of Peplod is performed by the Rao of Bhamgarh. Rajput landholders usually have the title of Rana or Thakur, and Bhilalas those of Rao Rawat."

This particular family is again referred to in paragraph 100 : "Among the Rajpoots the Chohan family of the Rana of Peplod is the most ancient, and the ancestors of the family are believed to have been at Asirgarh in the 12th Century when it was sacked by Ala-ud-din Khilji. The family regularly resort to Asirgarh to pay their devotions to their tutelary goddess Artapari, whose shrine is in the fort. Rana Mahatab Singh (the Defendant in this action) is about 40 years old and has four villages of which two are held revenue-free."

These references seem sufficient to show that the custom which this family brought from its ancient home continued for a long course of ages. Is there anything to lead to the conclusion that it was at any time abandoned or interrupted and that the family has ceased to be under the custom? One fact is obvious, that had the ordinary Hindu law prevailed in the family, it would long ago have merged in the general population, and there would have been no gaddi and no Rana. It is the custom and custom alone which seems to their Lordships to have kept it intact. The pedigree set out at the beginning of this judgment goes back to Jaswant Singh, who died somewhere in the forties and was succeeded on the gaddi by his eldest son Pitambar Singh.

The Defendant has, however, produced a genealogy which traces the family for twenty-four generations and is in accord with what Capt. Forsyth says in his Report (para. 43). The correctness of this genealogy does not appear to have been disputed and it was admitted in evidence apparently without objection. Pitambar Singh had three brothers, Hate Singh, Ratan Singh and Kesre Singh.

In 1844 there seem to have been some differences among the brothers regarding their "watandari" and "huqs." The matter appears to have been referred to the Political Agent, and at his instance or suggestion it was submitted to arbitration, when an arrangement was arrived at under which the four brothers divided the income arising from various sources and the zirat lands in some of the villages, leaving absolutely intact to Pitambar Singh "the zirats and villages which are in the Pergunah and belong to the Raj." This arrangement is embodied in Ex. 1 D. 36, dated the 14th of August 1844. The ground on which these villages forming the principal landed property of the family was left in the hands of the eldest brother is sufficiently indicative of the character and right in which he took them. The three younger brothers claimed no share in them.

For a proper apprehension of the con-

tentions in this case it is necessary to mention what these "watan-dari" rights and "huqs" are. It has been from ancient times customary almost throughout India for the superior holder of the soil, whether he was a feudal "baron," as Captain Forsyth calls these Rajpoot chiefs, or principal fiscal officer appointed by government, to levy certain dues, the nature of which can be judged from the list in Ex. 1 D. 36. In Bengal, these dues or cesses were called abwabs; in the Central Provinces and the Bombay Presidency, "huq," an Arabic word meaning "dues" or "right." Akbar appears to have reduced the capricious levy of these "dues," and regulated the system. These dues were made part of the emolument attached to the office, and as the office became hereditary the representative of the family who took up the office took it with the obligation of using the perquisites for the maintenance of the family. The old Zemindars were placed in the same position. Again in the Deccan when the Zemindar was appointed as a fiscal officer, lands were granted to him by way of additional emolument under the name of watan, the income arising from such lands being called by the same name. Again as the office became hereditary, the lands came into the hands of the next holder with the same obligation. Captain Forsyth describes the origin of these watans in para. 133.

It is contended in this case that when the Zemindar of Peplod was deprived of his office, the custom of impartibility ceased to have operation. From Ex. 1 D. 36 it would appear that the family had some watan lands and the expression watan occurs at least in that document. It is to be observed that in 1866, as shown in Captain Forsyth's order to which reference will be made later, there was no "watundar Patel" in these Mouzals. In other words there was no separate fiscal officer holding watan lands by virtue of his office. Thus the duty of realising the watan and huqs devolved on the Zemindar. Besides, the mere cessation of services to which watan lands are attached, which are by custom impartible, does not ordinarily destroy that custom. This view is in accord with the decision of the Bombay High Court in Ramrao v. Yeshvantrao (1), where it was held that "discontinuance of services attached to an impartible watan does not alter the nature of the estate and make it partible." There is a further answer to the Respondents' contention: the present suit does not relate to watan or huqs; it is with respect to property declared in 1844 to belong to the Raj, which all the parties recognised to be an existing fact. The penultimate cl. (27) of Ex. 1 D. 36 shows exactly the position of Pitambar in relation to the custom in dispute. As the holder of the Raj and the representative of the family, the duty is laid on him to defray the contingent village expenses such as "expenses for guests, charities, liha Dakhoda and other miscellaneous expenses." It is stated significantly "the other three brothers have nothing to do with these things."

The report of the official deputed by the Political Agent to ascertain whether the differences between the brothers were settled throws no further light on the controversy. The subsequent conduct of the parties to the arrangement leads irresistibly to the conclusion that the acquiescence of all Jaswant's descendants until the present dispute, to the ancestral property being held by one member and he, the eldest in the direct male line, must have been due only to a long-established custom. Pitambar Singh died without leaving any male issue; he was succeeded on the gaddi and in the possession of the "Raj" estate by the next oldest brother Hate Singh, and no question seems to have been raised by Ratan or Kesre. On this point the evidence of Ratan Singh's son, Jit Singh, the eldest surviving male member, is most material. He states :—

"Rama Jaswant Singh was my grandfather. He had four sons, namely. Pitambar, Hatesingh, Kesre and my father in order of seniority. Jaswant Singh and Pitambar Singh died before I was born. I only saw Hate Singh, Kesre Singh and my father. Pitambar Singh had no issue. Hate Singh was on the gaddi and owner of all the estate, when I came to remember anything. My father and Kesre Singh got no share in the estate, but only got maintenance allowance and land for cultivation. When the settlement was made by Government, my father and Kesre Singh each got Rs. 50 yearly pension, 30 bighas land for cultivation in Peplod, and a house for residence. The rest of the family estate went to the eldest branch, which was represented in my time by Hate Singh."

On Hate Singh's death in 1855 his eldest son Nahar Singh succeeded to the gaddi. Nahar Singh was alive when Captain Forsyth was carrying out his settlement. In his report he refers to Nahar in these terms :—"Others (of the Chohans who had escaped the sword of Ala-ud-din Khilji) are said by tradition to have returned to the Asir hills and to have founded the family of which Rana Nahar Singh, Zemindar of Peplod Pergunah, is the representative." The significance of the word "representative" can hardly be overlooked. Nahar died in 1869, and besides two sons, Umed Singh and Hamir Singh, left two brothers, Sabal Singh and Amar Singh. Of them Jit Singh says as follows :—

"On Nahar Singh's death, his eldest son, Umed Singh, got the gaddi and estate. Umed Singh died in Sambat 1948. Sabal Singh and Amar Singh made no dispute about their shares either with Nahar Singh or with Umed Singh. They lived joint with both of them up to the time of Umed Singh's succession; about a year after Umed Singh's succession his uncles separated from him. When Sabal Singh and Amar Singh separated from Umed Singh they got 15 bighas land at Peplod for cultivation. They laid no claim for a share."

Jit Singh's evidence regarding the fact that his father had no share in the estate but only possessed a field or virat land is corroborated by the schedule attached to the Sanad granted to him (Ratan) in 1865 which only mentions a field of 36 bighas and confirms him in its possession as "free-hold enam." In the same year a Sanad was granted to Nahar, in the schedule to which the two muafi villages are mentioned as his "Jagleer" Mouzahs. The Sanad is in common form, but the powers it gives to the grantee are of a wide character on its face inconsistent with the right of any co-sharer.

Nahar Singh had obtained in 1856 a settlement of the revenue directly with him in respect of the two revenue-paying villages of Peplod and Jirwan. When a new settlement was set on foot in 1866, his application for a renewal of the settlement was opposed by an outsider who, or whose ancestors, had framed the land years before. The settlement officer dismissed the latter's claim "and conferred the whole proprietary right in Mouzah Peplod on the present holder Rana Nahar Singh." Among the grounds on which he made the settlement were that he was "Pergunah Zemindar" and that there was no "Watundar Patel" (fiscal officer in the village); the same was done in the case of Jirwan. In this instance, the settlement officer described the position of Nahar Singh in terms which should not be passed unnoticed. After stating that there is no "watundar patel in the Mouzah" he goes on to say :—

RANA MAHATAB SINGH v. BADAN SINGH.

"The present holder holds the position of Pergunah Zemindar, and is till the chief man in the pergunah and an Honorary Magistrate I consider the facts of his being in possession for the past 10 years with 10 more of his lease to run and of his being descended from Rana Jaswant Singh, who held the Mouzah before the claimant's family had anything to do with it, coupled with his hereditary position in the pergunah, to give him a superior claim."

Nahar Singh died in 1869 and was succeeded by his eldest son Umed Singh. On Umed's death, in 1892, the property attached to the gaddi came into the possession of the Defendant Mahatab Singh, and his name was accordingly entered in the Revenue records without any objection on the part of any member of the family. Soon after Umed's death there arose differences between Mahatab and his uncle Hamir Singh regarding the latter's maintenance; the dispute was referred to arbitration, the chief arbitrator being the Rao of Bhamgarh. The award bears date the 9th of August 1892, there is no trace in the reference to arbitration or in the award that there was any claim on the part of Hamir Singh to a share in the property. On Hamir Singh's death his sons endeavoured to enforce by a suit the provisions of the award against Mahatab, but it was finally held that the rights created thereunder were personal to Hamir Singh.

The Respondents refer to certain statements of Umed and Mahatab inconsistent with the continued existence of the custom alleged by the Defendant. Their Lordships agree with the Appellate Court in not attaching too much weight to statements made under dubious circumstances and for dubious reasons. Some stress was also laid on Captain Machenzie's Report. With respect to this document their Lordships wish to associate themselves with the remarks of the Board in the Bamgarh case.

Their Lordships have carefully reviewed the evidence furnished by the ancient traditions of the family and their recent history, and are forced to dissent from the theory on which the Judicial Commissioners base their decision. That theory proceeds on a priori reasoning of a speculative character. The judgment omits from consideration in the appraisement of the case the existence of the family as an entity through so many centuries which could only survive destruction and disintegration with the help of such a family custom. The traditions relating to its continued observance, without dispute, until Badan Singh came under the influence of his co-Plaintiff are consistent with the proved facts. Their Lordships are of opinion that the judgment and decree under appeal should be reversed and the order of the District Judge restored with costs here and in the Appellate Court in India. And their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly.

Judgment, 1, November.]

Person in representative capacity, not strictly a trustee, if may delegate his authority.

"Fiduciary duties cannot be made the subject of delegation," so that where property was in the hands of one P, charged with expenses necessary for certain religious and charitable purposes, and P's son purporting to act as P's attorney executed a mourasi mokurari pattah: *

K. S. BONNERJI v. SITANATH DAS.

Held—That the pattah was ultra vires and conveyed no title, for even if P was not in the strictest sense a trustee, his position was none the less a representative one.

Appeal against the decree of the High Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal, dated the 16th December 1918, affirming the decree of the Subordinate Judge of the 24-Parganahs, dated the 14th July 1916.

The suit was brought by the Plaintiff, in his capacity as Receiver appointed by the High Court to eject the present Respondents from land at Tallah.

The Respondents claimed the land as their property granted to them on a permanent lease by a duly authorised trustee. The facts were briefly as follows :—

Hara Chandra Ghose died in 1868 leaving a widow, four sons and two daughters. On the 7th May 1880 these persons executed a deed conveying the property to the widow Padmabati and her eldest son Protap on certain religious and charitable trusts.

In 1900 Padmabati died and Protap became sole trustee but in December 1900 the latter left Calcutta and paid little attention to the trust business.

In March 1910 Protap's son Bhupendra purporting to act as his father's attorney granted a lease of the property in suit to the Respondents, who thereupon entered into possession.

In 1910 Sarat Chandra brought a suit against Protap as trustee praying for a declaration that the trust deed was void.

In 1912 a declaration was made to that effect on the ground that the objects were too indefinite, and Sarat was appointed Receiver with liberty to institute proceedings for setting aside leases granted by the trustees. The present suit was accordingly instituted by Sarat in 1914 alleging that the lease of 1910 was ultra vires and conveyed no title as against the family.

In 1916 the Official Receiver, the present Appellant, was appointed Receiver in place of Sarat.

The suit was dismissed by the Subordinate Judge and that decree was confirmed by the High Court (Chitty and Panton, JJ.).

Hence this appeal.

Mr. A. M. Dunne, K. C. (with Messrs. E. B. Raikes and Shelley) for the Appellant.—There are three main considerations : (1) Can a trustee who has a discretionary power delegate that discretion? I say no. Nor can he ratify any such power which has been exercised by his delegate. (2) There is no evidence that Protap had appointed Bhupendra as his attorney. (3) In any event Protap had no power to grant the lease. The evidence as to the contents of the alleged power of attorney is inadmissible.

Mr. DeGruyther, K. C. (with Mr. Kenworthy Brown) for the Respondents.—Both the lower Courts have found as a fact that Bhupendra had a general power of attorney to deal with the trust estate.

The lease was registered so that a power of attorney must have been produced before the Registrar (sec. 32, Registration Act).

[LORD BUCKMASTER.—The power of attorney required by the Registrar would not be the power required for the execution of the document.]

In any case the existence and contents of the power of attorney were not challenged either in the pleadings or in the lower Court. Protap was not a trustee in the true sense of the word. The property belonged to the family and he was the manager, as such he was entitled to delegate his powers. (Mayne's Hindu Law, para. 438). The question of delegation was not raised until after Bhupendra's death and was an after-thought. Even if Protap did not authorise Bhupendra to execute the lease he ratified the transaction when it had been done.

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by

LORD BUCKMASTER.—On the 14th March 1910, a document was executed by Bhupendra Sri Ghoshia, purporting to act on behalf and as attorney of his father. Protap Chandra Ghosha, by which a garden at Tallah was granted to the Respondents under a mokurari lease, at the annual rent of Rs. 125, and a premium of Rs. 3,000. The Respondents on the execution of the lease entered into and have since remained in possession of the property.

The question raised in this case is whether the lease conveyed to them any title at all. It is challenged in the following circumstances: The property in question originally belonged to Hara Chandra Ghose, who died in 1868. He was survived by his widow, four sons and two daughters. On the 7th May 1880, a trust deed was executed by all the interested persons, by which the property was placed in the hands of trustees for certain religious and charitable purposes. The two first trustees under the deed were the widow, Srimati Padmabati Dasi, and her eldest son, Sri Protap Chandra Ghosha. The deed contained the statement that upon the death of the widow the eldest son, Protap, should be the sole trustee, and on his death the second son, Sri Sarat Chandra Ghosha, should be the sole trustee, and so on. It also provided that during the absence of any trustee for over one year during his life, the person entitled to be the trustee immediately in succession to him should be appointed to the office of trustee for the time being. It is unnecessary to consider the exact terms of the deed or the nature of the trust for which the property was conveyed. For the present purpose it is sufficient to say that until the deed was challenged by a family suit that was instituted in 1910, it was accepted as creating a good trust, and the persons named were assumed to be exercising the duties of trustees. On the 16th April 1900, the widow died, and from that time Protap became, by the terms of the deed, the sole trustee. On the 31st December 1900, he left Calcutta, and he only returned twice afterwards, the first of the two visits being after the execution of the lease. The lease was, as has been stated, executed by Bhupendra Ghosha, and all the preliminary negotiations and transactions must have been carried out by him, or someone on his behalf, because the evidence of Protap, which has been taken at some considerable length, makes plain that he had no knowledge of the matter until after it had taken place. He was asked when he was told that the land had been sold or perpetually leased to somebody, and his answer was he did not know. Then he was asked, "When did you come to know?" and his reply was, "About the time when the High Court suit was commenced." That suit was instituted on the 31st May 1910, after the date of the execution. Later on he is asked this "Do you know who gave the lease?" and his answer is, "I did not know then. I came to know afterwards that it was done in my name under some power of attorney." Finally in re-examination he repeats this statement, and says, "I found my actual knowledge since I perused type-written copy supplied to me by an outsider, which suggested many things, and made me curious." There is no evidence to which their Lordships' attention has been directed in the long and tedious deposition which Protap was called upon to make which contradicts these statements, and consequently it must be accepted that when this document was executed he had neither negotiated its contents, nor was he aware of them. The whole of the authority for the execution of that lease must be found in the power of attorney under which Bhupendra Ghosha purported to act, and the existence and extent of that authority is the chief question on this appeal.

In order, however, to see how this suit has arisen, it is necessary to go back a little in the family history. About the time of the execution of the lease, and possibly because of its execution, anxiety arose among the members of the family as to the way in which the affairs of the trust were being conducted, and in consequence a suit, to which reference has already been made, was instituted on the 31st May 1910, by Sarat against Protap, as trustee, claiming to have the deed of trust declared void, charging Protap with misconduct as trustee, and asking for accounts against him. In the plaint this lease was challenged, though not on the ground now under consideration. The beneficiaries were made parties to the suit, and a settlement of the disputes was ultimately effected; but one of the parties being an infant, it was necessary to obtain the consent of the Court to the proposed terms. This was secured by a decree on the 2nd August 1912, which declared that the general trusts of the deed were bad because the objects of the charity were far too indefinite, but the settlement of the litigation being approved by the learned Judge, his declaration was confined to the failure of the trusts, and to declaring that the properties that were the subject of the deed were merely charged with such necessary expenses as were incurred in the lifetime of the lady for the maintenance and ownership (?) of the granth mentioned in the third clause, and the annual service mentioned in the fourth clause. The settlement released Protap from liability to account for monies received from the lease, but it appointed the second trustee in the order Sarat Chandra Ghosha, Receiver of the estate, and express directions were reserved in these terms of settlement that he should be at liberty to take steps to recover and set aside the perpetual lease or leases granted by Protap.

The proceedings out of which this appeal has arisen were accordingly instituted by Sarat. It is unfortunately true that the plaint is not expressed in plain terms, but it does most clearly set out allegations in para. 5 and para. 6, putting forward this lease under which the Defendants claim as a suggested or alleged lease, and there is nothing in the plaint to show that the lease was accepted as having in fact been properly executed. Again, the particular matter in controversy was not exactly defined in the issues that were settled, but it is certainly covered by the third issue, which was in these terms: "Was the trustee or his am-nioktar competent to grant the permanent lease in question, and is it binding on the Plaintiff?" The case came on for trial before the Subordinate Judge on the 14th July 1916, when he dismissed the suit. In the course of taking the depositions, attempts were made to give in evidence the contents of the power of attorney under which the deed had been executed, and objection was promptly taken that no such evidence was admissible because the document must be in writing, and verbal evidence as to its contents could not be given until some proper and sufficient explanation was offered as to the reason why the document itself was not before the Court. On more than one occasion, in the course of the evidence, similar attempts were made, and similar objections were taken, and in the end there was no evidence on which reliance could be placed as to what the actual terms of that document were, or whether in fact any such document was in existence or operative at the time when the lease was executed. The best evidence upon the point was that of Zatiudra Muthik, who was managing clerk to Bhupendra in his profession of solicitor. He is not himself a solicitor, and is now a trader in fish. He says that he read the power of attorney, and that it granted full power to execute lease, mortgage, etc., but he did not recollect the exact expressions. The power was a general power to sell, mortgage, or lease.

This evidence was objected to, and is useless for the purpose of proving the contents of a written document. Their Lordships only refer to it for the purpose of saying that had they accepted the evidence, it would not be sufficient. If any power existed in Protap to delegate authority under the trust deed it would be quite clear that the power of attorney to be granted would have to be a special power of attorney, specially referable to dealing with the estate which was subject to the trust, and not a general power of attorney, which may have been executed by Protap in favour of his son, entitling him to deal with the whole of his private property. No evidence whatever that it is properly admissible having been given of the power of attorney, it necessarily follows that there was no proof that the lease under which the Defendants claim had ever been properly executed at all, and the defence failed.

The learned Subordinate Judge, who dismissed the suit, dealt with the matter in a few sentences. He seems to think that the statement in the plaint of the suit that had been compromised was sufficient to lead to the inference that Bhupendra, the son, had full power to execute the lease on Protap's behalf, and he says at page 198 of the Record :—

"I may also point out here that Bhupendra Sri's authority to execute the lease on behalf of Protap Babu has not been challenged in the plaint, though the Plaintiff knew, as the plaint in the High Court case indicates, that such lease was granted. Bhupendra Sri Babu was alive when this plaint was filed, and this explains why the Plaintiff did not consider it expedient to challenge his power."

It may be pointed out that even though Bhupendra Sri Babu had died since the suit was instituted, that would not have prevented the parties whose duty it was to obtain production of the power of attorney from taking the necessary steps either to obtain a copy of the document or to prove that that copy could not be obtained. The point raised that the matter was not specifically mentioned in the plaint does not appear to their Lordships to be sound, because although it is true that the plaint is couched in uncertain language, it is nowhere intimated in the plaint that such a lease was properly executed, and it therefore became incumbent upon the Defendants to prove the title under which they held. But whatever may be said about what happened before the Subordinate Judge, the grounds of appeal to the High Court expressly suggested that the Court below had made a mistake in overlooking the fact that the alleged power of attorney had not been proved, so that the question was definitely raised, and the attention of the High Court directed to it. The High Court, who confirmed the decree of the Subordinate Judge, dealt with the question in these terms, at page 206 of the Record :—

"There can be no doubt that Bhupendra Sri Ghosha held an Ammekhtarnama from his father. Unfortunately neither side seems to have been at any pains to procure the production of the document or to give proper secondary evidence of its contents, if it could not be found. The evidence on the record, such as it is, indicates that that Am-mokhtarnama was registered at Bindhyachal, and that it granted full power to sell, mortgage and lease."

Their Lordships desire to point out that if a proper case has not been established for the admission of secondary evidence of the contents of a written document, and objection has been taken to the fact that the document has not been produced, it is not permissible to go to other evidence for the purpose of indicating what the contents of the written document may prove to be if once it were examined.

Their Lordships, therefore, are clearly of opinion that in this case the defence must break down through the inability of the Defendants to prove the execution of the lease under which they claim by anybody having proper authority, and even if the evidence as to the existence and contents of the power of attorney were accepted, it would be inadequate for the reasons already given. Their Lordships are, however, impressed with what had been said by Mr. DeGruyther as to the Defendants not being alive to this point being raised in the plaint, though they see no reason whatever for this inadvertence from the date when the notice of appeal was given to the High Court. Their Lordships, therefore, have considered what the position would be supposing such document had, in fact, been proved, and had been shown to be a special power purporting to authorise dealings with the trust estate, and they are of opinion that even in that event it could not have availed the Defendants. The reason for this plain. In whatever capacity Protap the land in question, the capacity must have been a representative one. It was said that he was not in the strictest language a trustee; but be it so, his position was none the less a representative one, and it being plain that he never negotiated nor considered, nor knew of the lease until after it had been executed, if what was done, was done by virtue of a power of attorney, it could only have been because the power had delegated the representative authority that he possessed to a third party. The duties of Protap, however they may be defined, were in their nature fiduciary, and fiduciary duties cannot be made the subject of delegation. If, therefore, the document had been before their Lordships it would have been impossible to have supported the contention that it conferred the power to negotiate and execute the document upon which the whole of the Defendants' case rests.

Their Lordships desire to express their opinion that there is nothing to cause them to qualify the findings that have been found by both the Courts as to the Defendants having acted honestly in the matter. They acted honestly, but they acted with scant wisdom, and with a strange disregard of the caution that, it is essential, should be observed in dealing with a person who has no authority to act on his own behalf.

For these reasons their Lordships think this appeal should be allowed, the suit should be decreed, an order made for possession of the land, an enquiry should be directed as to mesne profits, and the Appellants should have the costs here and below, and they will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly.

Judgment—Cl 15 of the Letters Patent—Suit on behalf of a lunatic—Benefit of the lunatic—Application to take the plaint off the file—Dismissal of the application—Right to apply at the hearing—Final decision.

In a suit instituted on behalf of a lunatic one of the Defendants applied for taking the plaint off the file on the grounds, amongst other, that the suit was not for the benefit of the lunatic and was an abuse of the process of the Court. The Court dismissed the application on the ground that on the materials before the Court at that stage, the Court was not prepared to hold that these grounds were substantiated. The Defendant appealed:

Held—That the order dismissing the application was not a "judgment" within the meaning of cl. 15 of the Letters Patent, inasmuch as the said order did not finally decide any right between the parties, it being open to the Defendant to substantiate the grounds by further materials at the hearing of the suit.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

SANDERSON, C. J.—This is an appeal by one Gour Mohan Mullick, one of the Defendants in the suit, from the judgment of my learned brother Mr. Justice Rankin whereby he dismissed an application which had been made by the Appellant. It arises in connection with litigation in respect of Gopal Lal Seal's estate, which, it is said, has occupied much time of this Court; and, it is only necessary for me to mention that there was a settlement in this Court arrived at on the 4th of April 1919 and a consent decree passed, in a suit No. 1223 of 1917 in which Gour Mohan Mullick and others were Plaintiffs and Srimati Noyan Manjuri Dassi and others were Defendants. The present suit is a suit by Srimati Noyan Manjuri Dassi—a person of unsound mind—by her grand-mother Srimati Brindarani Dasi against Kanta Mohan Mullick, Gour Mohan Mullick (who is the Appellant in this appeal) and others; and, the object of the suit is to obtain a declaration that the consent decree, to which I have referred, is not binding upon the Plaintiff and that her interest is not affected in any way by the same and that if necessary the said decree may be set aside and that Suit No. 1223 of 1917 as well as the different appeals arising therefrom may be heard on the merits.

GOUR MOHAN MULLICK v. NOYAN MANJURI DASSI.

There are other incidental reliefs asked for in the suit.

The Appellant Gour Mohan Mullick who is, as I have said, one of the Defendants in the suit made an application on the 10th April 1920 to the learned Judge on the Original Side that the plaint in the suit brought by Srimati Noyan Manjuri Dassi might be taken off the file, or for an enquiry whether the suit was properly instituted and whether it was fit and proper and for the benefit of the Plaintiff, that the suit should be further prosecuted and that all further proceedings should be stayed in the meantime and that Srimati Brindarani should be directed to furnish security for costs and that all proceedings should be stayed until such security was given. On the hearing of that application, the learned Judge delivered a judgment and directed that the Plaintiff should give particulars of certain allegations, which were contained in the plaint; and on a subsequent occasion after these particulars had been given, he delivered a second judgment; and, I propose to read three passages from that judgment to show what was the conclusion at which he arrived. After stating what was the rule with regard to an application such as this, taking a passage from Daniel's Chancery Practice as his guide, he proceeded as follows: "I propose therefore to consider first whether this is a plain and strong case, as appearing upon such evidence as can be given and considered upon a mere interlocutory application first for saying that there is no substance or possibility of benefit to the lunatic in the action, and secondly, whether the present next friend has been shown to be unfit to be allowed to continue in that capacity." Dealing with the first point, which is the material point in the consideration of this appeal, the learned Judge said, after discussing the evidence: "On these lines and broadly speaking, I am of opinion that it would be wrong to hold within the meaning of the passage which I have just cited that this is a suit which can be seen to have no basis in the benefit of the lunatic and to deserve to be terminated." And, in order to make the position which the learned Judge was taking up clear, towards the end of the judgment he said: "It remains for me to add one matter by way of explanation. I have held that I am not prepared upon this proceeding to say that the suit is either malâ fide or entirely unsubstantial so that there would be an abuse of the process of the Court in allowing it to go on. But I want it to be distinctly understood that this judgment is not to be taken as the approval of a Court administering a lunatic's estate to the institution of this suit. That is an entirely different matter."

Upon the hearing of this appeal the learned Counsel for the Plaintiff-Respondent took the point that there was no right of appeal from the learned Judge's judgment inasmuch as it was not a "judgment" within the meaning of cl. 15 of the Letters Patent of this Court. The well-known passage in the case of The Justices of the Peace for Calcutta v. The Oriental Gas Company, Limited (1) was relied upon by the learned Counsel for the Plaintiff-Respondent. That passage, which is familiar to us all is as follows: "We think that 'judgment' in cl. 15 means a decision which affects the merits of the question between the parties by determining some right or liability. It may be either final, or preliminary or interlocutory, the difference between them being that a final judgment determines the whole cause or suit, and a preliminary or interlocutory judgment determines only a part of it, leaving other matters to be determined." It has been held several times in this Court that that definition is not an exhaustive definition and that whenever a point similar to the one, which I am now discussing, is taken, the Court has to decide whether the particular order in question is a "judgment" within the meaning of cl. 15, having regard to the nature of the order. In this case, the learned Counsel for the Appellant Gour Mohan Mullick urged that the Defendant-Appellant has a right to have the suit stopped on the ground that it had been shown that the suit was an abuse of the process of the Court in that it had not been brought for the benefit of the lunatic but for some ulterior and improper motive; and, he further urged that that right had been finally determined by the learned Judge and that consequently this appeal would lie. In my judgment, the alleged "right"—if that word can be properly applied in this connection, is not such a right as is contemplated by the definition of the learned Chief Justice which appears in The Justices of the Peace for Calcutta v. The Oriental Gas Company, Limited (1). It is true that the Defendant had a right to apply to the Court to have the plaint taken off the file on the ground that the suit had not been brought for the benefit of the lunatic Plaintiff, but it was in the discretion of the learned Judge to decide upon the materials, which were then before him, whether he would make that order or whether he would allow the suit to proceed to trial. The learned Judge has decided, in effect, that upon the materials then before him and upon the application which was made to him by the Defendant-Appellant, he could not see his way at that stage to stay the suit. The learned Judge has not decided finally the question whether the suit has been brought for the benefit of the lunatic or whether it is brought malâ fide or whether it is an abuse of the process of the Court. In view of the passages in the learned Judge's judgment which I have read, it is clear that the issue as to whether the suit is for the benefit of the lunatic or is brought malâ fide or is an abuse of the process of the Court is still open and can be raised at the trial. In fact, the decision of the learned Judge really amounts to no more than a decision as to the procedure which is to be followed, the result being that in his judgment the suit should proceed to trial. In my opinion, the learned Judge's judgment does not amount to a decision which affects the merits of the question between the parties by determining some right or liability. It is not, therefore, a "judgment" within the meaning of cl. 15 of the Letters Patent and consequently there is no right of appeal. In my judgment, the appeal therefore must be dismissed.

As regards the costs of this appeal, the Appellant must pay the costs of the Plaintiff-Respondent. As regards the other Respondents they must pay their own costs with the exception of Panna Lal Seal. The other Respondents, with the exception of Panna Lal Seal, are all in the same interest as the Appellant, and it seems to me that there was no necessity for them to appear in this appeal. That consideration does not apply to Panna Lal Seal, because we find that there is an allegation in the plaint that this suit was instituted "for personal gains and benefit of Srimati Brindarani Dasi, Kuchil Lal Sen, Panna Lal Seal and their associates who had been instruments in putting the estate to a very heavy loss hitherto." In view of the allegation against Panna Lal Seal it appears to us that Panna Lal Seal was entitled to appear on this appeal; and, inasmuch as we decided that the Defendant-Appellant has no right of appeal the usual result must follow and the Appellant must pay the costs of Panna Tal Seal of this appeal.

RICHARDSON, J.—I agree and only add a few observations in difference to the argument of Mr. Langford James.

It is difficult, perhaps, to reconcile all the numerous decisions as to the meaning of the term judgment in cl. 15 of the Letters Patent. The infallible test for distinguishing between an appealable judgment and one which is not appealable has still to be discovered. There is, however, a consensus of opinion that some limitation must be put upon the term and the gloss of Sir Richard Couch, C. J., in The Justices of the Peace v. The Oriental Gas Co. (1) has generally been adopted as a starting point. The term means according to Couch, C. J., "a decision which affects the merits of the question between the parties by determining some right or liability," and the decision "may be either final, preliminary or interlocutory." A difficulty often arises in the application of this definition to decisions of the class known as interlocutory. It is not conclusive that the question decided is a question depending upon the judicial discretion of the Court of first instance nor is it conclusive that the decision would not amount to a decree or an appealable order under the Civil Procedure Code; nor again, would it be correct to say that no interlocutory decision on a question of procedure is appealable; for instance, there are the cases where a judgment on a question of venue has been held appealable [cf. Joylall v. Gopiram (2)]. But the considerations to which I have adverted may in particular instances afford some assistance to the Court.

As to the case of Korammall Ramballav

v. Mongilal Dalimchand (3), upon which reliance was placed for the Appellant that seems to me distinguishable because there a right in presenti was asserted to a sum of money. Possibly that case goes to the furthest limit compatible with general adherence to Sir Richard Couch's definition.

In the present case Mr. Langford James argued that his client had a right to have the plaint rejected or the suit stayed on the ground that the suit was not for the benefit of the lunatic for whose benefit it was nominally instituted, or in other words that the suit was an abuse of the process of the Court. Granted that the Appellant, who was a Defendant in the suit, was at liberty to apply to the learned Judge to stay the suit on such a ground, the learned Judge has not committed himself to anything further than this, that at this stage on the material, now available, the plaint and the Appellant's application and so forth, he is not prepared as a matter of discretion to accede to the application or to say that the suit has not been brought bonâ fide for the protection of the interest of the lunatic. In my opinion that is not within Sir Richard Couch's definition—"a determination of a right or liability affecting the merits of the controversy between the parties." The only right of the Appellant we are now concerned with is his right to apply and to have the question decided sometime, now or later. It is conceded that it lay in the discretion of the learned Judge to say whether the question should be decided now or later. The learned Judge has not denied expressly or by implication that the Appellant was at liberty to make this application. On the contrary he has dealt with the matter on the footing that the Appellant was entitled to apply and he has dealt with it most carefully and attentively.

(3) 23 C. W. N. 1017 (1910).

GOUR MOHAN MULLICK v. NOYAN MANJURI DASSI.

It is conceded again that the learned Judge's order would not be appealable under the Civil Procedure Code.

It would further appear that the decision to the extent to which it goes, relates only to procedure—it merely postpones a determination on the merits of the question until a later stage of the suit. Not only, as I understand, will the Appellant be at liberty to raise the question again at a later stage on further materials, but it will in any case be the duty of the trial Judge to determine whether or not the suit is for the lunatic's benefit, whether or not it is for his benefit that the settlement arrived at in the course of the previous litigation should be set aside [Gf. Porter v. Porter (4)].

The authorities seem to show that in order to make a decision appealable there must be in it some element of finality and I am unable to find that element in the present case.

I may add that the application to stay this suit having been made on behalf of a Defendant, the question arises inter parties; and is, as I have said, open on the merits to further consideration. It may be that where such an application is made by a third party, not a party to the suit, assuming that it is open to a third party to apply, different considerations would arise.

In the result I agree with my Lord that the appeal fails on the ground that it is incompetent and I concur in the order which he has proposed.

[CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION.]

APPEAL FROM ORDER

No. 225 of 1918.

TEUNON, J.

BEACHROFT, J.

Heard, 3 and 4, February.

Judgment,

4, February.

MOHSINUDDIN AHMED,

Defendant No. 1,

Appellant,

v.

KHABIRUDDIN AHMED

and ors., Plaintiffs,

Respondents.

—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), Sch. II, r. 17, agreement to refer to arbitration—Mahomedan Law, mother as "de facto" guardian if can execute the agreement on behalf of her minor children—A party to the agreement if can subsequently question the validity of the agreement and withdraw therefrom—Subsequent assent of the "de jure" guardian if can validate the agreement—Subordinate Judge if may allow mother to act for her infants in partition proceedings—K. i., who is.

A Mahomedan mother on behalf of her minor children entered into an agreement with some others to refer to arbitrators a dispute about some properties and they all made an application to Court under r. 17 of the Second Schedule to the C. P. Code. The guardian of the minors' properties appointed by the District Judge subsequently gave his assent to the agreement to refer and participated in the said application under r. 17. The Court thereupon acted upon the agreement and referred the dispute to arbitration:

Held—That the mother was not competent to bind the infants by the agreement to refer to arbitration, The mother has no larger powers to deal with her minor child's property than any outsider or non-relative who happens to have charge for the time being of the infant.

MOHSINUDDIN AHMED v. KHABIRUDDIN AHMED.

The natural guardian can perform acts which are purely advantageous to the infant, but can impose no obligations on the infant.

IMAMBANDI v. MUTSADDI (1) followed.

A party who entered into the agreement to refer, under a misconception as to the legal authority of the mother, may afterwards withdraw therefrom.

The legal guardian's assent subsequently given to the agreement to refer and his participation in an assent to the application under r. 17 cannot validate the agreement which formed the basis of that application.

Per BEACHCROFT, J — The fact that the Subordinate Judge subsequently found the mother fit to act for the minors would not validate an arrangement which in its inception was invalid, there being no appointment of the mother to act for the infant in the partition proceedings by the District Judge who takes the place of the Kazi in Mahomedan law.

This was an appeal preferred on the 29th July 1918 against an order of Babu Bepin Behary Ghosh, Subordinate Judge of Zillah Rajshaye, dated the 30th April 1918.

The facts will fully appear from the judgment

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

TEUNON, J. This appeal arises out of an application made under r. 17 of the Second Schedule to the Code of Civil Pro-

It appears that the descendants of a person of the name of Jhalu Mandal are in dispute as to the extent of their joint properties and as to the manner in which they should be distributed amongst them. On the 21st October 1916 these persons entered or purported to enter into an agreement to refer the dispute to the decision of certain arbitrators. The application under r. 17 was made by or on behalf of five of the persons whose signatures appear on the agreement to refer. It was made on the 4th April 1917. After hearing the parties the Subordinate Judge directed that the agreement should be filed and that the matters in dispute should be referred to the arbitrators named in the deed of agreement. Against this order Mohsinuddin Ahmed one of the parties to the agreement has appealed.

He contends before us that in entering into this agreement he acted under coercion, and he further contends that as a matter of fact the agreement referred to was abandoned by the parties thereto and never became operative. These are matters into which we do not think it necessary to enter because we are of opinion that on a further contention this appeal must succeed. Of the persons who purported to enter into the agreement two are minors, Din Mahamad and Kasiranessa on whose behalf when executing this agreement their mother Sakhina Bibi acted. It is contended by the Appellant that inasmuch as Sakhina Bibi the mother was not appointed guardian of the properties of the minors by the District Judge under the Guardian and Wards Act, she is not competent to deal with the properties of the minors and not competent to enter on their behalf into the agreement to refer to arbitration, the said agreement being one which will necessarily, if acted upon, involve dealings with the properties of the minors.

MOHSINUDDIN AHMED v. KHABIRUDDIN AHMED.

To this contention in view of the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council reported in Imambandi v. Mutsaddi (1), we think there can be no sufficient answer. It is true that in that case their Lordships of the Privy Council were dealing more particularly with cases of sale or mortgage, but they had in view also the general question how far and under what circumstances according to Mahomedan law dealings by a mother or other unauthorised guardian of a minor are operative. They observe inter alia; "The mother has no larger powers to deal with her minor child's property than any outsider or non-relative who happens to have charge for the time being of the infant. The term "de facto guardian" that has been applied to these persons is misleading: it connotes the idea that people in charge of a child are by virtue of that fact invested with certain powers over the infant's property. This idea is quite erroneous." Later on they further say—"Without such derivative authority—(that is authority derived either from powers given by a will or by appointment by the Judge as guardian)—if the mother assumes charge of their property of whatever description and purports to deal with it, she does so at her own risk and her acts are like those of any other person who arrogates an authority which he does not legally possess. She may incur responsibilities but can impose no obligations on the infant." In view of this decision and these observations we cannot but hold that in the present case the mother is not competent to bind the infants by this so-called agreement to refer to arbitration.

In answer to this it is suggested that the reference to arbitration is for the manifest advantage of the infants and therefore comes within the third class of the exceptions provided for the protection of a minor child who has no de jure guardian. But to that suggestion we are unable to accede. Acts coming within the third exception are acts purely advantageous to the infant, or as it has been put in the judgment to which we have referred, acceptance on behalf of the minor of unburdened bounty. It is clear that agreements to refer to arbitration disputes between infants and other persons regarding their movable and immovable properties do not come within this exception.

It has further been contended that the Appellant Mohsinuddin Ahmed having entered into this agreement is not competent to withdraw therefrom. This also is a proposition which we are unable to accept. Even if he had entered into it voluntarily it would seem that he did so under a misconception as to the legal authority of the mother to bind her infant children by her dealings with their property. But now that he has been advised that, as is apparent from the judgment to which we have referred, the mother has no such legal authority and that the agreement is not binding upon the infants it is clear that he should not be compelled to undergo the expenditure of time and money involved in a proceeding which may very possibly, and indeed in all probability will, in the end, prove futile and infructuous.

A further contention was advanced to the effect that on application made to the District Judge under the Guardians and Wards Act two persons, one Sakina Bibi's brother Haider Buksh was appointed guardian of the properties of the two minors to the extent of about one-third of their value, and that another person Khabiruddin Ahmed who is one of the respondents in this appeal was appointed guardian of the minors' remaining properties. These appointments, however, were both conditional on the furnishing of security. Haider Buksh it is true furnished the required security. Khairuddin Ahmed never furnished that security, he never acted as guardian of the properties of the minors, and in fact his appointment as guardian never became operative. It follows that Haider's assent subsequently given to the agreement to refer and Haider's participation in or assent to the application under r. 17 cannot validate the agreement which forms the basis of that application.

We therefore decree this appeal and set aside the order of the District Judge with costs. We assess the hearing fee in this Court at five gold mohurs. The costs are to be paid by the contesting major Respondents.

BEACHROFT, J.—I agree and wish only to add a few words with reference to an argument which was advanced before us. It was that the case of Imambandi v. Mutsaddi (1) did not conclude the matter before us as there are special rules in the Hedaya with regard to partition. We were referred to one, which provides that in case of a partition between an adult and a minor the Kazi must appoint some one to act for the minor; and it was argued that here the Court had found the mother a fit person to represent the minors. The short answer to that is that the District Judge, who takes the place of the Kazi in Mahomedan law, did not appoint the mother and the fact that the Court subsequently found her fit to act for the minors would not validate an arrangement, which in its inception was invalid.

Bankati brit of Oudh—Butias, if have under proprietary right.

In Oudh, there exist various kinds of butis, the incidents of each of which differ from those of others.

The pottah of the birtias in this case expressly declared that the grantor had given the land of the village to the grantee to get it cultivated and populated. It was for the purpose of clearing the jungle, making the land fit for cultivation and bringing in ruyats which carried with it the duty of sinking wells. The birt-holder was to enjoy it free for five or six years. A comparatively small but gradually ascending rent was fixed for the years 1210 to 1214 in proportion to the increasing productiveness of the soil. After 1214, he was to pay the revenue to the sarkar prevalent in the Taluqa and take the daswant prevalent in the Taluqa, the daswant being a deduction in the nature of a rebate. The rent of the tenure could not be capriciously enhanced by the Taluqdar as the assessment of the jama was to be in accordance with the rate prevalent in the Taluqa:

Held, in view of the above and other circumstances of the case, that the Judicial Commissioners were right in holding that the grantees had under-proprietary right in the village.

This was an appeal by special leave from a judgment and decree, dated the 27th April 1915, of the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh, reversing a judgment and decree, dated the 18th October 1913 of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Gonda.

The material facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

Messrs. DeGruyther, K. C. and Parikh for the Appellant.

Messrs. Dubé and Hyam for the Respondents.

THEIR LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by

MR. AMEER ALI.—The suit, which has given rise to this appeal, was brought by the Plaintiffs in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Gonda, in Oudh, on the 1st May 1913, and relates to a village called Kundarwa, lying within the Taluqa Birwa Mahnon, in the Gonda district, in which the first Plaintiff owns a half share; the second Plaintiff, a resident of Lucknow, appears to have purchased at a sale in execution of a decree a part of the village in dispute. Why he has been joined in the suit as Plaintiff does not clearly appear. The other half of the Taluqa is owned by the Taluqdar of Balrampur. The Defendants hold the village Kundarwa under a birt grant created so long ago as 1802 by one Maharaj Kumar Madho Sing, who owned the property in those days. Later the Taluqa came into the possession of a lady named Rani Sarfaraz Kunwar; on her death it devolved on her daughter, Birraj Kunwar. On Birraj Kunwar's death somewhere in 1879 it passed into the hands of her husband, Achcha Ram. In 1888 half of the estate was purchased by the first Plaintiff's father, Raja Kazim Hossain, whose title as purchaser was affirmed finally only in 1899; whilst the other half was acquired at or about the same time by the Taluqdar of Balrampur.

The Pottah under which the birt-holders obtained the village of Kundarwa is in the following terms:—

"I have given the land of village Kundarwa to Pathak Guni Ram by way of birt. He is free to settle himself and others (therein) and to cultivate it himself or get it cultivated, year after year; that is to say, he is free to have it cultivated and populated. He should pay the revenue to the Sarkar at the rate prevalent in the Taluka and take the dasaundh at the rate prevalent in the Taluka. I have written this; none should act against this."

For the first year, the rent is fixed at Rs. 4 rising in the course of five years to Rs. 36. And then follows the clause relating to future rent:—

"He [meaning the grantee] is to enjoy it free for five or six years. Thereafter at the rate for Bankati prevalent in the Taluka."

The character and incidents of these birt grants will be referred to more particularly in the course of this judgment. It is enough to say at this stage that the Circular issued by the Chief Commissioner of Oudh in 1861 shows that so late as the early part of the nineteenth century large tracts of land in the Province were lying unreclaimed and uncultivated, and the usual method for large proprietors was to let out the waste lands on favourable terms and security of tenure to tenants to bring them under cultivation. These grants were usually called birt bankati (as in the present case) or bantarashi, the names indicating the purpose for which they were made. The birtia, or birt-holder, had to cut down the forest, clear the land, build tanks and induct rai-yats.

The predecessors in title of the Defendants remained admittedly in unmolested possession of the village for nearly 78 years.

In 1869, in the course of what is called the first Regular Settlement in Oudh, they applied for a direct settlement with them of the revenue assessed on their village. Their application was opposed on behalf of Sarfaraz Kunwar, who then held the Taluqa. The case came for final disposal before the Extra Assistant Commissioner of Gonda on the 30th January 1871; the birt-holder was arrayed as Plaintiff and the Taluqdar as Defendant. The Taluqdar charged the documents produced by the birt-holders to be forgeries. This was found to be untrue; and the actual decision relative to the respective rights of the parties is in the following terms:—

“Now the question whether the Bunkati birt is tantamount to the birt right or not remains to be dealt with. It is evident that when the birt dahyak dues are being deducted all through, no extinction of the birt rights can take place on account of the decrease or increase in the amount of rental. In mortgage and sale *birt the owners of villages generally enjoyed the power to assess rents, to make amendments in them, and to grant periodical leases in their districts; and the dahyak dues have been estimated at 10 per cent. only. The Plaintiff has all these qualities in him.

“For the above reasons it is ordered that a decree upholding possession and occupation as an under-proprietor be passed in favour of the Plaintiff under the provisions of Circular No. 11 of 1862 in respect of village Kunderwa No. 590, Pargana Gonda, subject to the condition that the Talukdar shall always have the power to renew the patta and to amend and to assess the jama according to the practice observed during the Shahi times: that the Plaintiff having deducted only 10 per cent. dahyak dues, shall pay the balance of the jama proposed to the Talukdar: that in case of refusal to take up the lease and the village held under direct management, the Plaintiff shall be deemed entitled to dahyak dues at 10 per cent. from the amount of gross rental, and that, having, deducted his dahyak dues in both the seasons, he shall have the accounts adjusted at the end of the year.”

It is clear from this decree that the Extra Assistant Commissioner found that the Plaintiff in that case possessed all the powers ordinarily enjoyed by birt-holders of his class; and he accordingly upheld the Plaintiff's “possession and occupation as an under-proprietor,” subject to the conditions set forth above.

It is alleged by the Plaintiffs in the present suit that there was a discontinuance in “the possession and occupation” of the birt-holders between 1875 and 1879, when they declined to take a Pottah on the rent assessed by the Taluqdar. During this period, it is alleged, the village was let to some other people, the Defendants receiving only the tenth of the rent received by the Taluqdar, and that in 1880 the birt-holders again got possession under a new arrangement. These allegations are not admitted by the Defendants; they deny that they ever lost possession. No Pottah or Kabuliat appears to have been produced to show what the new arrangement was. Anyhow, whatever its character, it has lasted a considerable time.

In 1898 Achcha Ram, who had come into the possession of the Taluqa on the death of his wife, Birraj Kunwar, brought a suit against the Defendants for ejectment and enhancement of rent. That suit failed; the Judicial Commissioner dismissed the action on the ground that both reliefs were exclusively for the Revenue Courts to determine.

In 1901 Raja Kazim Hossain Khan, the father of the first Plaintiff, who had by that time become the owner by purchase of a half share of the Taluqa, brought a suit against the Defendants in the Court of the Deputy Collector of Gonda for arrears of rent for the Fasli years 1307 and 1308

* For the meaning of this class of birt see Sykes.

RAJA MOHAMMAD ABUL HASAN KHAN v. LACHMI NARAIN.

(1900 and 1901), on the allegation that they held Kunderwa on a rental of Rs. 503-14-6 and that he was entitled to receive a moiety thereof. The Defendants contended that the rent was payable as a whole and they could not be made separately liable for a share of the rent. They also alleged that their rent was Rs. 500, which they had been always willing to pay less their dahyak, the tenth, which they were entitled to deduct, and that Rs. 3-14-6 claimed by the Plaintiff was an overcharge for rates.

The Deputy Collector of Gonda, before whom the case came for trial, dealing first with the plea that the Defendants were not liable to pay the rent in halves, stated his view as to the status of the Defendants in the following terms:—"They are not tenants; nor are they ordinary thekadars; rather they hold the land as under-proprietors, or inferior proprietors." In this view he overruled the birtias' objection to being made liable to pay rent in halves. On the question of the rent he held as follows:—

"The Defendants admit the jama to be Rs. 500, and on adding to it Rs. 3-14-6 on account of rate, we get the amount of Rs. 503-14-6, as claimed by the Plaintiff. But the suit has not been brought in respect of rate, nor was any issue framed as to whether the Plaintiff was entitled to get the same. The Defendants are not tenants nor are they responsible for profits and loss; they are in possession (on payment of jama minus a fixed percentage, i.e., 10 per cent.). Till the rate is sued for I cannot include it in the claim from my own side. I take the amount of jama to be Rs. 500 and thus the Plaintiff's share comes to Rs. 250 per year. The Defendants have stated that from the jama fixed, 10 per cent., that is to say Rs. 50 per year, used to be deducted as dahyak dues. The Plaintiff is silent as regards this objection. From the copy of the order dated the 30th January 1871, passed in the previous settlement it appears that a decree for dahyak (10 per cent.) was passed in favour of Sheo Ratan, the ancestor of the Defendants, and it was settled that the proposed rent should be paid to the Talukdar after deducting therefrom the dahyak right, that is 10 per cent. From the copy of the judgment, dated the 29th October 1898, passed by the Court of the Judicial Commissioner (of Oudh) in re Sheo Ratan versus Achcha Ram, it appears that up to that time the dahyak right prevailed, and there appears to be no reason why it should have ceased thereafter. From the proposed rent Rs. 50 per year should be deducted; and after deducting this amount Rs. 450 are due, out of which the Plaintiff is entitled to get Rs. 225."

The decree of the Deputy Collector is dated the 23rd December 1901. The North-Western Provinces and Oudh Land Revenue Act (III of 1901) was enacted about this time, and under its provisions the revenue assessment of the Gonda District was taken in hand. In the course of the settlement proceedings relating to the Birwa Mahnon Taluqa a claim was preferred for the assessment of rent in respect of the village of Kunderwa. Before the Settlement Officer the Balrampur Estate, as the owner of the half-share of the Taluqa, was arrayed as Plaintiff, whilst the birt-holders appeared as Defendants. The Assistant Settlement Officer, after stating in his judgment that "the case was instituted in his Court simply to determine whether or not the daswantdar-holders of the village Kunderwa should be assessed with rent by him," sets out the contentions of the parties. The Taluqdar's Mookhtear urged again that the Defendants were holding at a rental of Rs. 503-14-6 under a lease executed by them, and that therefore the Settlement Court should not assess the rent on the village; whilst the Defendants contended they had never been disturbed in their possession of the village, and that for the last 30 years they had been paying rent of Rs. 500 less Rs. 50, their dahyak dues, which they were entitled to deduct. Dealing with the Kunderwa village, he held as follows :—

“When the Settlement Court allowed the daswand-holders to retain possession over the hamlet of Kunderwa, and they were not dispossessed by the Civil Court, the rent thereof should certainly be assessed by this Court. Now there only remains to be seen what would be the amount of rent. The revenue fixed formerly in respect of the village has been allowed to stand, therefore I allow the rent of Kunderwa to be the same as before for the following reasons :—

After giving his reasons for the conclusion at which he had arrived, he went on to say that whilst there was a possibility of improvement in one of the hamlets in dispute, “there was very little chance of improvement in Kunderwa.” In other words, in his opinion there was little room for enhancement in the case of Kunderwa. And accordingly he made the following order in regard to the hamlet and the village respectively :—

“For these reasons I think it advisable to let the former Revenue, Rs. 50 of Pura Sanwant Ban, stand as good, and Rs. 250 of Pura Kunderwa. The (net) profit thus comes to Rs. 500, and after deducting the dahyak dues, the rent of the hamlet Kunderwa amounts to Rs. 450; and this is the rent which I fix.”

The effect of the Assistant Settlement Officer's order was simply to recognise and affirm the rent the Defendants were paying. The Taluqdar preferred an appeal from this order to the Settlement Officer; and his order in respect of Kunderwa is in these terms :—

“This is one of those unfortunate decrees of the last settlement which gave and took away rights in the same breath. The Respondents were decreed possession of mauza Kunderwa and intermediate rights, i.e., under-proprietary but the Talukdar was given power to fix the rent, and if the under-proprietors were not prepared to pay it they could resign possession and receive 10 per cent. of assets instead. Such conflicting appeals are merely provocative of further litigation, in order to define the status of the subordinate party. The Appellant urges that as no rent was fixed at last settlement the Settlement Court has no power to fix rents now. I find that whatever else the Settlement Court at last settlement gave, it certainly conferred under-proprietary rights to land, and I am therefore empowered to fix rents under sec. 79 of the Revenue Act.”

The Settlement Officer's order was made on the 1st December 1902. From that date to November 1912, the Taluqdars remained quiescent. By that time the first Plaintiff in this action had succeeded to his father's estate; and he, on the 19th of that month, issued to the several Defendants the following notices couched in identical terms offering a three years' lease. After setting out the decree of the Extra Settlement Officer made on the 30th January 1871, the Plaintiff says :—

“I, the sender of this notice and the possessor of the Estate of Birwa Mahnon, of which the aforesaid village forms a part, assess and fix the lease money of the aforesaid village at Rs. 580, as detailed below, from 1320 F. to 1322 F. After deducting therefrom Rs. 58, the dahyak (10 per cent.) dues at the rate mentioned in the settlement decree, you shall be liable to pay every year the remaining amount of Rs. 522, as detailed below, in the instalments noted below. If you accept the rental, mentioned above, you can attend the estate office of the sender of this notice and get the patta and the Kabuliat completed; but if you fail to get the same completed within fifteen days from this date or refuse to take up the lease (Shaka) of the aforesaid village at the above rental, you shall cease to have the right of possession over the village and it shall be taken under direct management. If you fail to make a reply to this notice within seven days from this date, it shall be deemed that you do not agree to take up the lease of the village on the rental assessed by me.”

The Defendants do not seem to have given any reply to this demand—at least there is nothing on the record to show that there was a reply—and accordingly the first Plaintiff, in conjunction with Lachmi Narain, brought this suit as already stated in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Gonda on the 1st May 1913, for the following reliefs :—

“(a) That a declaration be made to the effect that the Defendants Nos. 1 to 5 have no zamindari right superior or inferior, in the entire village Kundarwa owned by the Plaintiffs.

“(b) That it may be declared that according to the old settlement decree, dated the 30th January 1871, the Plaintiff alone is entitled to assess and alter the amount of rent to be paid by the Defendants Nos. 1 to 5.

“(c) That a decree for possession of the entire village Kundarwa be given.”

He also claimed mesne profits.

The Defendants in their written statement denied the right of the Plaintiff to eject them; they admitted that under the decree of the 30th January 1871, the Plaintiff No. 1 was the superior proprietor of the village, and they claimed that under the same decree they were entitled to under-proprietary rights. And in paragraphs 24 and 25 they said as follows :—

“Thakurain Sarfaraz Kunwar obtained a decree for the superior proprietary right in respect of this village on the 24th March 1869, and in the said suit a direction had been given that the ancestor of the Defendants Nos. 1 to 5, Sheo Ratan, should bring a separate suit for under-proprietary rights. Accordingly the said Sheo Ratan Pathak, having brought a claim for the pukhtadari rights, obtained a decree on the 30th January 1871. Now the Plaintiff is the representative of Thakurain Sarfaraz Kunwar: therefore he is the superior proprietor of the said village.

“In the recent settlement Rs. 500 was determined to be the amount of rent, and after deducting Rs. 50 on account of dahyak dues, the Defendants pay Rs. 450 annually to the superior proprietor. In view of the quality of land in this village, the amount of rent cannot exceed Rs. 500. If the Court determines that the Plaintiffs and the Defendant No. 6 are entitled to a rent exceeding the amount assessed during the recent settlement, the undersigned Defendants do not object to the payment of an enhanced amount of rent. The Plaintiffs should seek redress in the Revenue Court.”

The issues raised by the Subordinate Judge were wider than the prayers in the plaint: the first was whether the Defendants were under-proprietors; and the second whether the relation of landlord and tenant existed between the parties.

He decided both issues against the Defendants, and accordingly made a decree in favour of the Plaintiffs in respect of all the reliefs asked for. He treated the Defendants as trespassers and awarded to the Plaintiffs possession of the village with mesne profits. On appeal the claim for ejectment and mesne profits was abandoned; the Judicial Commissioners therefore dealt only with the question of the Defendants' status. They were of opinion that the decree of the 30th January 1871, conferred on the birt-holder “more than a mere right of dahyak.” In their view it affirmed his right as under-proprietor, and that therefore the decree for ejectment made by the Subordinate Judge was bad. They accordingly dismissed the Plaintiffs' suit.

On the present appeal before this Board, it has been conceded that the claim for the ejectment of the Defendants and for possession is not maintainable. It is admitted that such a claim arising between landlord and tenant (even assuming that the Defendants' position is no more than that of an ordinary tenant) is exclusively cognizable by the Revenue Courts. The decision of the Board is thus confined to the first two prayers in the plaint, which relate to the status of the Defendants and the effect of the Extra Assistant Settlement Commissioner's order made on the 30th January 1871.

It seems clear that the rights of the birt-holders must be adjudged on the basis of the document which created their interest. It is called a Pottah; but the term Pottah, like the word jote in Bengal, is a general expression and comprehends all tenures and subordinate interests, from a permanent mokurrari tenure to a yearly lease. It has to be observed that in Oude, as pointed out in the Chief Commissioner's Circular already referred to, there exist various kinds of birts, the incidents of each of which differ from those of others. Some are acquired by purchase, and are accordingly called bai birts; some are given from motives of piety to Brahmins, and are designated bishunpriti birts. Sykes, in his valuable work, at p. 178, states their character thus:—

“Bishunpriti birts were cessions similar in almost every respect to the bai or purchased birts, save that these were given to Brahmins for the honour and glory of God (if not for that of the giver) and no consideration was taken.”

Such was the nature of the grant in the case reported in 14 Oudh Law Reports, p. 336, on which the Plaintiff's counsel relies in support of his contention that the Defendants have no right in the land beyond the receipt of the dahyak. The dispute there related to a bishunpriti birt (see p. 339). As the Judges dealing with that case pointed out, a bishunpriti khushast is not a grant for “valuable consideration,” but a mere “grant by favour.” Again, the settlement decree there appears to be quite different from the decree in the present case; it had simply confirmed the bishunpriti-holder's “existing possession” coupled with the Taluqdar's power to fix the rent and renew the lease. There is little or no analogy except in the common use of the word birt between a gratuitous grant like the bishunpriti birt and a jungle-clearing grant where the grantee has to incur considerable outlay before he can obtain any return from the land.

There is a reference to “jungle-clearing birts” in pp. 176-77 of Mr. Sykes' work. And on p. 191 a fuller explanation is given, thus:—

“Chaharum and Daswant (also known in the neighbouring district of Benares as Bunkuttee) is an under-proprietary right obtained by clearing jungle land under a lease granted for the purpose (bunkuttee) and bringing it under cultivation and in other cases granted to all proprietors and influential residents of the village to keep them contented and loyal. The terms Chaharum and Daswant are in use chiefly in the districts of Gonda and Bahraich, and mean respectively one-fourth and one-tenth, thus giving a clue to the original extent of these subordinate tenures; the daswant being very similar in its nature and extent to the dahyak of the birtias.”

“The use of the terms chaharum and daswant arose in this way. The terms of the lease were usually as follows:—For five years the land was rent-free; in the sixth year the tenant paid one-sixth of the produce; in the seventh, one-fifth; in the eighth, one-fourth; in the ninth, one-third; and in the tenth, one-half the full rent. Henceforward the clearer was entitled to hold at that rent so long as the land was held pakka; but if the landlord held kacha the clearer was entitled to have one-fourth or one-tenth of the produce which in practice, came to mean one-fourth or one-tenth of the land rent-free in under-proprietary right. This tenure, like the others, was liable to encroachment in the shape of an assessment of rent, but that would be low in any case.”

The Pottah in the present case expressly declares that the grantor has given the land of the village to the grantee to get it cultivated and populated. It was for the purpose of clearing the jungle, making the land fit for cultivation and bringing in *raiya*t, which carried with it the duty of sinking wells, etc. It is declared in the Pottah that "the birt-holder was to enjoy it free for five or six years." A comparatively small but gradually ascending rent is fixed for the years 1210 to 1214, in proportion, it would seem, to the increasing productiveness of the soil. After 1214 he was to pay "the revenue to the sarkar prevalent in the Taluqa, and take the das-want prevalent in the Taluqa." The deduction was in the nature of rebate.

By his order of the 30th January 1871, the Extra Assistant Commissioner declared the right of the birt-holder, and made a decree "upholding" in express terms his "possession and occupation as an under-proprietor . . . under the provisions of Circular II of 1862 in respect of the village Kunderwa." The reference to the Circular in the decree shows, as the Judicial Commissioners rightly observe, that "the Extra Assistant Commissioner decided and must have intended to decide" that the birt-holder was an under-proprietor under the provisions of that Circular. The Extra Assistant Commissioner further declared the condition on which the land was held under the Pottah, that "the Taluqdar shall always have the power to renew the Pottah and to award and assess the Jama according to the practice observed during the Shahi times;" that is, before the Annexation. The Jama is to be assessed according to the practice observed prior to 1855, as indicated in the Circular itself. There is no evidence, however, in the case what the practice was in those days. The Pottah, however, lays down a standard for the assessment of the Jama. The Taluqdar cannot capriciously enhance the rent; the assessment must be in accordance with the rate prevalent in the Taluqa. Whether it is in accordance with such rate or not, in case of a dispute, is a matter wholly within the cognizance of the Revenue Courts. Nor, from the terms of Pottah or the decree of 1871, does it appear that the Taluqdar is vested with the power of amending and assessing the rent arbitrarily at short intervals, which would necessarily be a harassment to the inferior holder as well as the raiyat.

The facts already recited show that for a number of years the Defendants have been paying a rent of Rs. 500, less their tenth. It is alleged by the Plaintiff that between 1875 and 1879 there was an interruption of their possession, and the village was let on a higher rental to other people. If these Pottahs represented real transactions it is difficult to understand why no reference was made to them in the proceedings in 1898, or 1901 before the Deputy Collector. Again, considering that the rent in the Pottah for 1287 is stated to be Rs. 1,451, and in that of 1875 it is stated to be Rs. 1,826, it is not explained how the Defendants were found in 1901 to be paying only Rs. 500. Anyhow, interruption of that character cannot affect or alter the Defendants' rights under the Pottah of 1802 or the decree once they got back into possession.

On the whole their Lordships concur with the Judicial Commissioners in holding that the Respondents, as declared in the decree of 1871, possess an under-proprietary right in the village of Kunderwa, granted to their ancestor in 1802. The appeal will, therefore, be dismissed with costs, and their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly.

BHAGWAT DAYAL
SINGH, since de-

Appellant,
v.
RAM RATAN
SAHU and ors.,
Respondents.

Order in Council—Construction—Interest, from what date payable—Mesne profits—Compensation for improvements—Excessive time taken by litigation in India, commented upon.

An Order in Council directed that on payment by the Appellant of certain sums of money, due in respect of mortgages, and interest thereon at 6 per cent., the Appellant should recover possession of the property together with mesne profits:

Held—That interest should run concurrently with the mesne profits, that being the construction which the Board had placed upon the order upon an application for review.

Held, also—That part of the mesne profits having been due to permanent improvements made by the disseisor, a deduction of 10 per cent. was properly allowed by the High Court in respect thereof.

Held, further—That the increased rents that could be properly attributable to the improvements could be properly set off against the mesne profits even though they were not actually executed by the persons in possession of the date of the decree, but by persons from whom they had purchased the property.

The Order in Council of which interpretation was sought was passed in conformity with the judgment of the Board in Bhagwat Dayal Singh v. Debi Dayal

Sahu (1), where the facts are more fully set out.

Jileb Kuer made an unauthorised sale of three villages to Debi Dayal. On her death the reversionary heirs sold the same villages to Raja Bhugbat Dayal Singh who brought suits against Debi Dayal to obtain possession of the property. The suits eventually came before the Judicial Committee and on the 25th January 1908 an order in Council was passed which provided inter alia—“that upon the Appellant Raja Rai Bhagwat Dayal Singh, paying to the Respondent Debi Dayal Sahu the two sums of Rs. 11,198-13-6 and Rs. 6,400 found in the latter's favour by the Court of the Subordinate Judge together with interest on the said sums at six per cent. per annum, the Appellant do recover possession of the property the subject-matter of the said two suits together with mesne profits to be ascertained in execution proceedings . . .”

In 1909 the Appellant decree-holder filed a suit to enforce the said order in Council and prayed for possession of the properties in dispute. Possession was duly given but the execution of the Order in Council was objected to on the ground that the claim for mesne profits covered a period of 15 years but interest on the amount due to the judgment-debtors was confined to one year namely from January 1908.*

The other point was with regard to mesne profits which it was contended had been increased by permanent improvements effected by the Rajah's predecessors.

The Subordinate Judge of Palamau decided that no interest was chargeable prior to the date of the Order in Council, and that the judgment-debtors were not entitled to any allowance on account of improvements effected by them.

This decree was varied by the High Court of Patna on appeal. The learned Judges held that interest was payable from the dates of the bonds and not from the date of the Order and that the judgment-debtors should have as compensation for improvements a deduction of 10 per cent of the annual profits of the villages in calculating the mesne profits.

Against the decree of the High Court the decree-holder appealed to His Majesty in Council and the judgment-debtors filed a cross-appeal by special leave.

Messrs. A. M. Dunne, K. C. and B. Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by

LORD BUCKMASTER.—Twenty-six years ago in the month of November 1895, one Raja Rai Bhagwat Dayal Singh, bought three villages known as Chianki, Ganke, and Lalgara, which were situate within the jurisdiction of the Subordinate Judge of Palamau in the District of Ranchi. Together with these villages he bought litigation, which has ensued from that day until this. He found that the villages were occupied by persons who claimed an absolute title under conveyances that had been made by a Hindu widow with a limited estate. It was consequently necessary for the Raja to take proceedings for the purpose of obtaining possession. He accordingly instituted a suit which was heard before the Subordinate Judge, who allowed his claim to possession and also mesne profits as from the proper date. That judgment was made the subject of an appeal to the High Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal, and upon that appeal the judgment was reversed. From the decree of the High Court at Fort William an appeal was brought before their Lordships, who restored the judgment of the Subordinate Judge. They advised that the appeal should be allowed, and that the Appellant should recover possession together with mesne profits, which were to be ascertained in the execution proceedings; but they did something more, which has caused the first of the questions that has been argued upon the present appeal. It appeared that although the persons whom the purchaser in 1895 ejected had no title to the property against the Raja, yet the widow had, before the sale under which they claimed, raised money for necessities, ancestral worship, and other similar matters for all of which she was perfectly entitled to charge the estate. Mortgages had been executed to secure these monies, and when the properties were sold by the widow, these mortgages were paid off. The Subordinate Judge, when the matter first came before him, decided that certain parts of these mortgages which he gathered together under two heads, amounting in the one case to Rs. 11,198, and in the other to Rs. 6,400, should be allowed, and that these sums should carry interest at the rate of 6 per cent. When the matter was before their Lordships they confirmed the finding of the Subordinate Judge, both as to possession and as to those sums, and found that the sums that were to be paid should carry interest at 6 per cent. per annum.

The first question that has been raised upon this appeal is as from what date the 6 per cent. should run. The proceedings have emerged from a finding originally made by the Subordinate Judge, who held that according to the true construction of this order the interest should run from the date of his own original decree, but the

High Court of Judicature at Patna has said that the effect of the order is to take the interest back to the date of the mortgages. It is unnecessary for their Lordships to settle in detail the question which led to that conclusion, for this reason : that the order of their Lordships on the former appeal was the subject of review, and an application was made to them for the purpose of ascertaining what it was that was meant by the allowance of interest at 6 per cent. when no date was mentioned as the date from which it should run, and upon the matter coming again before their Lordships on the 11th February 1909, upon an application by the Respondents for modification of the judgment, they made it clear that what they meant was that the interest should run concurrently with the mesne profits; that as one sum was allowed on the one hand for the mesne profits, the sum for interest should be allowed upon the other. This relieves their Lordships entirely from the necessity of considering what, without the assistance of that interpretation, they might have decided that the order meant, and they can only express their sincere regret that the litigant parties in these proceedings did not think right at the earliest moment to have obtained the information which has not been placed before a single one of the Courts from whom this dispute has proceeded, and indeed was only placed before their Lordships this morning after the case had been partly heard. It at any rate disposes entirely of the first part of the appeal, and the order that is appealed from in that respect must be modified so as to bring it into agreement with the declared intention of their Lordships in the earlier proceedings. But this does not dispose of the whole of the appeal, for there still remains a further matter for consideration that arises in this way. When the inquiry was directed with regard to the mesne profits, a question arose as to whether part, at least, of the mesne profits had not been due to permanent improvements that had been executed upon the property by the purchasers whose title had been dispossessed by the Raja, who had bought in November 1895. There has never been any contention before their Lordships as to the right to obtain some allowance in respect of these improvements, if in the circumstances of this case such a right was capable of being established. The Commissioner before whom the matter was first heard disposed entirely of the two villages, Chianki and Ganke, with regard to which no further question now arises; but with regard to Lalgara he stated that the purchaser from the widow had made improvements, and that in consequence of these improvements the jama of the village was raised to Rs. 2,400. There seems no doubt that these improvements were in their very nature of a permanent character. They were the erection of tanks for the purpose of irrigation, and the construction of a dyke. It seems quite impossible to believe that any estate that had received the advantage of seven or eight big tanks and the irrigation consequent upon their use would not have had the jama thereby increased. The learned Commissioner in his determination made a finding that the amount of the mesne profits for which the person in possession would be made liable amounted to a sum which in respect of this village was Rs. 35,057, and he then added that if he was entitled to a deduction for the improvement, then a deduction of Rs. 4,000 should be made therefrom, and if not, it should not. In other words, what he attempted to do was to make the deduction for the capital spent in the improvements and not the amount by which the mesne profits themselves had been increased by the expenditure. The matter then went back before the Subordinate Judge, and he confirmed the report of the Commissioner as a matter of form. The case then came before the High Court of Judicature at Fort William, and they dealt with the objections and remanded the matter with this direction :—

“ Neither party will be entitled to challenge the figures arrived at by the Commissioner nor the findings arrived at by him, except that with regard to the improvements, the judgment-debtors will be at liberty to show on the materials on the record that the Commissioner has not given them credit for any particular improvement which they are justly entitled to. But they will not be entitled to take exception to the findings of the Commissioner as to their value, and no fresh Commission will be issued nor any further evidence will be allowed to be given by the parties.”

It appears that the further objections that were taken upon this remand were first of all to the allowance of any money at all, and secondly, it was argued that an allowance could not be made because the improvements had in fact been executed by the person who had been the original purchaser from the vendor who had the limited estate, and that he had again sold and that it was the purchaser from him who was in possession at the time when the final purchase of the property was made. Their Lordships are of the opinion that there is no substance in these contentions. The increased rent that is properly attributable to the improvement can be properly set off against the mesne profits, even although it was not actually executed by the person in possession at the moment when the decree for possession was made, and the only question that is left is to determine whether or no any sum should be allowed. The Subordinate Judge held that there should be no sum allowed at all, and the High Court at Patna has fixed a sum of 10 per cent. on the rents. With regard to the adequacy or the accuracy of a 10 per cent. allowance, their Lordships are not in a position to speak; they cannot possibly know the circumstances, but the sum of 10 per cent. appears to be a perfectly fair and reasonable sum to allow in the circumstances of this case. The facts found by the Commissioner are those upon which all the judgments must proceed, and among these is the statement that the improvements have increased the value. Their Lordships are clearly of opinion that that is not only the finding of the Commissioner, but that it is the only reasonable inference that can be drawn from the character of the improvements, and they therefore think, in that respect, that the judgment of the High Court must be affirmed.

That disposes of all the matters upon this appeal, but their Lordships cannot part with this case without expressing once more their regret as to the interminable course of litigation in India. It cannot be for the welfare of any community that the purchaser of property bought in good faith should be liable to endless quarrels arising out of his purchase, which continue, as they do in this case, and as they must in many, beyond the period of his natural life. The man who bought this property never knew what it was to be free from the anxiety of a law suit until the day he died; even then the litigation was not ended, and has been pursued until the present appeal. This has itself taken four years to come here from the High Court, and of course no explanation has or ever can be offered of why these delays occur. Their Lordships refer once more to this matter in the earnest hope that a condition of things which they regard as constituting a serious blot upon the administration of justice should be removed.

With regard to the costs of this appeal, their Lordships have given careful consideration to what order justice requires.

and they have come to the conclusion that there ought to be no costs of the appeal or of the cross-appeal; that the costs of the High Court, although the order of the High Court has been varied, should in the circumstances of this case be allowed to stand. They will therefore humbly advise His Majesty that the order of the High Court be varied to the extent that has been already indicated, namely, by declaring that the interest of 6 per cent. should run concurrently with the mesne profits, but that the costs should be dealt with as above mentioned.

LETTERS PATENT APPEAL

No. 44 of 1920.

MOOKERJEE, J.	MOHAN MOLLA,
PANTON, J.	Plaintiff, Appellant,
1921,	v.
Heard, 25, July.	BARU BIBI and anr.,
Judgment,	Defendants,
23, August.	Respondents.

Mahomedan Law—Divorce by writing—Pregnancy followed by miscarriage—Divorce in khula form—Date on which period of iddat commences—Circumstances by which iddat may be terminated earlier.

A Mahomedan husband executed and registered a deed of divorce in favour of the wife and a few days later saw her, pronounced the legal formulas, made over the document to her and went away. Subsequently she went through ceremonies of marriage with two persons one after the other, the marriage with the Plaintiff taking place last. In a suit for restitution of conjugal rights by the Plaintiff on the allegation that the first marriage after the divorce took place within the period of iddat and as such was void, the defence set up was that the period of iddat commenced on the date of the execution of the document and expired before the first marriage after the divorce took place, that the lady was pregnant at the time of the divorce and miscarried and this had the effect of terminating the period of iddat, and that the divorce was in khula form :

Held—That the divorce took effect from the date of the writing and not from the date of its receipt by the wife unless there were words in the instrument showing a different intention.

That the case must be sent back for re-investigation as to the validity of the first marriage after the divorce on production of the Talaknama so as to enable the Court to consider whether there was anything in the document preventing its taking effect from the date of its execution and after allowing the parties to adduce relevant evidence regarding the divorce so as to enable the Court to consider the other points raised in the defence.

This was an appeal preferred on the 25th June 1921 from a decision of the Hon'ble Justice Newbould, dated the 3rd May 1920, passed in S. A. No. 1629 of 1919, reversing that of Babu Matilal Ray, Subordinate Judge, Faridpur, dated the 17th July 1919, reversing that of Babu Satchidananda Mukerjee, Munsif, Madaripur, dated the 15th June 1918.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment of Newbould, J., which is as follows :—

NEWBOULD, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit for restitution of conjugal rights. The first Defendant Baru Bibi was divorced by her first husband by a Talaknama, dated 12th May 1916. Eight days afterwards the husband saw the wife, pronounced the legal formula and made the document over to her. On 12th August 1916 the Defendant No. 1 went through a form of marriage with Defendant No. 3 and on 3rd September 1916 she went through a form of marriage with the Plaintiff. The lower Appellate Court has decreed the Plaintiff's suit on the finding that the marriage to Defendant No. 3 was invalid because it took place during the period of iddat. In coming to this finding it appears to have wrongly held that the period of iddat commenced on 20th May when the word talak was pronounced within the hearing of the wife. From the authorities it would appear that the period of iddat, when there has been a divorce by a deed, commences from the date of the document. In the case of Sara Bai v. Rabia Bai (1), it has been held that "a divorce by talaknama 'is effected as soon as the words are written even without the wife receiving the writing.'" Also, at p. 164 of Wilson's Anglo Mahammdan law; 2nd Edition, I find "for the purpose of estimating the duration of the iddat, a divorce by writing is considered to take effect from the date of the writing, not from the date of receipt, in default of words showing a different intention." Here it is not suggested that the talaknama contained any words which would suggest that it would not take immediate effect. Further authority in support of this view will be found in Tyabji's Mohammedan Law, 2nd Edition, p. 219. For the Respondent reliance is placed on the case of Furzund Hossein v. Janu Bibi (2) but that case has no bearing on the point that arises in this case as the divorce which was the subject of that case was not alleged to have been effected by a deed. If the divorce of Defendant No. 1 by her first husband took effect from 12th May 1916 there can be no ground for holding that the marriage to Defendant No. 3 was void. Even if the period of the iddat be held to have commenced from 20th May it is quite possible that it might have expired before this marriage. The Defendants' contention is that she was pregnant at the time of her divorce and miscarried. That would determine the period of the iddat. Further, in the case of a girl of this age, the period of iddat is not three calendar months but three courses in the case of a woman subject to menstruation; even if I held that the lower Appellate Court was right in law in dating the commencement of the iddat from 20th May, it would be necessary to remand the case for a definite finding as to the truth or otherwise of the allegation of pregnancy and miscarriage. It appears that the Defendant No. 1 is still living with Defendant No. 3. The marriage of the Plaintiff took place during the validity of her marriage with Defendant No. 3 and consequently was not a legal marriage. I must, therefore, hold that the Plaintiff's case fails and was rightly dismissed by the Court of first instance. I accordingly decree this appeal, set aside the judgment and decree of the lower Appellate Court and restore those of the Court of first instance. The Appellant will get his costs in this and in the lower Appellate Court.

Babus Trailokyanath Ghose and Manmotho Nath Ray for the Plaintiff-Appellant.

This is an appeal under cl. 15 of the Letter's Patent from the judgment of Mr. Justice Newbould in an appeal from appellate decree in a suit for restitution of conjugal rights.

(1) I. L. R. 30 Bom. 537 (1906).

(2) I. L. R. 4 Cal. 588 (1878).

MOHAN MOLLA v. BARU BIBI.

The first Defendant Baru Bibi was married to one Erfan. On the 12th May 1916, Erfan executed and registered a deed of divorce in her favour. On the 20th May 1916, Erfan saw the lady, pronounced the legal formulas, made over the document to her and went away. On the 12th August 1916, she went through a ceremony of marriage with the third Defendant. On the 3rd September 1916, she went through another ceremony of marriage with the Plaintiff. The Plaintiff and the third Defendant are, consequently, the rival claimants. The case for the Plaintiff is that no valid marriage took place between her and the third Defendant on the 12th August 1916, inasmuch as the period of iddat had not expired at that time. If this view is maintained, there is no bar to the validity of the marriage between her and the Plaintiff. The determination of the controversy between the parties thus depends on the solution of the question, when did the period of iddat expire? In other words, when did the period of iddat commence—on the 12th May 1916, as the third Defendant urges or on the 20th May 1916, as the Plaintiff contends? The Court of first instance decided against the Plaintiff and dismissed the suit. The Subordinate Judge decided in favour of the Plaintiff and decreed the claim. Mr. Justice Newbould has reversed this decision and restored the decree of dismissal made by the trial Court. On the present appeal, we have been invited to decide whether the divorce became operative from the 12th May 1916, or from the 20th May 1916.

It is stated in the Digest of Anglo Mahamadan Law by Sir Roland Wilson (5th Edition 1921, Art. 62) that a talak divorce may be effected by writing as well as by word of mouth (Baillie Book III Chap. II, sec. 6, pp. 232-235). Such writing must ordinarily be addressed to, and reach, the wife. Two exceptions are then specified. We are concerned here only with the first exception, namely, that for the purpose of estimating the duration of the iddat, a divorce by writing is considered to take effect from the date of the writing, not from the date of receipt, in default of words showing a different intention. The rule thus enunciated is supported by the judgment of Batchelor, J., in Sara Bai v. Rabia Bai (1) where it is stated that the authorities show that a bain talak, such as this, reduced to manifest and customary writing, takes effect immediately on the mere writing, Baillie, p. 233; Mahomed Yusoof, Tagore Law Lectures, Vol. III p. 95. The Divorce being absolute, it is effected as soon as the words are written "even without the wife receiving the writing." It is to be noted that in the case mentioned, the talak was talak-i-bain or irrevocable talak, and belonged to the category of talak-ul-bidaat, the only kind of talak which becomes irrevocable immediately it is pronounced. The other two kinds of talak, namely, talak ashan and talak-hasan, are always revocable, and the option to revoke continues, in the former case till the expiration of the period of iddat, and in the latter case till the third pronouncement.

The effect of a talak by writing as stated in Sara Bai v. Rabia Bai (1) is accepted by Tayabji in his treatise on principles of Mohammedan Law, Art. 145. This view is not contradictory to the decision in Furzund Hossein v. Janu Bibi (2) where the divorce was not by writing, and it was ruled that the mere pronouncement of the word talak three times by the husband, without its being addressed to any person, is not sufficient to constitute a valid divorce. We observe, however, that the decision in Furzund Hossein v. Janu Bibi (2) has been doubted in the cases of Fulchand v. Nawab

MOHAN MOLLA v. BARU BIBI.

Ali Chowdhury (3) and Asha Bibi v. Kadir Ibrahim (4) where it was ruled that according to the Hanafi Law, it is not essential that the talak or words of repudiation should be addressed directly to the wife to constitute a valid divorce, and that, consequently, the absence of the wife does not make the pronouncement of talak void and inefficacious. A similar view appears to have been adopted in Wahid Khan v. Zainab Bibi (5).

The position then is that the divorce in this case took effect from the date of the writing and not from the date of its receipt by the wife, unless there are words in the instrument which show a different intention. As the document has not been produced, it is impossible for us to decide finally its legal effect on the status of the parties and the matter must accordingly be re-investigated. The Respondent has further contended that she was pregnant at the time of her divorce and miscarried; if this fact be established, the period of iddat would be terminated. It has also been urged that in the case of a girl of this age, subject to menstruation, the period of iddat was not three calendar months but three courses. This also has not been considered (Hedaya, Book IV, Chap. XII, p. 128). Finally, it has been argued on behalf of the Respondent that, as appears from the register of talaknamas, the divorce was in Khula form; if the divorce was really in that form, the fact cannot be ignored and may vitally affect the situation of the parties.

We hold, accordingly, that the appeal must be allowed, the decree made by Mr. Justice Newbould set aside and the case remitted to the Court of first instance for retrial of the question of validity of the marriage between the first and third Defendants. The Court will take steps to compel the production of the talaknama and allow the parties to adduce relevant evidence regarding the divorce of the first Defendant by her first husband. The costs of the two hearings in this Court and of the hearing before the Subordinate Judge will abide the result.

SRISTIDHAR GHOSE,
Defendant, Appellant,
v.
RAKHYAKALI DAS,
Plaintiff, Respondent.

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), sec. 59, attestation of mortgage deed—Scribe who signs for and on behalf of the mortgagor if competent to become one of the attesting witnesses—Personal decree, when allowable.

The executant of a certain mortgage deed was illiterate and she executed the instrument "by the pen of" the scribe of the document, who also signed the document as one of the attesting witnesses:

Held—That the document was not legally attested by the scribe according to the provisions of sec. 59 of the Transfer of Property Act.

Where no mark, seal or thumb-impression of the mortgagor appears on the mortgage deed, the scribe who executes the document for and on behalf of the mortgagor is not competent to become an attesting witness to attest the signature he himself has written out.

A personal decree for the recovery of the money is only allowable if the suit is brought within six years of the date of the bond or from the date of any payment within the meaning of sec. 20 of the Limitation Act.

This was an appeal against the decree of Babu Amullya Chandra Ghose, Subordinate Judge of Zillah Burdwan, dated the 30th of October 1919, affirming the decree of Babu Tarani Kanta Nag, Munsif, 2nd Court at Katwa, dated the 28th of September 1918.

The facts will fully appear from the judgment.

MOOKERJEE, J.—This is an appeal by the Defendant in a suit to enforce a mortgage security, alleged to have been executed by him in favour of the Plaintiff-Respondent on the 21st April 1908. The principal sum advanced is stated to have been Rs. 90 which carried interest at the rate of 18½ per cent. per annum and was repayable on the 13th April 1909. The present action was commenced on the 28th November 1917 for the recovery of Rs. 210, upon the allegation that nothing had been paid towards the satisfaction of the mortgage debt, except three sums paid on account of interest, namely, Rs. 16-4-0 in 1910, Rs. 12 in 1911 and Rs. 12 in 1912. The Defendant pleaded that the Plaintiff was not competent to sue inasmuch as the real creditor was her paramour, one Hari Pal, who had been paid in full; that the bond had not been duly attested and thus could not operate as a mortgage bond; and that the suit was barred by limitation. The trial Court found that the real creditor was the Plaintiff herself that the bond had been duly attested, that the suit was not barred by limitation, as it had been instituted within twelve years from the due date, and in this view, made the usual mortgage decree. On appeal, the Subordinate Judge confirmed the decree of the Court of first instance. On second appeal, it has been argued on behalf of the Defendant that the facts found show that the bond was not duly attested, and in support of this contention reliance has been placed upon the decision in Upendra Chandra v. Hukum Chand, which is also reported as Rajani v. Panchananda (1).

The facts material for the decision of the question of law raised before us lie in a narrow compass. The Defendant mortgagor, Sristidhar Ghose, was illiterate and was unable to sign his name. The bond was written out by one Bholanath Ghose. The name of the executant was at his request written out by Bholanath Ghose. The actual endorsement is as follows. "Sri Sristidhar Ghose by the pen of Sri Bholanath Ghose." At the foot of the document, we have the following entry: "Witnesses, scribe—Sri Bholanath Ghose."

Sri Hari Pal by the pen of Sri Bholanath Ghose." Bholanath Ghose, who has been examined as a witness, states that at the request of Hari Pal who was illiterate he wrote his name. The substance of the matter consequently, is that Bholanath

SRISTIDHAR GHOSE v. RAKHYAKALI DASI.

Ghose wrote the body of the document, wrote the name of the executant, wrote the name of Hari Pal as an attesting witness and signed his own name as an attesting witness. The question arises on these facts, whether the document was attested by two witnesses within the meaning of sec. 59 of the Transfer of Property Act. The decision of Fletcher and Walmsely, JJ., in Upendra v. Hukum Chand, which is also reported as Rajani v. Panchananda (1) shows that the question must be answered in the negative. That case is an authority for the proposition that where no mark, seal or thumb impression of the mortgagor appears on the mortgage deed, the scribe who executes the document for, and on behalf of, the mortgagor is not competent to become an attesting witness to attest the signature he himself has written out. This decision is clearly applicable to the facts of the present case. We do not overlook that an examination of the original document shows that there is what looks like a small cross after the name of Sristidhar Ghose; that was apparently put by Bholanath Ghose, and there is no suggestion that Sristidhar Ghose executed the document by affixing thereon his mark as he might have done (see Act III of 1885 which amends the Transfer of Property Act and makes the provisions of sec. 59 supplemental to the Indian Registration Act, sec. 3; see also the General Clauses Act, 1897, sec. 3; cl. 52). Here the case is that Bholanath Ghose wrote out the name of Sristidhar Ghose at his request, and this constituted a valid execution of the deed just as if Sristidhar Ghose had written out his own name. In such circumstances, it is plain, on the authority of the decision in Upendra v. Hukum Chand, which is also reported as Rajani

v. Panchananda (1) that Bholanath Ghose was not competent to attest his own signature, as an attesting witness. But we have been pressed on behalf of the Plaintiff-Respondent to hold that the decision in Upendra v. Hukum Chand (1) is not well-founded on principle and to refer the matter to a Full Bench. After examination of the arguments addressed to us we are unable to accede to this request.

Sec. 59 of the Transfer of Property Act provides that where the principal money secured is Rs. 100 or upwards, a mortgage can be effected only by a registered instrument signed by the mortgagor and attested by at least two witnesses. Prima facie, the persons who attest are different from the person who signs. The term "attest" is not defined in the statute and may consequently be taken to have been used in its ordinary sense; see Sarurijigar Begum v. Baroda Kant (2), where various definitions will be found quoted. The Oxford Dictionary states that the word is derived from the Latin "ad" and "testari" and means literally "to witness" or "to bear witness." This is the sense in which the term "attestation" is used by Blackstone in his commentaries (Vol. II, 307): "the last requisite to the validity of a deed is the attestation or execution of it in the presence of witnesses." The same meaning is attributed to the term by Lord St. Leonards when in his Handy Book of Property Law (XVIII, 136) he says that the attestation of a will should be in this form: "Signed by the above testator, in the presence of us present at the same time who have hereunto signed our names." To the same effect are the observations in Wright v. Wakeford (3), where it was ruled that the witnesses who attest must not only see the execution but sign their own names as part of the same transaction, so that an attestation added after many years by persons who had seen the signing of the deed will not supply the defect. Reference may also be made to Hudson v. Parker (4), where Dr. Lushington said: "to attest is to bear witness to a fact. Take a common example. A notary public attests a protest. He bears witness, not to the statements in that protest, but to the fact of the making of these statements. So the witnesses in a will bear witness to all that the statute requires attesting witnesses to attest, namely, that the signature was made or acknowledged in their presence." Of precisely the same import are the rules enunciated by Dr. Lushington in Bryan v. White (5), by Lord Campbell, C. J., in Roberts v. Philipps (6) and by Lord Lyndhurst, L. C., in Burdett v. Spilsbury (7), which were all quoted with approval by the Judicial Committee in Shamou Patter v. Abdul Kadir (8). All this obviously implies that the person who makes the signature is not the identical person who witnesses that the signature has been made in his presence. We are unable to accept the contention of the Respondent that the scribe who wrote out the name of the executant may be taken to have at the same time witnessed that fact, in other words, to have simultaneously performed a double function. It might have been maintained with equal plausibility that where a deed had to be executed by A, and B, under authority conferred by a power of attorney, executes it on his behalf writing thereon "A by his duly constituted attorney B," B is competent to become an attesting witness, to witness the endorsement made by himself. Dr. Kanjilal frankly conceded that such a position was manifestly incongruous and untenable. But, plainly, no real distinction in principle can be found between the hypothetical case mentioned and the concrete instance before us. In our opinion, there is no escape from the position that a scribe cannot be an attesting witness of what he has himself written. If in the case of execution of a document by a literate man, who can write his own name, it is deemed necessary by the legislature to have two other persons as attesting witnesses, it is at least equally essential to have two independent attesting witnesses when the man is illiterate and cannot write his name which is written for him by another; Saroopchand v. Tularam (9). In such a case, one object of the statute in requiring attestation is to ensure identity of person and to prevent the fraudulent substitution of another document, another object may be to surround the executant with witnesses who may be able to judge of his capacity. If for the attainment of these and other objects, two attesting witnesses are necessary when the executant is literate, the need is very much more imperative, where the executant is illiterate, and the additional question must arise whether his name has really been written by a person authorised in that behalf. It is plain that the contention of the Respondent ignores the fundamental distinction between execution and attestation. The term "executed" signifies the acts required of the person who makes the deed either himself or through a representative, the term "attested" signifies the act of the witnesses who see the execution; obviously the same person cannot possess the two-fold capacity.

SRISTIDHAR GHOSE v. RAKHYAKALI DAS.

Reliance has been placed by the Respondent upon a series of judicial decisions which are not directly in point and lend no real support to his contention. In Dinamoyee v. Bun Behari (10), a lady executed a mortgage deed by putting her finger mark to the same; thereafter a person, who saw her put the finger mark, wrote her name at her request and added the words "by the pen of " before his name written by himself. It was ruled that the document was executed by the lady and not by him on her behalf, and that, consequently, he was a competent attesting witness. A similar view was adopted in Govind Bhikaji v. Bhan Gopal (11). There, an illiterate person signed a mortgage deed by putting his mark to it, which mark was subscribed by the scribe, of the deed. The deed was attested by two independent witnesses. It was ruled that the deed had been duly executed and attested. The execution was complete when the mortgagor, unable to write his name, placed his mark thereon. The function of the scribe ended when he signed his name at the conclusion of the body of the document; he thereafter signed his own name under the description of the mark made by the executant, with a view to authenticate the mark, that is, to vouch the execution of the deed by the markman, in other words, to act as an attesting witness. In Sasi Bhusan v. Chandra Peshakar (12), the question arose whether for purpose of valid attestation it is essential that the witness must sign his name personally. It was ruled that a deed is properly attested, when the signatures of the witnesses, who are illiterate and unable to write, are affixed for them by another person at their request. The Court observed that it had previously been held, in the case of executant himself, that his name may be written on his behalf by another person authorised for the purpose, Deo Narain v. Kukur Bind (13). It may be added that the view taken in Sasi Bhusan v. Chandra Peshakar (12) is not inconsistent with that adopted in Paramhans v. Randhir (14) and Ram Bahadur v. Ajodhya Singh (15). These cases, however, do not support the proposition that the person who, at the request of the mortgagor, writes out the name of the mortgagor as executant, can also become an attesting witness that is, attest the signature made by himself. On the other hand, the principle of the decisions in Sarurijigar Begum v. Baroda Kant (2) and Debendra Chandra v. Behari Lal (16), militates against the contention of the Respondent. In both these cases, it was ruled that a person who is a party to a deed cannot be regarded as an attesting witness, and this conclusion was supported by reference to the decisions in Irreshfield v. Reed (17) and Wickham v. Marquis of Bath (18), which recognise the fundamental principle that the law insists upon attestation in certain cases in order that a witness shall be present to testify that the party who purports to have executed the deed had done the act required; consequently, a co-executant or a mortgagee cannot be an attesting witness. The reason for this view was emphasised by Lord Selborne, L. C., in a well-known passage in his judgment in the case of Seal v. Claridge (19), which may be usefully recalled here: "I was at first surprised that no authority could be found directly in point; but no doubt the common sense of mankind has always rejected the notion that the party to a deed could also attest it. I do not pay much attention to the old rule of evidence whereby interested persons were rendered incompetent as witnesses; it has now been done away with by statute. What is the meaning of the word 'attestation' apart from the Bills of Sale Act, 1878? The word implies the presence of some person who stands by, but is not a party to the transaction. The view which I take seems to be confirmed by the circumstance that attestation is unnecessary, unless it is required by an instrument creating a power or by some statute. If the argument of Mr. Dugdale is correct, the attestation required by the Bills of Sale Act, 1878, would be satisfied by the mere repetition of the signature of a party to the deed; can this be regarded as a useful provision? I do not place much reliance upon what was said by Lord Eldon, L. C., in Coles v. Trecothick (20), but I do rely upon Freshfield v. Reed (17). It follows from that case that the party to an instrument cannot 'attest' it." Reference may further be made to the exposition of the meaning of the term "attestation" given by the Judicial Committee in the cases of Shamu Patter v. Abdul Kadir (8), Padarath Haldar v. Ram Nomi (21) and Ganga Pershad v. Isri Pershad (22), see also Sarurijigar Begum

v. Baroda Kant (2). The substance of the matter is that when an instrument is required to be attested, the meaning is that a witness must be present at its execution and shall testify that it has been executed by the proper person; Freshfield v. Reed (17). To attest an instrument is accordingly, not merely, to subscribe one's name to it as having been present at its execution, but includes also essentially the presence in fact at its execution of some disinterested person, capable of giving evidence as to what took place; Roberts v. Philipps (6) and Ford v. Kettle (28). We hold accordingly that the decision of Fletcher and Walmsley, JJ., in Upendra v. Hukum Chand, which is also reported as Rajani v. Panchananda (1) is well-founded on principle and we are not prepared to depart from the rule enunciated therein. The inference follows that the mortgage deed in suit was not duly attested and consequently does not operate as a mortgage; nor does it create a charge; Shamu Patter v. Abdul Kadir (8) and Lian Narain v. Adhindra Nath (24). The mortgage decree made by the Court below must accordingly be set aside.

The question next arises; whether the Plaintiff is entitled to a personal decree for recovery of the money which has been found to have been advanced. As the suit was instituted more than six years after the due date of the bond, this involves the question of limitation which has not been considered from this point of view. Its decision must depend upon the genuineness or otherwise of the payments of interest alleged to have been made by the Defendant to the Plaintiff within the meaning of sec. 20 of the Indian Limitation Act.

The result is that this appeal is allowed, the decree of the Subordinate Judge set aside and the case remanded to him for reconsideration of the question of limitation with reference to the provisions of sec. 20 and Art. 116 of the Indian Limitation Act. The Subordinate Judge will be at liberty to take additional evidence to be adduced by both sides upon the question, whether the alleged payments were made, and if so, on what dates. The costs will abide the result.

BUCKLAND, J.—This is an appeal by the Defendant against the decision of the learned Judge of Burdwan, dated the 30th October 1919, upholding the decision of the Munsif of Katwa in a suit on mortgage.

It has been contended that the suit should have been dismissed so far as there was a claim to realise the amount due by sale of the property purporting to have been mortgaged on the ground that the deed was not attested as required by sec. 59 of the Transfer of Property Act.

What actually are the facts as regards execution and attestation is not clear from the judgment of either of the lower Courts. The learned Munsif says in his judgment that Hari Pal one of the attesting witnesses is dead and the other one is the scribe Bholanath. He does not say how the executant executed the document. The learned Subordinate Judge has not considered the evidence on the point but has contended himself with merely observing that "the evidence on the record established that the bond in suit was attested as a mortgage bond by at least two witnesses and the Defendant admits execution." On that he has found that the document was duly attested.

In these circumstances, ordinarily, the appeal would have to be remanded for a rehearing on this point, but there is no dispute as to what occurred and we have seen the deed for ourselves.

It is common ground that the executant was illiterate, that he executed the instrument "by the pen of Sri Bholanath Ghose," the scribe, who also purports to be an attesting witness.

The point therefore is, whether in these circumstances Bholanath was a competent attesting witness. Unless Bholanath was a competent attesting witness it is immaterial, having regard to the provisions of the section, whether or how Hari Pal attested the document.

The case is clearly covered by authority. In Rajani Kanla Bhadra v. Panchananda (1), the facts were that the scribe executed the document for and on behalf of the mortgagor. He signed it also as a scribe and there was one other attesting witness. The scribe having executed the document for, and on behalf of, the mortgagor was held to be incompetent to attest his own signature as attesting witness even in the view that the subscription of his name as the scribe amounted to attestation.

But even were the matter res integra I should not be prepared to hold otherwise. Though the case [Shamu v. Abdul (8)] mentioned in the judgment to which I have just referred is not a direct authority upon the point, it contains observations making it clear beyond all questions what is the meaning of the word "attest." The following extract from the judgment of their Lordships will suffice: "In Bryan v. White (5) Dr. Lushington in 1850 laid down that "attest" means the persons shall be present and see what passes and shall when required, bear witness to the facts. In 1855 Lord Campbell Chief Justice, in Roberts v. Philips (6) enunciated the same rule as regards the word "attested" that the witnesses should be present as witnesses and see it signed by the testator. And the principle was given effect to in the House of Lords in Burdett v. Spilsbury (7). The Lord Chancellor summed up the conclusion in these words:—"The party who sees the Will is in fact a witness to it; if he subscribes as a witness, he is then an attesting witness."

Though these observations were made in cases of Wills, that does not prevent their application to the case of any instrument requiring attestation where the only point involved is the meaning of the word "attest" without qualification. A scribe who executes a document for, and on behalf of, the executant is not a person who "sees what passes" or "sees it executed," when he himself does the very thing to which by subsequently signing as a witness he professes to bear witness.

For these reasons, I agree that the deed in question was not validly attested as a mortgage and I concur in the order to be made.

not the same—Arts. 62 and 97, which applies, where an execution purchaser of a putni paid rent to the zemindar after the setting aside of the sale by the first Court and during the pendency of infructuous appeal—Existing consideration, meaning of.

Plaintiff purchased a putni at a sale held under Reg. VIII of 1819 in May 1908. In October 1910 the purchaser paid rent to the zemindar after the sale was set aside by the Court of first instance in May 1910, and during the pendency of an appeal by the zemindar, which was ultimately dismissed. There were certain proceedings for assessment of mesne profits between the purchaser and the original putnidar on the basis of the decree for cancellation of the sale. Thereafter the said purchaser in February 1916 sued for recovery of the money paid as rent to the zemindar:

Held—That the suit was barred. In view of the provisions of sec. 14 of the Limitation Act, the Plaintiff was not entitled to a deduction of the time during which the mesne profits proceedings were going on as the zemindar was not a party therein, nor was there, since October 1910, any period of time when the right of the Plaintiff to sue was suspended by reason of events over which he had no control.

PRANNATH v. ROOKEA (1), SURNOMOYEE v. SOSHEE MOOKHEE (2) and NRITYAMONI v. LAKEHAN CHANDRA (3) referred to.

That Art. 62 of the Limitation Act applied to the case. The fact that there was failure of consideration at the time the payment was made in October 1910 attracted the operation of the bar imposed by Art. 62. Art. 97 did not apply because at the time when the money was paid there was no subsisting consideration.

MOOKHERJEE, C. J.—This is an appeal by the Plaintiff in a suit for recovery of money paid by him to the Defendant as putni rent on the 14th October 1910.

It appears that the Plaintiff purchased the putni at a sale held under Reg. VIII of 1819 on the 14th May 1908. The putndar instituted a suit for cancellation of the sale, which was decreed on the 28th May 1910. The zemindar Defendant thereupon preferred an appeal which was ultimately dismissed on the 2nd May 1912. In the interval on the 14th October 1910, that is, after the Court of first instance had directed cancellation of the sale, the Plaintiff paid rent to the Defendant to prevent further sale under the Regulation. The present suit, which was instituted on the 14th February 1916, has been dismissed by the District Judge as barred by limitation. We are of opinion that this view cannot be successfully challenged.

The Appellant has argued that he is entitled to a deduction of the time which was occupied by a proceeding for assessment of mesne-profits as between himself and the original putnidar on the basis of the decree for cancellation of the sale. This contention cannot be upheld in view of the provisions of sec. 1 of the Limitation Act which renders it essential that the proceedings should be between the contesting parties; here the zemindar was not a party to the proceedings for assessment of mesne-profits. Nor can it be suggested that there was, since the 14th October 1910, any period of time when the right of the Plaintiff to institute the present suit was suspended by reason of circumstances over which he had no control, so as to entitle him to invoke the aid of the rule recognised by the Judicial Committee in Prannath v. Rookea (1), Surnomoyee v. Sosehee Mookher (2) and Nrityamoni v. Lakhan Chandra (3). The question, thus arises, which article of the Limitation Act governs this matter. We are of opinion that Art. 62 applies to the circumstances of the case.

Art. 62 provides that a suit for money payable by the Defendant to the Plaintiff for money received by the Defendant for the Plaintiff's use must be instituted within three years from the date when the money is received. It has been pointed out in the decision of the Judicial Committee in Hukum Chand Boid v. Pirthu Chand Lal Chowdhury (4) that this article is intended to apply to cases which in English law are described as suits for "money had and received." The same view had been previously taken in numerous cases in this Court, amongst which may be mentioned Raghumoni Audhikari v. Nilmoni Singh Deb (5) and Mahomed Wahib v. Mohomed Amir (6). The fact that there was a failure of consideration at the time the payment was made on the 14th October 1910, attracts the operation of the bar imposed by Art. 62.

It has been suggested in the course of argument that Art. 97 might apply to this case. That Article provides that a suit for money paid upon an existing consideration which afterwards fails must be instituted within three years from the date of the failure. In the case before us, this article does not apply, because, as we have just explained, at the time when the money was paid there was no consideration. But even if we hold that the validity of the putni sale was finally decided, only on the 2nd May 1912, as the result of the appeal by the zemindar, still, the Plaintiff would be entitled under Art. 97, to sue only within three years from the 2nd May 1912. As he did not institute the suit until the 14th February 1916, even upon that view it would be barred by limitation. [Bejoy Chand v. Tinkari (7)].

The result is that the decree of the District Judge is confirmed and this appeal dismissed with costs.

Hindu joint family business—Admission of partner—Evidence—Evidence Act (I of 1872), secs. 17 and 21.

An arrangement was alleged to have been made with a Hindu joint family, part of whose property consisted of a joint family business, to take in as partner the person through whom the Plaintiff claimed to have a share in the family properties:

Held—That no such arrangements had been proved.

That a statement in a Will which suggests an inference as to a fact in issue cannot be proved by or on behalf of the person who made it or his representative in interest.

This was an appeal from a judgment of the High Court of Judicature at Madras, dated the 17th January 1917.

The facts which have given rise to the litigation may be shortly stated as follows:—All the Appellants (referred to as the Nalam family) are descendants of one Nalam Bhimanna. He had seven sons and three daughters, one of whom was Kamamma and she was married to Mandavilli Butchi Kamanna. The other two daughters were also married. Kamamma gave birth to a son named Pattabhiramanna, and died a few days later. Her husband married a second wife, and the Plaintiff is his son by her—the relationship may be shown thus:—

The said Nalam Bhimanna and his seven sons were members of a joint Hindu family and were traders by occupation. The father died in or about 1848 leaving his seven sons joint. In 1849 the seven Nalams prepared an account of the assets of the joint family and it was duly signed by them. In 1870 one of the seven Nalams separated from the joint family after executing a deed of partition on the 15th December 1870, which was duly registered on the 19th December 1870. In the deed the names of the seven Nalams were mentioned as constituting the joint family, and the joint estate was specified and was divided into eight instead of seven shares. One share was partitioned off to the separating brother and the settlement about the remaining seven shares was recorded in the following terms:—

“That excluding the share allotted to me as my portion out of the eight shares as per settlement already made by us, seven brothers, and excluding the six shares which you, six persons, would divide on the whole out of the seven shares, the remaining share should be dealt with by you, six persons, and your heirs as you like.”

The six Nalams and their children continued to live, and trade, and hold property jointly till 1896, when they separated. It appears that the daughters of Nalam Bhimanna together with their children lived with and were maintained by the Nalams. At the time of the partition the representatives of the daughters asked that their claims upon the bounty of the Nalam family—which was wealthy—ought to be considered. A family council was then held, and a family settlement was made for partitioning the joint estate. All the family properties were divided into seven shares: one share was awarded to each of the six Nalams, and out of the remaining share a three-eighth share was allotted to Defendant No. 1, as representing the branch of the daughter Kamamma, and a four-eighth share to the issue of the second daughter, and an one-eighth share for charity at Rajahmundry.

The moveables were divided in 1896, but the division of the immoveable properties was not finished before 1900. The Plaintiff (since deceased) who would have been the nearest reversioner on the death of Defendant No. 1, questioned the partition and filed the present suit on the 29th July 1910 against Defendant No. 1 and the Appellants who represented the Nalam family.

In his plaint the Plaintiff alleged that Pattabhiramanna, the son of Kamamma (the eldest daughter of Nalam Bhimanna) was a co-parcener of the Nalam Joint family equally with the Nalams, under a special agreement, and strongly relied upon a Will alleged to have been executed by the said Pattabhiramanna on the 11th July 1881. The material portion of the Will is the following:—

“After my father, Butchi Kamanna Garu, married Kamamma, the eldest daughter of Nalam Bhimanna Garu, residing at Mandapeta, I was born to her. But as she died 10 days after I was born, my mother's father, the said Bhimanna Garu, his wife Papamma Garu, and his seven sons Virayya and others, had since then kept me in their house, supported me, and educated me and taught me wisdom and business. As they arranged to get my second maternal uncle, Venkanna Garu's daughter married to me and to give me a share equally along with my maternal uncles, without my having anything to do with the property of my natural father, I was attending to their business matters carried on at Mandapeta, Vizianagram, Cocanada, Berhampur, Rajahmundry, Tallarevu, Madras and other places, for some time jointly with my maternal uncles and for some time myself singly.”

The Subordinate Judge of Rajahmundry held that the Plaintiff had failed to establish that the said Pattabhiramanna owned and possessed one-seventh share in the

Nalam joint family estate in pursuance of the special agreement alleged in the plaint, or on any other ground. The only evidence which the Plaintiff adduced in support of his case was the alleged Will of the said Pattabhiramanna himself and the learned Subordinate Judge refused to attach any weight to it, firstly, because it was a statement made by Pattabhiramanna in his own interest, secondly, because in making it, Pattabhiramanna's object was to provide for his adopted son and thirdly, because its execution had not been proved beyond question.

The Subordinate Judge made a decree dismissing the Plaintiff's suit with costs and from that decree the Plaintiff appealed to the High Court of Justice at Madras, which delivered judgment on the 17th January 1917. The learned Judges of the High Court came to a contrary conclusion. They held that the Will of the said Pattabhiramanna was based on "a consciousness on the part of Peda Pattabhiramanna that he was entitled to one-seventh of the properties, that is, to a share equal to that of the sons of Nalam Bhimanna." In their opinion "all his acts shewed that he considered himself as being entitled to deal with the assets of the business and the income of the properties as a share-holder, and that position was acquiesced in by the members of the Nalam family." They found that "the probabilities of the case strongly point to Peda Pattabhiramanna having acted throughout his life under some such arrangement, if not as that mentioned by him in the Will."

They also considered that the partition carried out in 1896 could not be supported as a family arrangement since, in the opinion of the learned Judges, there was no dispute as to the rights of the parties at the time. As regards the question of limitation they held that the Plaintiff's claim concerning the moveable properties was barred inasmuch as "the partition was practically completed in 1900" and the present suit was brought in 1910, that is, more than six years after the expiry of the period allowed by Art. 120 of the Indian Limitation Act, 1908. They allowed the Plaintiff's claim in respect of the immoveable properties, apparently holding that the period of limitation commenced to run from 1900 and that it required 12 years to bar the suit.

The result was that the High Court allowed the Plaintiff's appeal in part, set aside the decree of the said Subordinate Judge, and made a decree declaring that Pattabhiramanna, the deceased husband of the 1st Respondent (1st Defendant), was entitled to 1/7th (one-seventh) share in the immoveable properties which were the subject of partition in 1900 and that any alienation made by the 1st Defendant of such properties by way of sale or release in favour of the members of the Nalam family is not valid or binding beyond the life-time of the 1st Respondent. (1st Defendant).

The Appellants appealed from the said decree of the High Court to His Majesty in Council.

Messrs. DeGruyther, K. C. and B. Dubé for the Appellants.

The main question is whether Pattabhiramanna was a partner in the Nalam family business.

He conducted the family business in his own name for a number of years but this was only to facilitate trade.

Other members of his family also managed branches of the business in their own names but it is not suggested that they too became partners.

The statement in the Will is untrue and in any case cannot be evidence against me (Evidence Act, I. of 1872, secs. 17 and 21).

There is no disinterested evidence to show that Pattabhiramanna had a partner's interest or to substantiate the alleged arrangement.

The Defendants have sworn that Pattabhiramanna's adopted son was not taken as a partner and their evidence has been accepted by the first Court.

The High Court say that the suit is barred as to a declaration for moveables but not for immoveables.

[SIR L. JENKINS.—So far as I know if it is for a declaration it does not matter what the declaration is for.]

The Respondents were not represented.

[The Board took time to consider the advice that they should tender to His Majesty and on the 17th November 1921].

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by

SIR LAWRENCE JENKINS.—This is an appeal from a decree of the Madras High Court, dated the 17th January 1917, reversing a decree passed on the 24th July 1913, by the Temporary Subordinate Judge of Rajahmundry.

The Defendants Nos. 2 to 49 are members of a Hindu family known as the Nalam family. Their common ancestor was Nalam Bhimanna, who died in or about 1848, leaving seven sons and three daughters. The sons were Virayya, Venkanna, Ramanna, Vallabharayudu, Pattabhiramanna, Subbayya, and Chalamayya. The daughters were Kamamma, Venkamma, and Jaggamma.

The fifth of the sons, Pattabhiramanna, separated from his brothers in 1870. The Defendants Nos. 2 to 49 are the descendants of the six brothers who continued joint, and they are the Appellants in this appeal.

Kamamma married Mandavilli Butchi Kamanna, and the only child of that marriage was Peda Pattabhiramanna. He died in 1881, leaving an adopted son, Chinna Pattabhiramanna, who died in 1895 without issue but survived by his widow, Mandavilli Seetharam. She is Defendant No. 1.

The original Plaintiff was Mandavilli Narayanamoorthy, a son of Mandavilli Butchi Kamanna by his second marriage, and so a half-brother of Peda Pattabhiramanna. On his death his sons, Mandavilli Venkata Gopala Row, and Mandavilli Satayanarayannamurthy, were substituted as parties in his place. They are the Respondents in this appeal.

In 1896 the members of the Nalam joint family as then constituted separated, but the partition was not completed until 1900. Though there were only six branches, the family property was divided into seven shares. One share was allotted to each branch, and the remaining seventh share was allotted as to three-eighths to Defendant No. 1 as the representative of Kamamma, four-eighths to the issue of the second daughter, Venkamma, and one-eighth to charity at Rajahmundry. The purpose of this suit is to impugn this partition and establish the Plaintiffs' claim as heir in reversion to one-seventh of the Nalam properties.

In the plaint it is alleged that Nalam Bhimanna arranged that Pattabhiramanna should do business with his sons and be given an equal share along with his sons; and that this was agreed to by the sons; that the partition of 1896 was made only with the evil intention of disinheriting the reversioners and there was no legal necessity for it; and that the cause of action arose from November 1900.

By the plaint it is prayed that a decree may be passed "declaring that the division effected among the members of the families of Defendants Nos. 2 to 49 concerning the joint property wherein the first Defendant was entitled to one-seventh share, is invalid after the first Defendant's life-time, so far as it relates to the 1st Defendant's share of the property, and cannot affect the reversioners." It will thus be seen that the Plaintiffs' claim is based on an alleged right in Peda Pattabhiramanna to a share in the Nalam joint family property. It was rejected by the first Court, but on appeal the claim was affirmed by the High Court and a decree passed in the Plaintiff's favour. The right asserted could not have been an inherent one, and so an arrangement under which it is alleged to have accrued in set up. This arrangement is pleaded and the following issue was settled :—

"1. Whether Nalam Bhimanna agreed as alleged in para. 5 of the plaint to give a share in his family properties to Pattabhiramanna along with his sons, and whether the sons of Bhimanna assented to that arrangement?"

The burden of establishing this agreement and the sons' assent to it is on the Plaintiff, and it is necessary to see whether this burden has been discharged.

First the Plaintiff seeks to rely on a statement in the Will of Peda Pattabhiramanna, dated the 11th July 1881, in these terms :—

"After my father, Butchi Kamanna Garu, married Kamamma, the eldest daughter of Nalam Bhimanna Garu, residing at Mandapeta, I was born to her. But as she died 10 days after I was born, my mother's father, the said Bhimanna Garu, his wife Papamma Garu, and his seven sons, Virayya and others, had since then kept me in their house, supported me, and educated me and taught me wisdom and business. As they arranged to get my second maternal uncle, Venkanna Garu's daughter married to me and to give me a share equally along with my maternal uncles without my having anything to do with the property of my natural father, I was attending to their business matters carried on at Mandapeta, Vizianagram, Cocanada, Berhampur, Rajahmundry, Tallarevu, Madras and other places for some time jointly with my maternal uncles and for some time myself singly."

Even treating this as a statement which suggests an inference as to a fact in issue, still it cannot be proved by or on behalf of the person who made it or his representative in interest (Evidence Act, secs. 17 and 21).

Therefore standing alone, the statement in the Will cannot be proved by or on behalf of the Plaintiff as evidence of what it asserts.

To escape from this difficulty the Plaintiff contends that the course of dealing in the family, the conduct of Peda Pattabhiramanna in relation to the properties in his possession and the independent status which he held and enjoyed, the conduct of the executors in acting on the Will, and the treatment of him by the family, support the view that the statement in the Will is true. Thus it has been contended that the Will was acted on by the executors, who were members of the Nalam family, with the result that the statement was adopted as true.

What happened is this. Property was purchased with the joint funds of the family, and the transfer was taken in the name of Peda Pattabhiramanna. On his death it became necessary to obtain a transfer from his name, and accordingly, on the 6th October 1882, a petition was presented on behalf of Nalam Kamaraju and his brother Nalam Venkatarayuloo, to the Deputy Collector and Deputy Registrar of Grants and Certificates, Madras, praying for the issue of a certificate. In the application it was stated that the property had been acquired by inheritance, the grantee or registered holder being the brother-in-law of the Petitioners, and that the registered holder being on the point of death, wrote and delivered a Will stating that the two brothers-in-law might take a fresh certificate after his death. There is a clause in the Will to that effect. The certificates were issued as prayed.

NALAM PATTABHIRAMA RAO v. MANDAVILLI NARAYANAMOORTHY.

Though this may be properly regarded as an assent by the two executors that the Will was duly executed, it cannot be treated as an admission by the members of the family that the statement in the Will, on which reliance is now placed, was true. What was done by the executors was a requisite or at any rate convenient step for the purpose of procuring a transfer in the Registry, but cannot be deemed an admission of title in the sense urged by the Plaintiff.

The High Court was influenced by the idea that account books had been kept back, and if there was any real foundation for this, there might be ground for considering whether there was a presumption that these accounts, if produced, would be unfavourable to the Defendants. But when regard is had to all the facts disclosed, there is no justification for the view that books were improperly withheld, as is conclusively shown in the judgment of the first Court. Nor do their Lordships think that the items in the accounts that have been produced when properly considered really support the Plaintiff's case; for it has to be borne in mind that Peda Pattabhiramanna was a son-in-law and in management of the branch where he resided, and it is no matter for surprise if he was treated with favour. And in this connection it is significant that the family of Vijjapu, also a son-in-law, and engaged in the family business, was treated with similar favour, and yet it never has been suggested that this was evidence of or even pointed to a right of participation in the Nalam family property.

But over and above this infirmity in the Plaintiff's proof, the dealings with the property are inconsistent with the right he claims. According to his case Peda Pattabhiramanna acquired his share before the date of Ex. I, which is a Cadjan leaf dated the 24th August 1849. It embodies the terms drawn up by the seven sons for the guidance of the Nalam family in reference to the joint family property. Peda Pattabhiramanna was not a party to it, nor does it contain any reference to any share of his in the property. The first Court relied on this exhibit as genuine. The High Court, however, doubted its authenticity, but on grounds that do not satisfy their Lordships, and they prefer to accept the appreciation of the Subordinate Judge as to its genuineness.

On the 15th of December 1870, a partition deed, Ex. II, was executed, when Pattabhiramanna separated from the Nalam family. This document contains no reference to any share such as that now claimed. It treats the property, after deduction of the separating brother's share, as divisible into seven shares, six of which were to belong to the remaining six branches, while the seventh share was to be dealt with by these six branches as they liked. These branches continued joint till 1896. In that year the partition now attacked began. Its terms have already been set out.

In the plaint it is described as "made only with the evil intention of disinheriting the reversioners of the said property and not bonâ fide." But no such case is proved. In its omission of all notice of a one-seventh share as belonging to the line of Kamamma, this partition is in precise accord with the dispositions of 1849 and 1870, and it is difficult to suppose that they were both made without the knowledge of Peda Pattabhiramanna. Moreover, the members of the six branches did not gain by the omission; they did not keep for themselves the one-seventh share, but allotted it in the manner indicated. Then again it is significant that the lines of the two daughters both benefited, and that Appalaraju, the first Defendant's father took part in this allotment, and never suggested that the one-seventh share belonged to his daughter, or that she had any better claim than the line of Venkamma the sister. Nor did the first Defendant herself demur to the allotment which was made. On the contrary, she expressly assented to it. This the Plaintiff treats as a relinquishment and in effect an invalid alienation of the one-seventh share to which he claims to be reversionary heir.

In their Lordships' opinion the Plaintiff has failed to prove the arrangement or agreement under which a share is alleged to have been given to Peda Pattabhiramanna, and they will humbly advise His Majesty that the decree of the High Court ought to be reversed and the suit dismissed with costs in both the lower Courts. The Respondents must also pay the costs of this appeal.

Successive mortgages—Suit by first mortgagee without impleading puisne mortgagee—Purchaser at mortgage sale, may set up first mortgage as shield in puisne mortgagee's suit—Puisne mortgagee's right to be placed in the same position in which he would be if he had been impleaded.

Under r. 5 of Or. XXXIV of the Civil Procedure Code (which has repealed sec. 89 of the Transfer of Property Act) an owner of a property who is in the right of a first mortgagee and of the original mortgagor, as acquired at a sale under the first mortgage, is entitled, at the suit of a subsequent mortgagee who (not having been made a party in the first mortgagee's suit) is not bound by the sale or the decree on which it proceeded, to set up the first mortgage as a shield.

HET RAM v. SHADI JAL (1), MATRU MAL v. DURGA KUNWAR (2) and VANMIKALINGA MUDALI v. CHIDAMBARA CHETTY (3) referred to.

But in such a case, the puisne mortgagee (Plaintiff) also is entitled to be put in the position which he would have occupied had he been made a party to the first mortgagee's suit.

After two mortgages had been effected by the owner of certain properties, the first mortgagee sued on his mortgage and purchased the property without impleading the second mortgagee. Later on his successor in interest executed another mortgage in favour of the Plaintiff. Subsequently the second mortgagee sued on his mortgage without impleading the Plaintiff, and in that suit the then owners recovered from the second mortgagee the amount of the first mortgage (which they set up as a shield), but as they failed to redeem the second mortgagee the property was sold and purchased by the latter. In Plaintiff's suit to enforce Plaintiff's mortgage against the property in the hands of the second mortgagee:

terest Plaintiff was entitled to get a decree for the sale of so much of the estate as would realise that sum, and that the Plaintiff should get a decree for sale of the rest of the estate on condition that the Plaintiff paid to the Defendants the amount or the decree passed on the second mortgage.

Appeal against a decree, dated 16th January 1917 of the High Court at Allahabad, varying the decree of the Subordinate Judge of Agra, dated the 23rd February 1915.

The facts of the case will sufficiently appear from their Lordships' judgment.

Mr. K. V. L. Narasimham for the Appellant.—Second mortgagee brings an action without making the widow a party. He made the grantees parties. It was the widow who made a gift of the properties. Her rights are not therefore affected.

Our prayer was that we should be allowed to sell the whole property free from all mortgages. The High Court held that the 1883 and 1884 mortgages still subsisted against us. Gokuldas v. Rambux (4) and Ibrahim Hossein v. Ambika Prosad (5). My contention is that the decree has wiped out the second mortgage of 1883, and so the mortgagees under the deed of 1883 (the present Respondents) are not entitled to the amount of the decree on their suit. Het Ram v. Shadi Lal (1) and Izzat-un-nisa v. Pertab Singh (6), Toulmin v. Steere (7), sec. 101, Transfer of Property Act, sec. also sec. 89.

The case here is that the second mortgagee had a conditional sale. Therefore throughout he wanted to become the owner. So sec. 101 of the Transfer of Property Act must not be presumed to apply. He had no intention of keeping the mortgage debt alive. The difference between the English and the Indian law as regards foreclosure is as stated in sec. 87 of the Transfer of Property Act. In England a decree may be reopened. Or. XXXIV, r. 3, Civil Procedure Code, Transfer of Property Act, secs. 86 and 87 corresponding to Or. XXXIV, rr. 2, 3, 4 and 5, Civil Procedure Code. The second mortgage (1883) was not to carry interest after the period was over according to the deed. The mortgagee's laches is responsible if he loses his interest, so if an account is taken no interest should be given to him.

Mr. Kenworthy Browne for the Respondents.—I was not a party to first mortgagee's suit. The question to be decided is what is the result of my omission to make the widow (Appellant) a party. Het Ram v. Shadi Lal (1). Secs. 89 and 87, Transfer of Property Act are different. Security is not mentioned in sec. 87, Het Ram v. Shadi Lal (1) based on sec. 87, Transfer of Property Act and Limitation Act. See Matru Mal v. Durga Kunwar (2). Here sec. 89 (Transfer of Property Act) was in question. It lays down when a first mortgagee gets a decree and purchases the property without making the second mortgagee a party, then the second mortgagee must pay up the first one, before he could come in, Gokuldas v. Rambux (4). I did exactly what the puisne mortgagee did in Matru Mal v. Durga Kunwar (2).

MUSAMMAT SUKHI v. MUNSHI GHULAM SAFDAR KHAN.

[MR. AMEER ALI.—Your opponent's point is that it is not a decree for sale but for foreclosure.]

See Mirza Yadalli Beg v. Tukaram (8).

Under Gokuldas v. Rambux (4) and sec. 101 of the Transfer of Property Act, the law is not to be restricted. I stand on Matru Mal v. Durga Kunwar (2) and with regard to foreclosure I stand on the difference between secs. 87 and 89 and on Mirza Yadalli Beg v. Tukaram (8).

As regards accounts there seems to have been no question of this raised in the Court below.

Mr. K. V. L. Narasimham in reply.—There is no difference between sec. 87 and sec. 89. The mortgagor can never sue. Hence the difference in the wording. There is no need to add the word "security" in the latter section. Matru Mal v. Durga Kunwar (2), really confirms Het Ram v. Shadi Lal (1). Lays stress on the fact that it is the decretal amount and not the mortgage amount.

Mirza Yadalli Beg v. Tukaram (8) was the case of a transferee from the mortgagors. My case is that I am the mortgagee.

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by

LORD DUNEDIN.—This is a suit by a mortgagee, Musammat Sukhi, to sell a property called Rasulpur. The facts out of which the suit arises are as follows:—

Nand Ram and others, the owners of the property in question and of other properties, executed on the 3rd January 1874, and the 10th June 1875, two simple mortgages in favour of Kirpa Ram, now deceased, the husband of the Plaintiff.

(1) L. R. 45 I. A. 130; s. c. 22 C. W. N. 1038 (1918).

Subsequently, on the 15th January 1883, they executed another mortgage of the property in question alone by way of conditional sale in favour of the first Respondent, Ghulam Safdar Khan and another person whom the second and third Respondents now represent. These mortgages were all duly registered. In 1886, Kirpa Ram, the mortgagee, raised an action for payment and sale, but he omitted to implead the holders of the mortgage of 1883. In that suit he obtained a decree for sale. The property was sold and Kirpa Ram himself purchased at the judicial sale. Kirpa Ram died leaving a Will dated in 1895 in favour of his widow, the Plaintiff. She obtained probate in 1898. She thereafter made a gift of the properties to which she had succeeded including the property in question to Jag Ram and Net Ram, her nephews. They at the same time covenanted to pay her Rs. 1,200 a year for maintenance and in security of this obligation they hypothecated the properties including the property in question by way of mortgage. The mortgage was dated the 14th October 1902, and was duly registered.

In 1910 the Respondents, the mortgagees in the mortgage of 1883, brought a suit on their mortgage against Jag Ram and Net Ram, but omitted to implead the Plaintiff. Jag Ram and Net Ram put forward the mortgages of 1874 and 1875 as a shield and accordingly the Respondents had to pay into the Court the sum of Rs. 2,954. Having so done and Jag Ram and Net Ram not choosing to redeem, the Respondents were adjudged owners of the property. This was finally settled in 1913.

In 1914, the Plaintiff raised the present suit in respect of her mortgage, the sums due under the agreement to pay maintenance amounting to over Rs. 10,000. It was not defended by Jag Ram and Net

MUSAMMAT SUKHI v. MUNSHI GHULAM SAJDAB KHAN.

Ram, but appearance was made for the Respondents who held the property in virtue of the decree they had obtained in 1913, upon their mortgage of 1883. The Subordinate Judge decreed the suit, but on condition that the Plaintiff repaid to the Respondents the sum of Rs. 2,954 which they had paid to the first mortgagees. On appeal the High Court altered this by adding the condition that the Plaintiff should also pay the sum of Rs. 8,649-13-7, being the sum found due to the Respondents in the suit of the mortgage of 1883, in respect of which they were given the foreclosure decree of the property. Appeal has now been taken to His Majesty in Council.

The Appellant's counsel relied entirely on the case of Het Ram v. Shadi Lal (1). In that case a property had been twice mortgaged by way of simple mortgage, one in 1880, and another in 1881. Het Ram purchased the property from the mortgagee (?) in 1883. In 1885 the mortgagee of 1880 obtained against the mortgagor and Het Ram a decree absolute for sale under sec. 89 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882. He did not implead the mortgagee under the mortgage of 1881. He took no further steps under the decree and the property was not brought to sale. He died, and was succeeded to by Het Ram as his heir. In 1910, the mortgagee under the mortgage of 1881 instituted the suit. It was held that Het Ram could not set up the mortgage of 1880 as a shield, because the decree of 1885 was (1) barred by limitation, (2) inoperative as against the Plaintiff who had not been made a party to the suit and because the mortgage itself was gone because of the terms of sec. 89 of the Transfer to Property Act, 1882. The Appellant urged that the same result followed in this case.

The mortgagor of 1883, having omitted to implead the Appellant, she was not bound by the decree. The mortgage of 1883 was no longer available because it was merged in the decree.

The Respondents on the other hand relied on the case of Matru Mal v. Durga Kunwar (2). In that case a property had also been the subject of two mortgages of 1872 and 1879 respectively. The mortgagee of 1872 obtained in 1884 a decree for sale under the same sec. 89 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, but omitted to implead the second mortgagee. A lady who was an assignee of the second mortgage raised suit in 1909. The owner resisted the decree unless he was paid the whole amount due under the first mortgage with interest calculated at the rate stipulated therein. The Plaintiff offered to pay the amount under the decree of 1884, but refused to pay the amount of the mortgage so calculated. The Subordinate Judge gave effect to the condition of the owner. The High Court altered and gave effect to the offer of the Plaintiff. The owner then appealed. The Board adhered to the judgment of the High Court.

It will be noticed that the Plaintiff there offered to pay the sum in the decree of 1884. Het Ram's case (1) had not at the date of the High Court judgment been decided, and it does not appear to have suggested itself to the Plaintiff that she could argue that the effect of sec. 89 was to destroy the mortgage of 1872 and prevent its ever being set up again. The head-note of that case, however, bears that it was held that the condition upon which the second mortgagee was entitled to a sale decree was the payment to the decreeholder of the amount due under the decree in respect of the first mortgage. If this were really so, it would be necessary to consider how far such a pronouncement could stand beside the decision in Het Ram's case (1). In their Lordships' view it is not necessary to consider that question. The decision in Het Ram's case (1) is based on two propositions. The first is that the puisne mortgagee is not barred by the decree and the sale following thereon. That in Het Ram's case (1) is based on two points which are, it must be admitted, alternative and not cumulative: (1) that the decree was useless in respect of limitation and (2) that the second mortgagee had not been impleaded. Although the first point has no application to this case, the second has. But the second proposition which was absolutely necessary for the judgment was that the mortgage was gone for ever so soon as the decree of sale was obtained; and that was based on the express words of sec. 89 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, which ends after providing for the decree "and thereafter the Defendants' right to redeem and the security shall both be extinguished." Now the group of secs. 85-90 inclusive of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, were repealed by the Code of Civil Procedure of 1908, and were replaced by the rules under Or. XXXIV. In these rules the words above quoted are omitted in the rule which corresponds to sec. 89. They do not occur in either the foreclosure section of the Act of 1882 or the corresponding rule of Or. XXXIV, which are limited to providing for the extinction of the debt.

The difficulty which had arisen as to these words in several cases, e.g., Vanmikalinga Mudali v. Chidambara Chetty (3) which case it may be mentioned does not seem to have been brought to the notice of the Board in Het Ram's case (1), therefore no longer arises. The decree in this case was in 1910, and was, therefore, under the Code of Civil Procedure Rules and not under the section of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882.

Now the words being gone their Lordships feel no difficulty in holding that the law remains as it certainly was before the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, viz., that an owner of a property who is in the rights of a first mortgagee and of the original mortgagor as acquired at a sale under the first mortgage is entitled at the suit of a subsequent mortgagee who is not bound by the sale or the decree on which it proceeded, to set up the first mortgage as a shield. From this it follows that the omission by the Respondent Ghulam Safdar Khan to make the Plaintiff a party to the suit instituted by him to execute his mortgage of 1883 does not prevent him from setting up that mortgage in cases where he would have been so entitled before the Act of 1882; and the present dispute is within the benefit of this ruling.

But then there is the question of the position due to the original mortgages of Rs. 2,924, and unfortunately this seems not to have been very carefully considered in the judgment below. The Subordinate Judge held that the Defendants were entitled to set up this as a shield because the Defendants had paid this sum to the original first mortgagees as a condition of getting the property; and that as the Plaintiff's title flowed from the first mortgagees, she could have no higher right than the first mortgagees, and must be bound by anything done by them. The High Court seemed to think that the same arguments that applied to the mortgage of 1883 also applied to the earlier mortgages.

The situation, however, must be looked at more closely than this. The general principle is stated rightly by the High Court. It is this:—"The Plaintiff is a puisne mortgagee seeking to enforce her mortgage, the prior mortgagee in his suit having failed to make her a party. It is the duty of the Court to give the Plaintiff the opportunity of occupying the position which she would have occupied if she had been a party to the former suit." Now the original mortgagee having bought the estate at the sale in the suit was the owner of both the mortgage and the equity of redemption merged in one by the decree of the Court. He was succeeded by his widow and she made the gift to Jag Ram and Net Ram. When they in turn mortgaged to the widow, the present Plaintiff, they mortgaged both the original mortgage and the equity of redemption merged as aforesaid. When in the suit of the present Defendants on the mortgage of 1883, Jag Ram and Net Ram, so to speak, revived the original mortgage as a shield, they revived something which in a question with the widow they had mortgaged. Whether the decision of the Court that the sum in the prior mortgages should be made a condition of the decree in the suit was right or wrong—for if Net Ram's case (1) had been decided it would have been wrong, the sale having taken place in 1886—is immaterial, for the present Defendants acquiesced in and paid under the judgment. If the widow had been made a party to the suit, as she ought to have been, she would have been entitled in right of her mortgage to have been put in possession of the amount which was being put forward as a shield by Jag Ram and Net Ram against the then Plaintiffs and the present Defendants. She was not made a party and the result was that owing to the laches of the present Defendants Jag

Ram and Net Ram were allowed to carry off in money the part of the estate represented by the value of the first mortgage which they had really impledged by their mortgage to the widow. It follows that to carry out the general principle expressed above, the widow must not be deprived of the rights which had she been called she could have made good.

The result must be that unless the Defendants pay the Plaintiff Rs. 2,925 with interest thereon at 6 per cent. from 3rd December 1914, the Plaintiff must get her decree for sale of so much of the estate as will realise that sum. If, however, the Defendants pay that sum or the said sum is realised by sale of part of the estate then the Plaintiff can only have decree and sale of the rest of the estate on condition that she pay to the Defendants Rs. 8,649-13-7, being the sum in the decree of 1883 as brought out by the High Court. The Defendants will have a right to recover from Net Ram and Jag Ram the sum wrongly carried off by them in fraud of their own mortgage to the present Plaintiff, but the right cannot be given effect to in this suit.

Neither party should have any costs in the Courts below and any costs paid on order of the Courts below should be returned; the Appellants will have the costs of the appeal to His Majesty in Council.

Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly.

Solicitor: Mr. Douglas Grant for the Respondents.

APPEAL FROM ORIGINAL CIVIL JURISDICTION

No. 107 OF 1920.

SANDERSON, C. J. } JEWAN RAM, Appellant,
 RICHARDSON, J. } v.
 1921, } RATAN CHAND KISSEN
 5, May. } CHAND, Respondent.

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), secs. 3, 6 (e).—Bare right to sue, assignment of—Claim for unascertained damages—Comparison between the English and Indian law.

The Defendants entered into a contract with one B undertaking to take delivery of certain goods in accordance with the contract and on their failure to do so the matter was referred to arbitrators who gave an award to the effect that the Defendants were to pay for and take delivery of the goods. B, therefore, resold the goods which fetched a lower amount than that contracted for. He then brought a suit against the Defendants for the balance and then assigned to the Plaintiff all his claim in and the right to proceed with the suit and all advantages and benefits of all proceedings thereof:

Held—That the suit was not maintainable inasmuch as the claim was for unascertained damages for breach of contract and the assignment was an assignment of a mere right to sue.

GLEGG v. BROMLEY (1) referred to.

That there were no materials justifying the application of sec. 107 of the Contract Act and the resale was not justified by the award so that the claim was one for unascertained damages.

That on a true construction of the terms of the assignment the subject-matter of the assignment was not property with an incidental right to sue but a mere right to sue for unascertained damages for alleged breach of contract within the meaning of sec. 6 (e) of the Transfer of Property Act.

Per RICHARDSON, J.—That in England

there is no statutory rule that a bare right of action cannot be assigned. There is a statutory provision making choses in action assignable which is subject to a limitation placed upon it by the Courts that the assignment must not offend the law of maintenance. In India there is an imperative statutory rule prohibiting the transfer of a mere right to sue. But in spite of this difference the results may be in many respects similar. The Indian Legislature when it enacted sec. 6 (e) of the Transfer of Property Act, no doubt had in mind the expressions used in the English cases; and on the question of construction which arises in India the language of Parker, J., in GLEGG v. BROMLEY (1) is at least a valuable guide.

That even assuming that the goods were properly resold and that the claim asserted in the plaint and transferred to the present Plaintiff is a claim to an ascertained sum, it would still be for consideration whether this claim is in the particular circumstances a mere right to sue or property with an incidental remedy for its recovery within the meaning of Parker, J., in GLEGG's case (1).

This was an appeal preferred on the 8th September 1920 against a decree, dated the 24th August 1920, made by Mr. Justice Woodroffe in Suit No. 1606 of 1918.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

Messrs. B. C. Mitter and A. K. Roy for the Appellant.

Messrs. S. K. Das, S. N. Bannerjee and K. P. Khaitan for the Respondent.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

SANDERSON, C. J. This is an appeal from the judgment of my learned brother Mr. Justice Woodroffe, whereby he dismissed the Plaintiff's suit on the ground that the suit was not maintainable, and that the plaint did not show a cause of action.

(1) [1912] 3 K. B. 474 at p. 490.

The original Plaintiff in the suit was one Bhairodhan. His name was deleted from the suit and the present Plaintiff, Jewanram, who is alleged to be the assignee of the right title and interest of Bhairodhan was added as a Plaintiff. The Defendants were Ratan Chand Kissen Chand, a firm carrying on business in piece goods in Calcutta.

Bhairodhan made a contract with the Defendants whereby the Defendants undertook to take delivery of 8 Bales of Dhoti in accordance with their contract. The Defendants failed to take delivery in accordance with the contract, and it was alleged that thereby the original Plaintiff had suffered loss and damage on the resale of the 8 Bales of Dhoti. But before the resale the parties, that is to say, the original Plaintiff Bhairodhan and the Defendants had referred the matter to the Marwari Chamber of Commerce: and the decision of the arbitrators was given on the 9th of October 1918 and the plaint alleged that the award directed that Bhairodhan should resell the said goods and recover the loss suffered thereby from the Defendant firm, as would appear from the order of the said Marwari Chamber of Commerce when produced. It then proceeded to allege that he resold the goods on the 9th of October—the same day as the award was made—and thereby realised a sum of Rs. 15,502-1 and after deducting that sum from the contract price there remained a sum of Rs. 6,716-11 annas, which it was alleged was due to the original Plaintiff Bhairodhan in respect of the breach of contract by the Defendants.

This suit was instituted on the 16th of December 1918, and, on the following day, the 17th of December 1918, Bhairodhan executed an assignment the terms of which I shall have to refer to in greater detail presently.

The learned Judge came to the conclusion that the Defendants had succeeded in their objection that the suit was not maintainable and that the plaint showed no cause of action. The ground of the learned Judge's judgment was that the claim which was relied upon in this suit by the Plaintiff was a claim for unascertained damages for breach of contract by the Defendants and that it was not assignable, because it was an assignment of a mere right to sue.

The first point taken upon this appeal was that the claim, which was assigned by Bhairodhan to the Plaintiff, was for an ascertained amount. With regard to that it is to be noticed, in the first instance, that the assignment referred to the sum of Rs. 6,716-11 annas "as damages sustained by the assignor on a resale." It is true that the claim in form is for the specified amount of Rs. 6,716-11 together with some sum for interest. But it was alleged, as I have already mentioned, that the resale took place in consequence of a direction in the award. When we look at the award, that allegation turns out to be incorrect; this case was dealt with by the learned Judge upon the plaint, the assignment, the award and some verbal evidence, which is not material for my present purpose. The award does not support the allegation that the resale took place by direction of the arbitrators. The award is as follows: "The books of account of the Defendants and the Plaintiffs have been examined. The goods were lying in the Plaintiff's firm. Therefore, the Defendants to pay for and take delivery of the goods." This award did not direct any specified sum to be paid. It is true that the amount claimed is said to be ascertained by the reason of the resale, but the ground, upon which the resale was based, in fact turns out, when the award comes to be examined, to be unsustainable.

It was argued in this appeal that the resale was justified by sec. 107 of the Indian Contract Act. It was admitted by the learned Counsel for the Appellant that the case was not put in the Court below from this point of view. This further is evident from the learned Judge's judgment. He said at the bottom of p. 12 of the paper-book, dealing with the award as follows:—"It" (the award) "did not direct that any specific sum should be paid. The damages still remain unascertained, and in fact were not ascertained until after the award when there was a resale." If we were to stop there it might be urged that the learned Judge was of opinion that there was an ascertained sum when the resale took place. But when we read on it is clear that the learned Judge was of opinion, that the claim was not for an unascertained sum. He went on to say "on that again" (i.e., on the resale) "the suit is brought for damages which are said to have been ascertained by a resale, which resale is alleged to have been justified by directions given in the award. Nothing in short in the award converted this claim for damages into a debt and nothing has since then done so." To my mind, it is clear that the learned Judge's finding was that on the materials before him this claim for unascertained damages had not been converted either by the award or by the resale or by anything else into a debt or a claim for a specified amount.

It is true that the question whether the resale was justified by sec. 107 was not investigated by the lower Court but no attempt was made by the Plaintiff to suggest or to prove that sec. 107 of the Contract Act applied. Further than that, there is no ground of appeal against the learned Judge's finding that the claim for damages was not converted into a debt. I think the 4th ground of appeal goes to show that the point, which is now relied upon, was neither taken before the learned Judge nor relied upon in the grounds of appeal. In my judgment there are no materials before us which would justify us in holding that sec. 107 of the Contract Act is applicable. The Plaintiff's allegation was that the resale was justified, by the award. The award was proved, and when proved, it showed that there was no such direction. The award on the face of it does not itself justify a resale, yet the resale took place on the same day as the award was made. Under these circumstances, in my judgment, for the purpose of this appeal only, we must take it that the resale was not justified and that the claim was one for unascertained damages.

There remains the second point, which the learned Counsel for the Appellant argued, namely, that even if the claim was for unascertained damages arising out of the Defendants' breach of contract, the assignment was not an assignment of "a mere right to sue" within the meaning of sec. 6 (e) of the Transfer of Property Act. The Defendants on the other hand argued that the assignment was an assignment of a mere right to sue, which was not assignable by reason of sec. 6 (e). It was urged on behalf of the Plaintiff, who is the Appellant, that, although the Defendants had failed to perform their contract with the assignor, the contract was still in existence and the obligation on the Defendants to perform it remained, and that the Plaintiff by the assignment obtained the benefit of the contract which was in itself property, and that there was attached to the property the right to sue for the breach of contract. In my judgment this case must be decided upon the terms of secs. 3 and 6 (e) of the Transfer of Property Act. Many English cases were cited to us.

JEWAN RAM v. RATAN CHAND KISSEN CHAND.

Some of them are useful for the purpose of ascertaining what meaning has been placed by the English Courts upon expression such as "a mere right to sue" or as it is called in some cases "a bare cause of action" or as in others "a mere right to litigate." I do not intend to refer to more than one, viz., Glegg v. Bromley (1), and I desire to refer to the judgment of Mr. Justice Parker who was then sitting in the Court of Appeal. His judgment has been referred to in subsequent cases with approval. In my judgment the principle relating to the present question was therein clearly laid down. The learned Judge said this at p. 489. "Ordinary choses in action were not assignable at law, but were, generally speaking, assignable in equity whether themselves legal or equitable choses. In the former case equity compelled the assignor to allow his name to be used for their recovery in legal proceedings; in the latter case the assignee could sue in equity in his own name. There was one exception to this rule. Equity on the ground of public policy did not give validity to the assignment of what is in the cases referred to as a bare right of action" and this was so whether the bare right were legal or equitable. I have looked at a good many authorities on that point, and I am satisfied that the real reason why equity did not allow the assignment of a bare right of action, whether legal or equitable, was on the ground that it savoured of or was likely to lead to maintenance. There is no doubt in the cases about the rule, and there is no doubt in the cases with regard to the exception, but difficulties often arose in deciding whether a particular right was within the exception or was within the rule. It is to be observed that an equitable assignee of a chose in action, whether it is legal or equitable, could institute proceedings and maintain proceedings for its recovery. The question was whether the subject matter of the assignment was, in the view of the Court, property with an incidental remedy for its recovery, or was a bare right to bring an action either at law or in equity." Applying that principle to this case the question is whether the subject-matter of the assignment by the assignor to the Plaintiff is in the view of the Court, property with an incidental remedy for its recovery, or whether it is a bare right to bring an action, or within the words of the act "a mere right to sue." For this purpose it is necessary to look at the term of the assignment.

I have already pointed out that the assignment was dated the 17th December 1918, and the suit was instituted a day before, viz., the 16th. The assignment recited that on the 16th December the assignor had instituted a suit against the Defendants to recover the sum of Rs. 6,783-11 annas damages sustained by the assignor on a resale of eight bales dhotis No. 460 of which the firm of Ratan Chand Kissen Chand had failed to take delivery in terms of the souda or contract made with the assignor and, dated Sravan Sudi 18, 1975 corresponding with the 20th August 1918. It then recited the fact that the assignor owed to the assignee a sum of Rs. 6,551, and that the assignor was unable to pay it and that he had requested the assignee to accept in payment of the sum of Rs. 6,500 an assignment and transfer to him of all his claim and costs in the suit. The assignor then transferred and assigned unto the assignee all the claim of the assignor in as well as the right to proceed with the said suit and all the advantages and benefits of all proceedings thereof to hold the same unto the assignee absolutely and for ever. I cannot find in the terms of this document any thing more than an assignment of a mere right to sue, or anything more than a mere right to prosecute the claim of the assignor for damages for the alleged breach of contract by the Defendants. The assignment did not in terms purport even to assign the contract or the benefit thereof. In my judgment, there is no ground for holding that the subject-matter of the assignment was property with an incidental right to sue : on the contrary, on a true construction of the terms of the assignment, in my judgment, there was nothing transferred except a mere right to sue for unascertained damages for the alleged breach of contract.

(1) [1912] 3 K. B. 474 at p. 489.

The learned Counsel for the Appellant invited us to come to the conclusion that the decision in the case of Abu Mahomed v. S. C. Chunder (2) was wrong. If we acceded to such an argument, a reference to a Full Bench would be necessary. In my judgment, however, there is no necessity for us to express any opinion as to the correctness of that decision. The facts of that case were different from those existing in this case. I base my judgment upon the principle which I have already enunciated, regard being had to the particular terms of the assignment, the true construction thereof and the facts of this case.

A third point was taken by the learned Counsel and that was in respect of parties. In the Court below an application was made for an adjournment to enable the Plaintiff to enquire whether the Official Assignee would be willing to be added as a party so as to represent the estate and interest of the original Plaintiff Bhairadhan, who had become insolvent. The learned Judge refused it for reasons, which he gave in his judgment. In this Court the application was varied and the application was that we should direct that the original Plaintiff Bhairadhan should be added as a Plaintiff. In my judgment this cannot be done. Apart from the considerations which my learned brother Mr. Justice Woodroffe gave in his judgment, which, as far as I can see, would be just as applicable to a joinder of the original Plaintiff as to a joinder of the Official Assignee representing him, the application is not made on behalf of the original Plaintiff, nor is there any consent of the Plaintiff produced before us to show that he is agreeable to join as a Plaintiff. In these circumstances it is not possible for us to accede to the application of the Appellant that Bhairadhan should be added as a Plaintiff.

For these reasons in my judgment the appeal should be dismissed with costs.

RICHARDSON, J.—I agree and will add a few observations in deference to the argument of Sir Benod Mitter. It seems clear that in England the objection to the assignability of “a bare right of action” is founded on the law of maintenance. Before the Judicature Act of 1873 the Courts of Common Law seem to have applied that law more strictly than the Courts of Equity. “There are undoubtedly” said Cozens-Hardy, L. J., in Fitzroy v. Cave (3), “many choses in action which are not and never were assignable either at law or in equity. A right to set aside a deed on the ground of fraud is a typical instance.” Then, further on, he continued :—“There are, however, other choses in action which though not assignable at Common Law, were always regarded as assignable in Equity. A debt presently due and payable is an instance. At Common Law such a debt was looked upon as a strictly personal obligation, and an assignment of it was regarded as a mere assignment of a right to bring an action at law against the debtor. Hence the assignment was, with some exceptions which need not be referred to, looked upon as open to the objection of maintenance.

(3) [1905] 2 K. B. 344 at p. 371.

JEWAN RAM v. RATAN CHAND KISSEN CHAND.

After a time the Common Law Courts recognised the right of any one who had a pecuniary interest in the debt to sue in the name of the creditor. This, however, was the limit of their departure from the old strict rule, so far as I have been able to discover. But the Courts of Equity took a different view: they admitted the title of an assignee of a debt, regarding it as a piece of property, an asset capable of being dealt with like any other asset, and treating the necessity of an action at law to get it in as a mere incident, they declined to hold such a transaction open to the charge of maintenance."

The Judicature Act assimilated the practice at Common Law to the practice in Equity. In Tolhurst v. Associated Portland Cement Manufacturers (4), Lord Lindley said:—"The Judicature Act, 1873, sec. 25, cl. 6 has not made contracts assignable which were not assignable in equity before, but it has enabled assigns of assignable contracts to sue upon them in their own names without joining the assignor."

It still remains, however, that "a Court of Equity is as much bound as a Court of Common Law by the law relating to champerty and maintenance, and if an assignment of a chose in action is obnoxious to that law, it is bad in equity no less than at law. An assignment of a mere right of litigation is bad." [Per Sterling, L. J., in Dawson v. G. N. City Ry. Co. (5)].

It is with reference to the law of maintenance that the Courts in England have held that some limitation must be put on the generality of the term "chose-in-action" as used in the Judicature Act, sec. 25, cl. 6 [Torkington v. Magee (6), Per Channell, J.].

The position in England, therefore, differs somewhat from the position in India. In England there is no definite statutory rule that a bare right of action cannot be assigned. There is a statutory provision making choses in action assignable which is subject to a limitation placed upon it by the Courts that the assignment must not offend the law of maintenance. The provision and its limitation are perhaps capable of being moulded in accordance with the nature and substance of particular transactions.

In India the law of maintenance has never obtained in the same absolute form as in England and in the present connection has none but a possible historical relevance. Here there is an imperative statutory rule—a rule which the Court cannot transcend—that a mere right to sue cannot be transferred. The duty of the Courts is confined to the interpretation of the words, "a mere right to sue."

Nevertheless, the results may be in many respects similar. The Indian Legislature when it enacted sec. 6 (e) of the Transfer of Property Act, no doubt had in mind the expressions used in the English cases—"a bare right of action" or "a mere right to litigate." On the question of construction which arises in India, the language of Parker, J., in Glegg v. Bromley (1) to which the learned Chief Justice has already referred, is at least a valuable guide. The question in every case is whether the subject-matter of the transfer is, in the view of the Court, "property with an incidental remedy for its recovery" or is "a mere right to sue." I will not stop to discuss the definition in the Transfer of Property Act, sec. 8 of "actionable claims" (the Indian term corresponding to the English term "choses in action") because it seems clear that that definition must be construed as excluding "mere rights to sue."

Sir Benod Mitter asked why if a contract might be transferred before breach it should be incapable of transfer after breach. After breach, he said, the contract still subsisted. No doubt a line might be drawn between claims for breach of contract and claim in tort, where the right of personal safety or the right to immunity from fraud, has been violated. But, however valid such considerations might be if the principle of the thing were open to discussion, that is not the position. The policy of the law in India is expressed in the statute and effect must be given to the language according to its true meaning.

Moreover, when an ordinary commercial contract for the sale of goods has been broken and subsists only for the purpose of enforcing a claim to damages, it is to my mind difficult to say that the right to damages is, standing by itself, anything more than a mere right to sue, a right which is not incidental to property but is incidental to an abstract right in respect of contracts comparable to the abstract rights to personal safety and immunity from fraud in the region of tort. At any rate there is authority both English and Indian for the view that a claim to unliquidated damages for breach of contract is not assignable.

Turning to the case before us, I agree that the learned Judge decided, and correctly decided, on the materials placed before him, which included not only the pleadings but also the award of the Marwari Chamber of Commerce, that the suit must be dealt with as in essence a suit for unliquidated damages, though at first sight it appears to be a suit for liquidated damages. If that be so, it follows in my opinion that the claim to these damages being a mere right to sue was not transferable and that on that ground the suit, as a suit by the transferee, must fail.

But even if it be assumed that the goods were properly resold, and that the claim asserted in the plaint and transferred to the present Plaintiff is a claim to an ascertained sum, it would still be for consideration whether this claim is in the particular circumstances a mere right to sue or property with an incidental remedy for its recovery, within the meaning of Parker, J., in Glegg's case (1).

Sir Benod Mitter relied on certain dicta of McCardie, J., in County Hotel and Wine Company v. London and North-Western Railway (7). The learned Judge says: "In Torkington v. Magee (6), Channell, J., in delivering the judgment of the Divisional Court, referred to the above dicta, and apparently expressed the view that when a breach of contract had occurred in respect of which the original party to the contract could sue for damages, he could not assign those damages so as to enable the assignee to sue. Again I venture to think that this dictum, in view of other decisions, goes too far. I can see no reason why damages for breach of contract should not in some cases be capable of assignment without infringement of the public interest." And then the learned Judge gives an example. "Take, for example," he says, "a case where the contract admittedly fixes the damages for breach at a liquidated sum and provides that it may be sued for as a debt. What reason of public policy should prevent the assignment of such sum if public policy permits the assignment of a disputed debt?"

It must, however, be borne in mind that the observations of the learned Judge were made from the English point of view and that even so he did not go so far as to suggest that a claim to liquidated damages would in every case be assignable.

With these observations I agree in the conclusion at which the learned Chief Justice has arrived that this appeal must be dismissed.

[CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION.]APPEAL FROM APPELLATE ORDER

No. 113 of 1920.

CHATTERJEA, J. NEWBOLD, J. 1921, 31, May.	}	HAZARI LAL , Judgment-debtor, Appellant, v. BAIDYA NATH SAHA and ors., Decree-holders, Respondents.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), Or. 21, rr. 6 and 22, application for transfer of decree and for issue of notice upon judgment-debtor—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Art. 182 (5), latter application to the Court which passed the decree whether "an application in accordance with law or a step in aid of execution."

An application for transfer of a decree was made on the 4th November 1910, in which there was also a prayer for issuing notice on the judgment-debtor. The notice having been twice returned unserved, the decree-holder applied on the 24th January 1911 for issue of another notice which was served and the decree was duly transferred. On the 7th January 1914 an application for execution was made to the Court to which the decree was transferred:

Held—That the application for execution, dated the 7th January 1914 having been made more than three years after the application (for transfer of the decree), dated the 4th November 1910 was barred by limitation.

Or. XXI, r. 22, Civil Procedure Code, provides that the notice upon the judgment-debtor to show cause against execution shall be issued by the Court executing the decree. The Court which transferred the decree had therefore no power to issue that notice. Further, an application for transfer of a decree is not an application for execution.

CHUTTERPAT SINGH v. RAI BAHADUR SAITA SOOMARIMULL (1) referred to.

Therefore the application made by the decree-holder on the 24th January 1911 to issue notice upon the judgment-debtor cannot be held to be an application "in accordance with law" for execution or to take some step in aid of execution of the decree within the meaning of Art. 182 (5) of the Limitation Act and therefore could not suve limitation.

This was an appeal against the order of B. N. Rau, Esq., District Judge of Zillah Murshedabad, dated the 24th January 1920, reversing the order of Babu Jyotish Chandra Neogi, Munsif of Lalbagh, dated the 21st of July 1919, and remanding the case to his Court for disposal after consideration of certain issues.

The facts will appear from the judgment.

Babus Ram Chandra Mazumdar and Khitish Chandra Neogi, for the Appellant.

Babu Sachindra Prosad Ghose (for Babu Jatindra Lal Banerjee) for the Respondents.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

The question involved in this appeal is whether the application for execution of the decree is barred by limitation.

It appears that the Respondents obtained an instalment decree in the Court of the Munsif of Rampurhat on the 14th February 1907. The decree provided that on default in payment of any one instalment, the whole of the amount remaining unpaid would be due. There was default in payment in the very first instalment (payable in Assin 1314). The decretal amount therefore became due in Kartic 1314, (November 1907).

On the 4th November 1910, an application was made to the Rampurhat Court for transfer of the decree to the Court of the Munsif at Lalbagh for execution. A notice was issued to the judgment-debtor which was returned unserved. A fresh notice was issued with the same result. The decree-holders then applied on the 24th January 1911 for issue of another notice, and this time it was served on the 17th February 1911. The Certificate required under Or. XXI, r. 6 (b) was then prepared and the application was disposed of on the 28-3-11.

Application for execution of the decree was then made in the Lalbagh Court on the 7th January 1914, and there were subsequent applications for execution made in that Court and in the Rampurhat Court which it is not necessary to mention.

The contention of the judgment-debtor was that as the application in the Lalbagh Court dated the 7th January 1914 was made more than three years after the application (for transfer of the decree) dated the 4th November 1910 made in the Rampurhat Court, execution of the decree was barred by limitation. The decree-holders rely upon the application dated the 24th January 1911 made to the Rampurhat Court for issuing fresh notice upon the judgment-debtor as saving limitation, and the question for consideration is whether that application was an application "in accordance with law" for execution or to take some step in aid of execution within the meaning of Art. 182 (5) of the Limitation Act.

It appears that the notice which was applied for by the decree-holder on the 24th January 1911, was taken by the learned District Judge, to be a notice upon the judgment-debtor to show cause why the decree should not be transferred for execution to Lalbagh. The learned Judge was of opinion that though no such notice is required by the Code, the Court thought it proper to issue such a notice which is not prohibited by the Code, and the application for issuing such notice was "in accordance with law." He accordingly held that the execution of the decree was not barred by limitation.

It appears from the application dated the 4th November 1910 that the decree-holders prayed for a certificate under Or. XXI, r. 6 to the Lalbagh Court after issue of notice under Or. XXI, r. 22 upon the judgment-debtor.

The notice issued by the Court on the 25th January 1911 is described as a "notice to show cause why execution should not issue" (secs. 232 and 248 of the Code of Civil Procedure) and it calls upon the judgment-debtors to show cause, if any, why the decree should not be executed. The reference is to sections under the old Code, though the proceedings took place under the new Code, probably because the printed forms had not been changed.

Now under sec. 248 of the old Code, the "Court" which was to issue the notice under the section was "the Court by which the decree was passed, unless the decree has been sent to another Court for execution, in which case it means such other Court." Or. XXI, r. 22 of the present Code, however, expressly provides that the Court executing the decree shall issue the notice. The application to the Rampurhat Court dated the 4th November 1910 appears to have been made in a tabular form, but as stated above the decree-holders prayed for certificate under Or. XXI, (for the transfer of the decree) after issue of notice under Or. XXI, r. 22 upon the judgment-debtors, as they had no properties within the jurisdiction of the Rampurhat Court. There was thus no application for execution of the decree before the Rampurhat Court, and no notice could therefore be issued by that Court under Or. XXI, r. 22. In the case of Chatterpat Singh v. Rai Bahadur Saita Soomarimull (1) it was held that an application for transmission of a decree is not an application for execution, that no notice under sec. 248 of the Code of Civil Procedure of 1882 can be properly issued upon such an application, and that the notice required by that section must, when the decree has been transmitted, be issued by the Court to which the decree has been sent for execution, and which is the Court to decide whether the application is capable of execution. (See pp. 899-900). That was a case under the Code of 1882. Under the present Code (Or. XXI, r. 22), as pointed out above, it is the Court executing the decree which is to issue the notice. That being so, the Rampurhat Court could not issue the notice under Or. XXI, r. 22, and the application made by the decree-holder to that Court on the 24th January 1911 to issue a fresh notice under Or. XXI, r. 22 cannot be held to be an application "in accordance with law" for execution, or to take some step in aid of execution of the decree, within the meaning of Art. 182 cl. (5). That application therefore could not save limitation. The order of the lower Appellate Court must accordingly be set aside but as that Court did not consider the question of disability under sec. 7 of the Limitation Act, and the question of payment set up by the decree-holders (which were considered by the Court of first instance and decided against them), the case must be remanded to the Court of appeal below for consideration of the

Plaintiffs, Appellants,

v.

JOYNAL ABDIN (Abadin

SARKAR, Defendant,
Respondent.

Pleadings, court not to entertain a question not raised in—Reason of the rule explained—Test.

Neither party to a litigation can be allowed to set up at the hearing an entirely new and inconsistent case.

ESHAN CHUNDER v. SHAMA CHURN (1) and NORTH-WESTERN SALT COY., LTD. v. ELECTROTYPE ALKALI COY., LTD. (2) referred to.

The reason for the rule is that the Plaintiff might have received no notice that the point would be raised by the Defendant and would presumably be not prepared with the necessary evidence, and, conversely, the Defendant might be seriously embarrassed if the Plaintiff were permitted to spring a surprise upon him in the shape of a new case.

The test to be applied is whether the party aggrieved has really been taken by surprise. So, where the Plaintiffs sought to eject the Defendant on the ground that he was a trespasser and the Defendant answered that he was a tenant at money rent, but the Court determined the nature of the alleged tenancy and came to a conclusion which was not the case of either party:

(1) 11 M. I. A. 7 (1886).

(2) [1914] A. C. 461.

GONDLI BIBI v. JOYNAL ABDIN.

Held—That the substantial question in controversy between the parties being whether the Defendant was a trespasser or a tenant, the finding that the Defendant was a tenant was a complete answer to the claim for ejectment, and the determination of the nature of the tenancy did not prejudice the Plaintiffs in respect of their claim for ejectment. The question of the nature of the tenancy was, however, left open.

This was an appeal against the decree of Babu Jatindra Chandra Lahiri, Additional Subordinate Judge of Zillah Rungpur, dated the 4th of September 1919, reversing the decree of Babu Narendra Nath Ghose, Munsif, 1st Court at Gaibandha, dated the 4th of June 1918.

The facts of the case are briefly these :— In 1912, the Plaintiffs brought a suit against the Defendant under sec. 9 of the Specific Relief Act I of 1877, which was dismissed with the finding that the Defendant was an adhiar under the Plaintiffs. In 1913, the Plaintiffs brought a suit for damages against the Defendants for a moiety share of the crops grown on the disputed land. The suit came up on appeal to the High Court which gave the Plaintiffs a decree for damages for Rs. 10 on the admission of the Defendant as due to the Plaintiffs, but set aside the judgment of the Court of Appeal below in so far as it found that the sum of Rs. 10 payable to the Plaintiffs was for rent or that the relationship of landlord or tenant existed between the parties. In 1917, the Plaintiffs brought this suit in ejectment against the Defendant on the allegation that he was a trespasser on the land in dispute. Defendant alleged inter alia that he was a tenant at money rent and had acquired occupancy right and was not liable to be ejected. The suit was decreed by the Court of first instance, but dismissed on appeal by the lower Appellate Court with the finding that the Defendant was an adhiar tenant under the Plaintiffs. Hence the Plaintiffs preferred the present appeal to the High Court.

• Babu Atul Chandra Gupta for the Appellants argued that the Court of Appeal below was wrong in coming to the conclusion that the Defendant was an adhiar tenant inasmuch as it was not the case set up by the Defendant who had all along pleaded that he was a tenant at money rent and the said Court was clearly wrong in making out a new case for the Defendant. Further the decision of the High Court in the previous litigation between the parties made the question as to whether the Defendant was an adhiar tenant under the Plaintiffs res judicata between the parties.

Babu Mrityunjay Chattopadhyay for the Respondent contended first, that if the Court of Appeal below went beyond the pleadings in the suit it was only in so far as it decided the nature of the tenancy. But the real question in controversy was whether the Defendant was a trespasser or a tenant. The Plaintiffs came to Court with the specific case that the Defendant was a trespasser and liable to be ejected, and must stand or fall with it. The decision of the lower Appellate Court was that the Defendant was not a trespasser, and the Plaintiffs were at once out of Court. Secondly, no question of res judicata at all arose inasmuch as the effect of the decision of this Hon'ble Court in the previous litigation between the parties was to leave the question of status between the parties open.

Babu Atul Chandra Gupta in reply.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

This is an appeal by the Plaintiffs in an action in ejectment. The Plaintiffs alleged that the Defendant had no right of possession in the disputed land and was liable to be ejected as a trespasser. The Defendant pleaded that he was an occupancy raiyat under the Plaintiff and held the land at a rental of Rs. 10. Upon these pleadings, the trial Court raised the issue, whether the Plaintiffs had a right to get khas possession of the land in suit. The Court came to the conclusion that the Defendant was not a raiyat but a trespasser and decreed the suit. Upon appeal, the Subordinate Judge came to the conclusion that the Defendant was an adhiar tenant, that is, a tenant who cultivates the land on condition of payment of one half of the produce to the landlord. In this view the lower Appellate Court held that the Defendant could not be ejected as a trespasser. On the present appeal the decree of the Subordinate Judge has been assailed on two grounds, namely, first, that the case has been decided against the Plaintiffs on a ground not raised in the pleadings, and, secondly, that the decision of the question, whether the Defendant was or was not an adhiar tenant was barred by the principle of res judicata.

As regards the first point, the contention of the Appellant is not altogether unfounded. The Plaintiffs came into Court on the allegation that the Defendant looked after the cultivation of the land on their behalf, that he betrayed his trust and from 1911 appropriated the crops. The Defendant contended that he looked after the cultivation in his own right because he was an occupancy raiyat of the land and that the amount of annual rent payable by him was Rs. 10. The trial Court accepted the version of the Plaintiffs and found that the Defendant was a trespasser. The Subordinate Judge held that the Defendant was an adhiar tenant. This was plainly neither the case of the Plaintiffs nor the case of the Defendant.

On these facts Mr. Gupta has contended that the judgment of the Subordinate Judge is open to just exception. It may be conceded that neither party to a litigation can be allowed to set up at the hearing an entirely new and inconsistent case. The Plaintiff must be held to the state of facts alleged in his plaint or substantially consistent therewith. The Defendant also must be held to the state of facts alleged in his written statement or in harmony therewith. This rule was enunciated by Lord Westbury in Eshan Chunder v. Shama Churn (1) and was emphasised by Lord Moulton in North-Western Salt Coy., Ltd. v. Electrottype Alkali Coy., Ltd. (2), when he observed that the Court will not entertain a question not raised in the pleadings. The reason for the rule has been stated to be in substance that the parties might otherwise be seriously prejudiced. The Plaintiff might have received no notice that the point would be raised by the Defendant and would presumably be not prepared with the necessary evidence, and, conversely, the Defendant might be seriously embarrassed if the Plaintiff were permitted to spring a surprise upon him in the shape of a new case. Consequently, when an objection of this kind is taken, the test to be applied is whether the party aggrieved has really been taken by surprise. Let us see how the Plaintiffs stand when their case is considered from this stand-point.

The substantial question in controversy between the parties was whether the Defendant was a trespasser or a tenant. If the Defendant was a tenant, that was a complete answer to the claim, because the Plaintiffs have never asserted, that the Defendant was a tenant, that his tenancy was liable to be terminated, that it had been terminated in accordance with law and that the Defendant was not entitled to continue in possession any longer. The complaint of the Plaintiffs is consequently well-founded to this extent that the Subordinate Judge has determined the nature of the alleged tenancy and has come to a conclusion which was not the case of either party. But that, in our opinion, has not prejudiced the Plaintiffs in respect of their claim for ejectment. Upon the real question in issue, each party understood what he had to prove and what he had to expect from his opponent. We hold accordingly that the conclusion of the Subordinate Judge that the Defendant held as a tenant cannot be assailed.

(1) 11 M. L. A. 7 (1866).

GONDLI BIBI v. JOYNAL ABDIN.

As regards the second point, namely, whether the decision of the question of status of the Defendant was or was not res judicata. We are not prepared to accept the contention of the Appellants. The effect of the ultimate decision in this Court in the previous suit between the parties was to leave the question of status open. We need not examine this point further, because the effect of our decision also will be to leave the question of the nature of the tenancy of the Defendant under the Plaintiffs open for investigation in a future suit, if occasion should arise.

The result is that we affirm the decree of dismissal made by the Subordinate Judge on the ground that at the date of the institution of the suit the Defendant was a tenant under the Plaintiffs. This will in no way affect the decision of the nature of the tenancy in a future litigation between the parties. That the Defendant is a tenant under the Plaintiffs has been decided in this suit, but the nature of that tenancy will be open for investigation hereafter.

The Respondent will be entitled to his costs in this Court.

Respondents.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), Or. II, r. 2—Suit for interest on bond—Decree satisfied—Subsequent suit for principal barred.

A hypothecation bond contained a clause stipulating that if interest was not paid for six months the creditor might sue either for interest alone or for both principal and interest without waiting for the expiration of the period fixed for repayment (which was three years) and the debtor was "to have no objection whatever." More than three years after, no interest having been paid, the creditor brought a suit for interest alone and obtained a decree for sale of the mortgaged property. The decretal amount was deposited in Court and satisfaction entered. On a subsequent suit by the creditor for the principal sum and arrears of interest:

Held—That the provisions of Or. II, r. 2 of the Civil Procedure Code were applicable and the subsequent suit was not maintainable.

The cause of action referred to in the rule is the cause of action which gives occasion for and forms the foundation of the suit, and if that cause enables a man to seek for larger and wider relief than that to which he limits his claim, he cannot afterwards seek to recover the balance by independent proceedings.

This was an appeal from a decision of the High Court, Allahabad, dated the 2nd May 1917, setting aside a decree of the Subordinate Judge of Agra, dated the 16th March 1915.

MUHAMMAD HAFIZ v. MIRZA MUHAMMAD ZAKARIYA.

The facts were briefly as follows :—

By a bond, dated the 14th September 1910 Mirza Khadim Husain (since deceased) and his son, the 1st Respondent, mortgaged certain property belonging to them for the sum of Rs. 14,000 and interest at 6 per cent. per annum in favour of the Plaintiffs' ancestor, the money to be repayable at the end of three years. The material clauses in the bond were cls. 2, 3 and 7, which provided as follows :—

“2. We shall pay interest on the amount of this bond to the creditor every month on taking a receipt from him. If for some reason or other, we be not able to pay interest for six months, the said creditor shall be competent to realize only the unpaid amount of interest due to him, or the amount of principal and interest both, by bringing a suit in Court without waiting for the expiry of the time fixed, with costs from us and the property hypothecated and other property moveable and immoveable and from our person, and we or our heirs and representatives shall have no objection whatever.

“3. If after the expiry of the stipulated period of three years the amount of this bond remains unpaid by us, with the consent of the creditor, then even after the expiry of the stipulated period the same rate and mode of payment of interest shall be upheld and maintained.

“7. If we fail to pay the amount of this bond with interest after the stipulated period of three years, the said creditor shall, in case of default be entitled to realize, by bringing a suit, the whole of the amount of principal and interest together with other incidental expenses due to him and costs, and we, the executants, or our heirs and representatives shall have no objection and if we take any objection it shall be false.”

On the 16th April 1914 a suit was brought by the Appellant and Respondents

Nos. 2, 3 and 4, against the 1st Respondent claiming only the arrears of interest unpaid. That suit was decreed in August 1914, and the decree was duly satisfied.

On the 23rd January 1915 the same parties instituted the present suit for the recovery of the principal sum of Rs. 14,000 and accrued interest.

The defence was then raised by the 1st Respondent that the suit was barred under the provisions of Or. II, r. 2 of the Code of Civil Procedure. This contention was overruled by the Subordinate Judge who held that there were two separate and distinct causes of action arising out of one contract.

On appeal to the High Court of Allahabad the decision of the lower Court was reversed and this appeal was now brought before the Judicial Committee to restore the decree of the Subordinate Judge.

The Respondents were not represented before the Board.

Mr. S. Hyam for the Appellants, contended that the provisions of the bond were so framed that Or. II, r. 2 of the Civil Procedure Code did not apply to it, and that the cause of action in the earlier suit was separate and distinct from that in the later.

MUHAMMAD HAFIZ v. MIRZA MUHAMMAD ZAKARIYA.

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by

LORD BUCKMASTER.—In this appeal their Lordships have not had the advantage of hearing counsel for the Respondents, but owing to the full and able argument of Mr. Hyam they have been placed in complete possession of the facts.

The appeal arises out of a mortgage suit. The Appellants and the second, third and fourth Respondents represent together the mortgagee. The first Respondent was himself one of the mortgagors and represents the other. The mortgage deed in question was executed on the 14th September 1910, and was a simple mortgage but it took an unusual form. It created security for the repayment to the mortgagees of Rs. 14,000 principal and interest at the rate of 8 annas per cent. per month, it then provided by cl. 2 that the interest should be paid on the bond as each month went by, and that if the interest was not paid for six months, the creditor should be competent to realise only the unpaid amount of interest due to him, or the amount of principal and interest both by bringing a suit in Court without waiting for the expiration of the time fixed, and that the mortgagors should take no objection to such proceedings. The time fixed was that mentioned in cl. 7, which provided that if the amount secured by the bond, with interest, should not be paid after the expiration of three years, the creditor should be entitled to realise by bringing a suit for the whole of the amount of the principal and interest, together with other incidental expenses, and again the clause concluded by provision that the mortgagors should have no objection, and, if they took objection to such proceedings, it should be regarded as false.

Three years elapsed after the deed had been executed and no interest was paid, with the result that in April 1914, the mortgagee had the power, so far as the terms of the deed were concerned, either to bring an action for the purpose of realising the security in order to obtain repayment of the full principal money and the interest, or simply of the interest alone. He selected the latter course, and on the 16th April 1914, he instituted a suit which set out, with perfect fairness and clearness, the provisions of the bond and the fact that he had elected to pursue the remedies that the bond gave him in respect only of the interest that was then due. The amount of that interest was Rs. 3,010 and in respect of that sum, and no more, he paid the court fees upon the plaint. The learned Judge before whom this suit was brought made a decree on the 11th August 1914, granting the relief that was claimed, but he appears to have overlooked the peculiar character of the mortgage, for he made a decree which, upon the face of it, was not the decree that the Plaintiff had asked for, and certainly not the decree to which the Defendants could, on any hypothesis, be entitled. What he did was this: He declared that the amount due to the mortgagee for principal, interest and costs was Rs. 3,270-12-0, a statement that the consideration of the plaint itself would have shown to be manifestly inaccurate, for it was perfectly plain from the proceedings that the amount of Rs. 3,010 was the amount claimed as due and this was for interest alone and did not include one single rupee in respect of the principal, which still remained at the sum of Rs. 14,000. He then provided that if the Defendant paid into Court the amount so declared to be due, which was the amount of the interest and costs, on or before the 11th February 1915, the mortgagees should deliver up the documents relating to the property, and if required, re-transfer it to the Defendant free from the mortgage and from all incumbrances created by the mortgagees or any persons claiming under them. Paragraph 2 of the decree proceeded upon the same footing, and provided that if the money was not paid in there should be a sale, out of the money realised the claim for Rs. 3,270 should be satisfied, and after that the balance of the money in Court should be paid out to the mortgagor.

The result of this decree would have been that the mortgagor could have secured complete redemption by payment of money which, by common consent, was nothing but interest on the sum that he owed and the costs. It is impossible to consider how it was that such a decree passed either the vigilance of the pleader who was appearing for the Plaintiff or the consideration of the Court, for such a decree was not the decree asked for nor that which, in the circumstances, ought to have been made.

Apparently the money was paid into Court, but the mortgagor never asked for re-transfer of the property, and the property therefore apparently remaining still subject to the mortgage, the representatives of the mortgagee who had died proceeded, on the 23rd January 1915, to institute the proceedings out of which this appeal has arisen, seeking relief similar to, but not the same as, that formerly claimed. It was stated that the amount due on the mortgage was the principal moneys and the interest that had accrued due, less the amount which had been provided by the proceedings formerly taken, and they sought realisation of the security and consequential relief. To that suit objection was taken that it was not competent to the mortgagees by reason of r. 2 of Or. II of the Code of Civil Procedure. The learned Judge before whom the matter came, being obviously impressed by the injustice which would be done if effect was given to such a defence, decided in favour of the Plaintiffs, but upon appeal to the High Court that judgment has been reversed and judgment entered for the Defendant; from the judgment of the High Court the present appeal lies.

Now the whole question depends upon considering whether the terms of r. 2 of Or. II does really bar the Plaintiffs from the relief that they seek, and no one would be anxious to stretch or strain the language of that rule in order to cover a case where, if it be made applicable, it is obvious that the Plaintiffs may suffer a substantial wrong. The rule runs in these terms :—

(1) "Every suit shall include the whole of the claim which the Plaintiff is entitled to make in respect of the cause of action; but a Plaintiff may relinquish any portion of his claim in order to bring the suit within the jurisdiction of any Court."

There are other provisions of the Order to which reference need not be made, because, in their Lordships' opinion, the exact provisions of r. 2, sub-sec. 1, which has been read, covers and fits the present dispute. What was the cause of action that the Plaintiffs possessed when the proceedings were first instituted? It was the cause of action due either to the fact that the interest had been unpaid for more than six months, or that the three years had elapsed, and the principal was also unpaid, and in either case they could have sued for realisation to provide for the whole amount secured by the deed.

The Plaintiffs now purported to proceed under cl. 2 of the deed, but even in that case the non-payment of the interest was the sole cause upon which they were entitled to ask either for the limited relief that was sought or the larger relief which they abstained from seeking. It is also important to point out that the only relief that could be sought in both cases was realisation of the mortgage security, for the mortgage was a simple mortgage containing no express covenant for the payment of the principal and the interest.

Their Lordships think therefore that the rule covers the present dispute, and it is only necessary, in deference to the careful argument that is placed before the Board, to refer to one or two of the authorities to which the learned counsel called attention. The first was Mussummat Chand Kour v. Partab Singh (1), and that can be dealt with very simply. In that case what happened was that a Hindu widow having sold the whole of the estate, and a suit being instituted to set aside the sale, the proceedings were objected to upon the ground that before the sale was effected other proceedings were instituted to obtain an injunction to prevent the sale taking place. It was pointed out that the actual cause and circumstances which gave rise to the dispute were different in both cases, because in the one all that could be alleged was an intention, and all the relief that could be sought was an injunction. In the other, the matter alleged was an act done and the relief sought was the restoration of the property that had been sold. In the case of The Rajah of Pittapur v. Sri Rajah Venkata Mahipati Suriya Row (2), it is said that the cause of action means the cause of action for which the suit is brought, and it does not say that every suit includes every cause of action. Their Lordships see no reason to attempt to qualify or to extend those words, because they are in fact nothing but a repetition of the exact words of the Code; the cause of action is the cause of action which gives occasion for and forms the foundation of the suit, and if that cause enables a man to ask for larger and wider relief than that to which he limits his claim, he cannot afterwards seek to recover the balance by independent proceedings. The case of Yashvant v. Vithal (3); really illustrates this view, for there the learned Judge held that both the causes of action and the remedies were distinct.

Their Lordships, in expressing this opinion, have in mind the fact that, owing possibly to faulty advice, or, it may be, to a misapprehension of their strict legal rights, the Plaintiffs are in hazard of losing Rs. 14,000 in respect of a transaction which, so far as can be seen, was a perfectly straightforward transaction effected at a reasonable rate of interest. Whether there be any means now, according to the law in India, of remedying what does appear to be a misapprehension underlying the decree that was made on the 11th August 1914, their Lordships are not prepared to say, but if such opportunity can be afforded consistently with the well-known rules establishing practice in India, their Lordships see no reason to doubt that it will receive considerate attention by the Court before whom it is brought.

Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty that the appeal be dismissed.

Solicitor: Mr. Henry S. L. Polak for the Appellants.

PRIVY COUNCIL.

---	---	---

Land attached to office of Karnam—Nature of tenure—Land appurtenant to office and impartible—Enfranchisement and inam grant, effect of—Law governing Palayams, not applicable.

In Madras, the Karnam of the village occupies his office not by hereditary or family right, but as personal appointee, though in certain cases that appointment is primarily exercised in favour of a suitable person who is member of a particular family. It follows that land appurtenant to the office so enjoyed should continue to go with that office and should accordingly be impartible.

The enfranchisement of the Karnam lands in 1906, whereby the Inam was confirmed to V, "his representatives and assigns, to hold and dispose of as he or they might think proper," subject to the payment of quit rent, etc., and the reservation of minerals, did not enure for the benefit of the joint family of which V was a member but to him exclusively.

Different considerations apply to the case of a Palayam; for when a Palayam was abolished, in so far as the duty of rendering military service was concerned, the estate was continued with all its hereditary incidents to the Palayagar in the same manner as if possessed by a zamindar, and the Full Court of Madras were in error in applying the law regarding Palayams by analogy to a Karnam case in GUNNAIYAN v. KAMAKCHI AYYAR (8).

(8) I. L. R. 26 Mad. 339 (1902).

The decision of the majority in VENKATA v. RAMA (3) approved.

PINGALA LAKSHMIPATHI v. BOMMIREDDI-PALLI CHALAMAYYA (10) overruled.

This was an appeal from a decree of the High Court of Judicature at Madras, dated the 19th February 1918.

The facts of the case will sufficiently appear from the judgment.

MR. A. M. Dunne, K. C. (with Mr. K. V. L. Narasimham) for the Appellant.—This is a suit for partition of certain properties attached to a service tenure of "Karnam" or accountant in a village. Government have the power to appoint anybody it likes. In 1859 Government provided that, if it chose, it could alter the tenure (Rules of the Inam Settlement). These lands were accordingly enfranchised in 1906. From 1902 the family were separated in food and estate.

Three questions arise:—(1) Can there be co-parcenary interest in property attached to an office?

(2) Did not the Plaintiff's interest, if he has any, cease (The Plaintiff is the younger brother of the new Karnam)?

(3) Upon the complete division of a joint estate, in food, estate, and worship can there still remain a co-parcenary interest?

By the Decree of the Revenue Court in 1902, the then Karnam vindicated the property as his private property.

There have been a number of cases in Madras that these lands are attached to the office and no one else has any right in it.

Then came Gunnaiyan v. Kamakchi (8) citing as authority Narayana v. Chengalamma (7). They assume that there is an hereditary interest in these service tenures. That is the fallacy.

MUSTI VENKATA JAGANNADHA SARMA v. MUSTI VEERABHADRAYYA.

[LORD SHAW.—In Palayams is there any right to change the holder.]

No.

There was partition in 1902 and so I have held it adversely from them onwards. I turned them out then.

Bada v. Hussu Bhai (2) and Srinivasayyar v. Lakshamma (1). I want to shew that from the earliest times till Gunnaiyan's case (8) the law regarding partition of the Karnam was perfectly well-settled in Madras.

The decision in Gunnaiyan's case (8), lays down that enfranchisement is not a fresh grant and this rule applies to enfranchisement of Karnam Inams.

Bada Hussu Bhai (2), Srinivasayyar v. Lakshamma (1) and Venkata v. Rama (3).

[LORD BUCKMASTER.—But see top of page 251 of 8 Madras.]

[LORD DUNEDIN.—See p. 273 (bottom) of 8 Madras.]

You may have a hereditary right to an office, but the property must go to the holder. That an office has certain emoluments attached to it does not give a coparcenary interest in it.

Narayana v. Chengalamma (7) is a case of unsettled Palayam. There it was treated not as a service tenure but as an ancestral estate by both sides, see p. 3. In Venkatarayadu v. Venkataramayya (4), again they are acting on the same principle. In Dharanipragada Durgamma v. Kadambari Virrazu (5), as in Venkata v. Rama (3), the ground is the same. In Subbaraya Mudali v. Kamu Chetti (6), a widow en-franchises. They follow there Venkatarayadu v. Venkataramayya (4) and Dharanipragada Durgamma v. Kadambari Virrazu (5).

Gunnaiyan's case (8) is against me on one point only and that does not touch me. They dealt there with the case of the son of the man who enfranchised. The position is entirely different from mine. The point against me is Bhashyam Ayyangar, J.'s dictum that an office held like this is exactly on the same footing as Inam lands.

In Pingala Lakshmipathi v. Bommi-reddipalli Chalamayya (10), there is the same point that the assumption of a service Inam does not involve the title.

Ramayya v. Joganadhan (11) also proceeds on the assumption that there is a hereditary right. The whole question is—Is it hereditary?

Durga Prasad v. Tribeni (12) refers to Ghatwals, at p. 256.

Subba Row v. Satya Narain (13) is a judgment which refers to a number of unreported cases. It re-affirms the recent view. However it does not touch the case.

Refers to two Acts of the Madras Council.

(1) Madras Act II of 1894 for, village service holding, to be given salaries instead of Inams. See cl. 9 (2), secs. 16, 17 and 20. This statute contemplates succession to the office, and the land goes with the office. It does not seem to give a proprietary right in the land.

(2) Act III of 1895. Sec. 3, cl. 1, sub-cl. (3) applies this to Karnams. Sec. 5 makes it absolutely impossible that it should be joint property. Sec. 7, cl. (1), secs. 13 and 21 "no Civil Court shall have authority," etc.

Standing orders of the Board of Revenue (Madras) of 1907 at p. 180 shew that these service Inams were not property in the ordinary sense of the word till enfranchised. Describe personal Inams, etc. R. 21, cl. 5 of these rules deals with service Inams.

Mr. K. V. L. Narasimham (following) refers Gunnaiyan v. Kamakchi Ayyar (8). Government has right to resume and regrant.

[LORD SHAW.—Did the Regulations of 1907 apply to this case when it was tried.]

Yes.

Venkatarayadu v. Venkataramayya (4) and Dharanipragada Durgamma v. Kadambari Virrazu (5) cannot be right, unless the property was not joint, else the widow could not have held.

Even if Pingala Lakshmipathi v. Bom-mireddipalli Chalamayya (10) and Ramayya v. Joganadhan (11) be right my client is entitled to the land for we cannot go behind 1907 the date of enfranchisement, when there was no joint family. Subordinate Judge refers to Ramayya v. Joganadhan (11) only as to the effects of enfranchisement and not on the question of "joint" ownership in them.

Mr. L. DeGruyther, K. C. (with Messrs. B. Dubé and Hyam) for the Respondent.—Gunnaiyan v. Kamakchi (8) is the only case in point and there land was held to be for the family. Sec. 17 of III of 1895.

In Venkata v. Rama (3), land was held by a stranger and so the case is wholly different.

In the Fifth Report, Vol. II, p. 11 (Higginbotham & Co.'s reprint) the office of Karnam is described.

Madras Regulation 29 of 1802 is the first Regulation about the duties, etc., of Karnam. Parts of this have been repealed by later statutes. But this illustrates the position of Karnam. Secs. 4 and 5, etc., of this Regulation.

[LORD SHAW.—Look at sec. (9).]

Regulation VI of 18231, secs. 3 and 7.

Here we have property which prior to the Regulation was probably partible and would become so again after enfranchisement.

Act II of 1894 and Act III of 1895, sec. 10, sub-sec. (2), cl. (2).

If on enfranchisement it is ancestral property, then clearly the Plaintiff should succeed.

This is in the same position as a hereditary estate in India, and so when a person succeeds what are the rights of the other members? I say that the younger members are entitled to possession of parts for maintenance. This is also borne out by Gunnaiyan v. Kamakchi (8).

As regards the effect of enfranchisement, Gunnaiyan v. Kamakchi (8).

Except in the last case, Subba Row v. Satya Narain (13), it has never been questioned that the other members have a right.

Mr. A. M. Dunne in reply:—All these cases refer to a "Palayam."

The moment you have a new tenant you have a new right.

There is an earlier Act which makes this clearer. Regulation 25 of 1802, sec. (11), sec. (7) of Reg. 29 of 1802.

MUSTI VENKATA JAGANNADHA SARMA v. MUSTI VEERABHADRAYYA.

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by

LORD SHAW.—This is an appeal from a decree, dated the 19th February 1918, of the High Court of Judicature at Madras which reversed a decree, dated the 14th March 1917, of the Temporary Subordinate Judge of Cocanada. This last-mentioned decree remanded the suit so that partition might be decreed in favour of the Plaintiff-Respondent.

The suit was for the recovery of the possession of a one-half share of lands specified in the schedule attached to the plaint. It was admitted that the suit properties had formed the emoluments attached to the office of Karnam or Village Accountant in the village of Pandalapaka.

These lands were enfranchised, as after-mentioned, in the year 1906 by an Inam, a title deed granted to Venkatramayya, the Appellant's father.

The pedigree is as follows :—

The Appellant's grand-father Subbarayudu was removed from his office of Karnam for incapacity due to old age, and his eldest son Venkatramayya was appointed Karnam on 23rd February 1902. Shortly thereafter the former Karnam died.

It is a fact in the case which is admitted that prior to the enfranchisement and Inam grant of 1906 all the family properties which were capable of division were divided into two equal shares between Venkatramayya and Veerabhadrayya. No partition took place of the Service Inam lands which are in suit in the present case.

The Appellant maintains that the Respondent had no right to such lands; that they were not joint family property, and were for that reason not included within the scope of the division made; and that the enfranchisement of the Karnam lands in 1906 and the procedure with regard thereto are consistent with the view that the lands were impartible and were confirmed as separate property by the then holder of the office of Karnam; while upon the other hand the Respondent maintains that a division of this particular property, although it is undoubtedly Karnam land, must now be decreed and that the enfranchisement of 1906 could not destroy the nature of the property as joint family property and the interest of the Respondent therein.

The Subordinate Judge took the former view and the High Court took the latter. The question in the appeal is which of these views is correct.

The point in issue is compendiously put in the Respondent's case in these terms: "Whether the enfranchisement in the name of the Defendant's father enured for the benefit of the family or to himself exclusively?"

It is admitted that the lands in suit formed the emoluments of the Karnam or Village Accountant. A large body of authority on the subject of the nature of the title to lands so held was cited to the Board. There can be no question of assailing (whatever be the nature of the title to the property itself) the validity of the enfranchisement under the Inam rules. The suit proceeds upon that footing and asks for a division of the property on the assumption that it has been duly enfranchised under the Inam Rules of 1859.

It is, however, highly expedient to note the exact terms of the enfranchisement itself. It is dated the 21st March 1906, and is signed by Mr. J. A. Atkinson, Inam Commissioner. It is thus expressed :—

"No. 1520.

"Title deed granted to Musti Venkatramayya.

"By order of the Governor in Council of Madras acting on behalf of the Secretary of State for India in Council, I acknowledge your Title to an Inam consisting of the right to a portion of the Government revenue on land measuring (forty-five) 45—83 acres of dry (be the same a little more or less) originally granted for service, and situated in the village of Pandalapaka in the Estate of Pithapur, in the Taluk of Ramchandrapur in the District of Godavari.

"2. This Inam, being held for Karnam Service now otherwise provided for shall now be deemed freed of such service but shall henceforth be subject to the payment of an annual Quit-rent of Rupees (296-8-0) two hundred and ninety-six and annas eight exclusive of Rupees (24-0-0) twenty-four already payable as jodi to the proprietor, which Quit-rent is hereby imposed upon the Inam in commutation both of the said service and of the reversionary interest possessed by Government in the Inam. The Inam is now confirmed to you, your representatives and assigns, to hold or dispose of as you or they think proper, subject only to the payment of the above-mentioned Quit-rent and jodi (which Quit-rent will be liable to revision at the periodical re-settlements of the district), and to the provisions of the next clause.

"3. The right of Government to all minerals, if any, in the land referred to in cl. 1 above is hereby expressly reserved to Government, and the revenue referred to in such clause represents only the right of Government to a share in the surface products of such land.

(Signed) J. A. ATKINSON, Inam Commissioner."

"Dated 21st March 1906,

"MADRAS.

There can be no question as to the absolute nature of this grant in favour of the Appellant's father. The Inam is confirmed "to you, your representatives and assigns, to hold or dispose of as you or they think proper" subject only to the payment of quit-rent, etc., and to the reservation of minerals.

It is worthy of note first that this enfranchisement happens also to be in entire accord with the Standing Order of the Board of Revenue of Madras as to Inams, No. 52 of 1897, and second that that Standing Order makes the distinction between grants which are personal or subsistence grants and those which are Service Inams. It is to the latter category that the enfranchisement in the present case properly belongs. By the Standing Order alluded to it is provided by sec. 29 that:—

"XXIX. Inams thus enfranchised, either by the payment of an annual quit-rent, or of a single fixed sum equal to twenty years' purchase of the quit-rent, will, like every other description of property, be subject to the jurisdiction of the ordinary Courts of Justice in all questions of disputed right, succession, etc., and they may be mortgaged, sold and transferred in any manner, at the will and discretion of the inamdar, subject to the payment of quit-rent, if such is not redeemed."

The Board has carefully considered the long series of authorities quoted in argument and it is of opinion as follows:—

(1) The lands comprising the emoluments of a Karnam were attached to the office held by him as such;

(2) When the Karnam for the time being was removed from office he lost all right and title to the lands;

(3) Although in point of fact there might be even a long continuance of the office in a particular family, the right of the Government and the decision of the Revenue authorities to remove a Karnam from office and to appoint another, were not open to question in Courts of Law, and

(4) If this right of selection were exercised in favour of a stranger, there being, for example, within the range of the family (which had been accustomed to have one of its members holding the office of Village Accountant) no person who in the opinion of the Revenue Officer was suitable for the position, then the appointment went to the stranger selected and the lands with it as emoluments without any claim thereon as a family right by relatives of former holders of the office.

These propositions seem to their Lordships to have been part of the law of Madras long prior to the Acts of 1894 and 1895, which are now to be referred to; but it is to be observed with regard both to Madras Act No. 2 of 1894, sec. 10, and Madras Act No. 3 of 1895, sec. 10, that eligibility, whether for nomination to the office of Karnam by the proprietor of the village under the former Act or by the Collector under the latter, is a matter personal to the nominee, clearly taking into account such things, not only as sex and age, but also the physical and mental capacity to discharge the office, and even the educational qualifications of the person selected.

It is accordingly clear that since that time in Madras the Karnam of the village occupies his office not by hereditary or family right, but as personal appointee, though in certain cases that appointment is primarily exercised in favour of a suitable person who is member of a particular family. It would accordingly appear, apart from the authorities, that lands held as appurtenant to the office so enjoyed should continue to go with that office and should accordingly be impartible.

It may be, however, that the course of authority leads to a different result from that to which principle and administrative convenience would seem to point. Their Lordships will therefore examine the authorities, which, as will be seen hereafter, are conflicting.

In Srinivasayyar v. Lakshamma (1), it was held that where a hereditary village officer who had been dismissed sued to recover land which had formerly been the emoluments of the office and which had been enfranchised and granted to another person, holding the office at the time of the enfranchisement, such a suit could not lie. Their Lordships quote the judgment of Turner, C. J., as containing a compact statement of law upon the point :—

“The lands were attached to the office of Karnam, as its emolument; when the Appellant was removed from the office, he lost his right to the land.

“The circumstance that money may have been expended on the improvements of the land in the expectation that the office with its emolument would be continued to the family, would not give the Appellant any title to recover the land in the events that have occurred. When he was removed for misconduct, the office and emoluments were conferred on a stranger, and with the decision of the Revenue authority on that question we cannot interfere. While the office was held by a stranger, the Government resolved to sever the lands from the office and to offer them to the then office-holder for enfranchisement; the holder accepted the offer and became the owner.”

The decision, it will be observed, non-suited the former holder of the office from recovering the land. But the same result followed in the subsequent case of Bada v. Hussu Bhai (2), in which a member of the family of an office-holder who had never held the office sued to recover a share of the lands, and the same learned Judge put the point thus :—

“The land was appurtenant to the office, and the Government determined to sever it from the office and to allow the office-holder or office-holders for the time being to enfranchise it. The Appellant, who was never the holder of the office, could not have a claim on its emoluments.”

That this was the law of Madras was stated by the Full Court in the year 1884, in Venkata v. Rama (3). The judgment of Hutchins, J., in referring to the Full Court thus states the point :—

“To ensure the office being held by a qualified person, the Executive was compelled to reserve to itself the determination of all claims.”

Following the line of his dissent, however, he added :—

“But subject to this one condition the absolute right of hereditary succession has been repeatedly recognized.”

He dissented, as has been said, on this point from the judgment of the Full Bench. But in the opinion of their Lordships the judgment then pronounced (and it is observed that Turner, C. J., and Muttusami Ayyar, J., were members of the Court), was clear and sound. The Madras Regulations of 1802, 1806 and 1831 are most carefully considered, and the general result is stated in the following sentences of the judgment of Turner, C. J. :—

“When the emoluments consisted of land, the land did not become the family property of the person appointed to the office, whether in virtue of an hereditary claim to the office or otherwise. It was an appanage of the office inalienable by the office-holder and designed to be the emolument of the officer into whose hands soever the office might pass. If the Revenue authorities thought fit to disregard the claim of a person who asserted an hereditary right to the office and conferred it on a stranger, the person appointed to the office at once became entitled to the lands which constituted its emolument.”

Even on the footing that the Respondent in the present case had established that the office was one in which he as a member of the family had a species of expectation or hereditary right, the decision would equally apply to the present case. The judgment of Muttusami Ayyar, J., upon this point was clear.

“According to the law, therefore, as it stood prior to the enfranchisement of the Inam, a right to the land could only be legally acquired through the right to the possession of the office, and neither the Respondent's father nor the Respondent had then any vested interest in the office to sustain an action in the nature of an ejectment.”

The same reasoning would have applied to any attempt to partition the lands.

In the opinion of the Board the law of Madras was thus soundly stated and that judgment should not have been disturbed.

It was followed in the case of Venkatarayadu v. Venkataramayya (4), and as the judgment of Sir Arthur Collins seems strictly to apply to the present litigation these sentences from it are quoted and are adopted :—

“We think that the decision of the Subordinate Judge is opposed to the principles laid down in the Full Bench decision in Venkata v. Rama (3). The land which formed the emolument of the office of Karnam did not become the family property of the person appointed to the office, although he may have had an hereditary claim to the office. The land was designed to be the emolument of the person into whose hand the office of the Karnam might pass and was inalienable by him. The effect of enfranchisement was to free the lands from their inalienable character and to empower the Government to deal with them as they pleased.”

The same result was reached in Dharani-pragada Durgamma v. Kadambari Virrazu (5), in which the principle of the Full Bench case was again followed.

In Subbaraya Mudali v. Kamu Chetti (6), “lands which had been held by a deceased as moniem service Inam were enfranchised after his death and sold by his widow. On a claim being preferred by the reversioners for a declaration that the sale was inoperative as against them after the expiration of the widow's life estate it was held that the right of the widow under the grant was not limited to that of a widow's estate." The case was expressly decided as following the Full Bench decision. Subsequently, with one exception about to be noted, the law of Madras up to the year 1899 followed the consistent line which has just been stated.

The difficulty, however, which appeared in the later decisions sprang from the case of Narayana v. Chengalamma (7). It must, however, be observed that that was not a Karnam case. It was the case of a Palayam; and in their Lordships' opinion the error which has appeared has been in the treatment of these two separate cases as governed by analogical principle. Running through the decisions of the Madras Courts the same difficulty more than once appears: it arises from the same cause, namely, that the law of the Palayam is treated as the same as the law of the Karnam. This is carried to the point that in 1902 in the case of Gunnaiyan v. Kamakchi Ayyar (8), the Full Court reversed the law that had been laid down by a Madras Full Bench in 1884 in the case of Venkata v. Rama (3). This procedure has been, of course, full of perplexity and that perplexity must now, if possible be brought to an end.

The judgment of this Board dealing so fully with the case of a palayam tenure and delivered by Sir John Edge in the case of Naicker v. Midnapore Zamindari Company (9), on the 16th March 1921, makes it unnecessary to enter again at length on that topic. The Palayagars were originally "petty chieftains occupying usually tracts of hills or forest country subject to pay tribute and service to the paramount State, but seldom paying either, and more or less independent." The State policy with regard to Palayagars was definitely announced by the proclamation of Lord Clive in 1801. To all intents and purposes the Palayagars were relieved of military duties; they had to give up possession of fire-arms and weapons of offence and become Zamindars; a certain number of pikemen whose names were to be registered were allowed to these chieftains in deference to their personal feelings and "for the purpose of maintaining the pomp and state heretofore attached to the persons of the said Palayagars." The meaning of the proclamation is that their estates were subjected to assessment "upon the principles of zamindar tenures." Palayagars so treated were dealt with as zamindars with hereditary estates, their ancestors' possessions being secured to them.

It is accordingly not to be wondered at that when a case of this nature was brought before the Courts as in Narayana v. Chengalamma (7), already referred to, it should have been held that the Inam title-deed which had been granted to the Palayagar in that case did not confer any new title and that the enfranchisement had no "larger operation than as a release granted by the Crown in respect of its reversionary interest and of the obligation of rendering service." The decision forms no authority for the same principle being extended to the case of a Karnam. It was so interpreted, however, in Gunnaiyan v. Kamakchi Ayyar (8), and Bhashyam Ayyangar, J., applied the law as laid down as to Palayams as "law bearing upon the enfranchisement of Inams whether they be personal Inams or service Inams." The only difference, said the learned Judge, between that case and the present one "is that in the former the office itself was abolished as unnecessary, whereas in the present case the office was retained an office, the house being attached thereto in lieu of the Inam. This, of course, can make no distinction in principle."

Their Lordships differ from this view. When a Palayam was abolished, in so far as the duty of rendering military service was concerned, the estate was continued with all its hereditary incidents to the Palayagar in the same manner as if possessed by a zamindar. It is different with regard to the case of a Karnam. A hereditary right in a Karnam or his family can only, at the utmost, be said to constitute a certain spes among persons within the area of selection of those eligible for the office. But it is not, as had already been observed, even so limited. The power of selection rests with the administrative officials, who alone are judges of the eligibility of the Karnam for the time being, and it is the settled law of Madras that the emoluments in the shape of lands followed the office, ex necessitate. Otherwise the holder of the lands might be some person other than the holder of the office as already pointed out. The analogy fails.

It was, however, decided in the opposite sense by a Full Bench in the case of Pingala Lakshmiipathi v. Bommireddipalli Chalamayya (10). In a brief opinion it is said that "it is difficult to gather any definite principle common to the majority" in the case of Venkata v. Rama (3). The case of Gunnaiyan v. Kamakchi Ayyar (8) was approved. Their Lordships are of opinion that the Full Bench was in error: that the case of a Karnam stands on its own footing and that the principles applicable thereto were properly decided in Venkata v. Rama (3) by the Full Court. The reasons for their Lordships' views have already been sufficiently stated.

To quote and to adopt the judgment of the 25th August 1902, of Mr. Galletti, Acting Sub-Collector, in this case:—

"This is a suit for the recovery of the Karnam service Inam lands of Pandalaka. Plaintiff is admittedly Karnam. The land is admitted Karnam's Inam. Judgment for Plaintiff with costs."

A warrant of execution dated the 24th October 1902, authorising the removal of "any person bound by the decree who may refuse to vacate the same," was also right. It is unnecessary, however, to enter upon questions either of limitation or of res judicata which were referred to in the argument because the case has been disposed of on the merits.

When, accordingly, on the 21st March 1906, the title deed already quoted was granted by way of an Inam to the Appellant's father and was in express words confirmed to him, and was, "now confirmed to you, your representatives and assigns, to hold or dispose of as you or they think proper," the Board is of opinion that that enfranchisement must be given full effect to, and that it is not subject to be eviscerated or altered by the claim for partition or division put forward by way of defence to the present suit.

Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty that the appeal should be allowed; that the decree of the Temporary Subordinate Judge of Cocanada, dated the 14th March 1917, be affirmed and that the Appellant be found entitled to costs in the Courts below from the said date and of the costs of this appeal.

THE CHAIRMAN, JALPAIGURI MUNICIPALITY, Defendant, Appellant,
v.

MOOKERJEE, J.
BUCKLAND, J.
1921,
21, June.

THE JALPAIGURI TEA
Co., LD., and anr.,
Plaintiffs, Respondents.

Bengal Municipal Act (III, B. C. of 1884), sec. 85 (a)—“Circumstances and property within the Municipality,” meaning of—Municipal assessment on tea companies, whose gardens and market lay outside the Municipality, when the sale proceeds alone came to Bank within the Municipality, legality of—Separate assessment on several companies who were joint occupants of one holding, if ultra vires—Sec. 87 (d), defect in the assessment list, if vitiates the assessment.

Certain Tea Companies, whose head offices were in one building in the town of Jalpaiguri, had their gardens outside the Municipal limits, and the tea was sent direct from there to Calcutta and sold there. The sale proceeds used to be sent to a Bank in the town of Jalpaiguri, which placed the amounts to the credit of the respective companies after deducting advances, etc., and the net amounts were ultimately distributed as dividends amongst share-holders. The Jalpaiguri Municipality separately assessed each of the said companies with a personal tax at the maximum rate on the basis of the income received at the Jalpaiguri Bank from the sale proceeds of the tea. The assessment list, however, which was prepared under sec. 87 (d), omitted to show the income upon which the tax was imposed, as ought to have been shown according to the provisions of the section :

Held—That the “circumstances and property” of a person depended upon what he got or upon what he spent within the Municipality. In the present case though the original source of the income may be outside the limits of the Municipality, the entire income is brought to be spent and enjoyed within the Municipality. The term “circumstances” is equivalent to “means.” The proceeds of the sale of tea deposited in the Bank at Jalpaiguri, are “the circumstances and property” of the companies, i.e., their “means and property” within the Municipality, irrespective of questions as to whence the income accrues and so forth, and furnish a just measure of their liability under sec. 85 (a).

DEB NARAYAN P. (CHAIRMAN OF BARUIPUR MUNICIPALITY (3) and KAMESWAR PRÖSAD v. CHAIRMAN OF BHABUA MUNICIPALITY (1) and several other cases referred to.

The tax imposed was the tax upon persons contemplated by sec. 85 (a) and not the tax upon holdings prescribed by sec. 85 (b). Sec. 85 (a) cannot be limited in its application to a case where only one person occupies an entire holding. The companies undoubtedly were persons and they occupied holdings inasmuch as the possession of the holding by each of them was actual, as of right and not of a transient character. There was nothing in the section which saved them from liability because their occupation was joint.

Per BUCKLAND, J.—The tax was in the nature of a poll-tax leviable on persons, according to their “circumstances and property” within the Municipality.

CHAIRMAN OF CHITTAGONG MUNICIPALITY v. JOGESH (18) and CHAIRMAN OF CHAPRA MUNICIPALITY v. BASUDEO (19) and other cases referred to.

These were appeals against the decrees of Babu Asutosh Gupta, Officiating Subordinate Judge of Zillah Jalpaiguri, dated the 29th of May 1916, affirming the decrees of Babu Nishi Kanta Banerji, Munsif, 1st Court at that place, dated the 12th of June 1914.

The facts fully appear from the judgments.

'S. A. Nos. 2816 and 2817 of 1916.

MOOKERJEE, J.—These two appeals are directed against the decrees of the lower Appellate Court, made in affirmance of the decrees of the trial Court, in two suits instituted by the Plaintiffs-Respondents to contest the legality of the assessment of personal tax and latrine fee on them by the Commissioners of the Jalpaiguri Municipality. The Plaintiffs are two Companies, the Jalpaiguri Tea Co., and the Chuniajhora Tea Co., which have their registered Offices within the Municipal limits of the Town of Jalpaiguri. The Defendant Municipality in exercise of statutory powers (under the Bengal Municipal Act, 1884) assessed on the Plaintiffs at the last general assessment a personal tax of Rs. 84 each per annum under sec. 85 (a) and latrine fee of Rs. 7-3-0 each per annum under sec. 86 (f). These are the assessments challenged in the two litigations. Sec. 85 provides that the Commissioners may impose within the limits of the Municipality one or other of the following taxes :—

(a) a tax upon persons occupying holdings within the Municipality according to their circumstances and property within the Municipality :

Provided that the amount assessed upon any person in respect of the occupation of any holding shall not be more than eighty four rupees per annum or

(b) a rate on the annual value of holdings situated within the Municipality :

Provided that such rate shall not exceed seven and a half per centum on the annual value of such holdings, except within the Municipalities of Howrah, Patna, Dacca and Darjeeling, in which it shall not exceed ten per centum on such annual value ; and provided also that no rate shall be imposed on any holding in which the annual value is less than six rupees : Provided that both the taxes shall not be in force at the same time in the same ward.

Sec. 86 provides that the Commissioners may order that a fee for the cleansing of latrines be levied within the limits of the Municipality in addition to either of the taxes mentioned in sec. 85. *

The Plaintiffs attack the tax imposed under sec. 85 (a) as ultra vires on three grounds, namely, first, that the amount was assessed on the basis of their circumstances and property outside the Municipality ; secondly, that each of the joint occupants of a holding has been separately assessed at the maximum amount ; and, thirdly, that the statutory procedure for assessment has not been followed. The Plaintiffs challenge the latrine fee as ultra vires on the ground that each of two Companies who are joint occupiers of one holding has been separately assessed with the entire latrine fee payable. No further reference will be made to the legality of the latrine fee, as the question, in so far as it has been decided in favour of the Plaintiffs, has not been re-argued in this Court. We are consequently concerned now, solely with the matter of the legality of the tax imposed under sec. 85 (a) which has been pronounced ultra vires by the concurrent judgments of the Courts below.

The facts relevant for the determination of this question are not challenged in this Court and may be briefly recited. The Head Office of each of the Companies is situated within the Municipality. Their income is derived from tea gardens in the Western Dooars in the District of Jalpaiguri, beyond the Municipal jurisdiction of the town of Jalpaiguri. The tea is sent direct from the gardens to Calcutta and sold there. The sale proceeds are sent to the Jalpaiguri Banking and Trading Corporation which is the financing bank of the two Companies and its office in the town of Jalpaiguri. The amounts received by the Bank are placed to the credit of the respective Companies. The sums due on account of advances made by it as loan to the Companies are first deducted from the receipts. From the balance, the expenditure is met, and then dividends are declared in a general meeting of the shareholders. It is not disputed that the amount thus received by the Bank to the credit of each Company from outside the Municipal limits exceeds Rs. 30,000 a year, and at the sanctioned rate of one rupee for Rs. 160, would justify the levy of the maximum tax of Rs. 84. On these facts, the Municipality maintains that the income thus received by each Company at Jalpaiguri constitutes its circumstances and property within the Municipality for the purposes of sec. 85 (a), and that it is immaterial that the tea is grown in a garden outside the Municipal limits or is sold in a market of Calcutta. This contention has been overruled by both the Courts below. We have arrived at the conclusion that the view taken by the Subordinate Judge whose judgment is under appeal cannot be supported.

There has been much controversy as to the precise meaning of the expression "circumstances and property within the Municipality" used in sec. 85 (a), as is apparent from an examination of the decisions in Kameswar Prosad v. Chairman of Bhabua Municipality (1), Chairman of Giridih Municipality v. Srish Chandra (2), Deb Narayan v. Chairman of Baraipur Municipality (3), Chairman of Rajpur Municipality v. Nagendra Nath (4), Debendra Nath v. Chairman of Taki Municipality (5), Chairman of Joynagar Municipality v. Sailabala (6), Chairman of Behar Municipality v. Ramdeo Das (7) and Mahomed Ali Nawab v. Chairman of Behar Municipality (8). What constitutes the circumstances and property of a person within the Municipality must in a large measure depend upon the facts of the particular case. In some of the decisions just mentioned, the question arose whether the answer depended upon what the person got or on what he spent within the Municipality. Sometimes it has been urged that the measure of his liability was what he got and not what he spent within the Municipality; this contention was put forward by the assessee in Chairman of Giridih Municipality v. Srish Chandra (2) for the purpose of reduction of the assessment. On the other hand, in Debendra Nath v. Chairman of Taki Municipality (5) it was urged by the Municipality that the test was what he spent and not what he received, because this would have enabled the Municipality to increase the amount of assessment. It is not necessary for our present purpose to determine whether either of the two tests admits of universal application; here the same result is reached whichever test is applied. It is immaterial that the tea is grown in the interior of the District, beyond the Municipal limits, and is sold in a far distant market. The fundamental fact remains that though the original source of the income may be outside the local limits of the Municipality, the entire income is brought to be spent and enjoyed within the Municipality. As was observed by Sir Lawrence Jenkins, C. J., in Deb Narayan v. Chairman of Baruipur Municipality (3) the term "circumstances" in sec. 85 is equivalent to "means." There can be no room for doubt that the sale proceeds of the tea, when they are brought within the Municipal limits and are placed in the Bank to the credit of the Companies may, without undue strain on the language, be described as their "circumstances and property," that is, their "means and property" within the Municipality, and may consequently be taken to furnish a just measure of their liability to assessment under sec. 85 (a). In my opinion, the personal tax is not open to attack as ultra vires on the first ground mentioned.

We have next to consider two minor objections, namely, (a) that where two Tea Companies jointly occupy the same holding, each is not liable to be separately assessed under sec. 85 (a) and (b), that the assessment is vitiated, inasmuch as the list prepared under sec. 87 did not contain all the details enumerated in cl. (d). In my opinion, these objections are groundless.

As regards the former of these points it may be observed that the tax which has been imposed is that tax upon persons contemplated by sec. 85 (a) and not the tax upon holdings prescribed by sec. 85 (b). Sec. 85 (a) cannot plainly be limited in its application to a case where only one person occupies an entire holding. The language does not justify such a restricted interpretation; and there is no good reason why in places where the personal tax is in operation, several persons occupying the same holding should not each be subject to assessment, according to their respective circumstances and property within the Municipality. But, on behalf of the Plaintiffs it has been argued that such a comprehensive construction of sec. 85 (a) may cause hardship and may lead to results not reconcilable with the decisions in Ambika v. Satis (9) and Govinda v. Kailas (10). In the first of these cases it was held that persons living with a particular individual (the occupier of a holding) by reason of some connection with or relation to him, such as sons or servants, could not be deemed to be occupying the holding within the meaning of sec. 85 (a) and would not be separately assessable by reason of possessing separate incomes. In the second case, it was held that when a Naib of a Zamindar resided on a holding, solely to carry on the business of the Zamindar whose representative he was and who paid the rent therefore to the superior landlord, the Zamindar and not the Naib must be regarded as the occupier liable for payment of the tax. These decisions show that in concrete instances, and upon their special facts questions of nicety may arise, as to whether a person may be said to be in occupation of a holding within the meaning of sec. 85 (a). This, indeed, is clear from an analysis of the elements included in the complex notion of occupation, see the judgments of Mellor and Lush, JJ., in Queen v. St. Pancras Assessment Committee (11). To determiné, whether in a given set of circumstances a person may be said to be in occupation of a holding for purpose of assessment of rates and taxes, we may have to apply various tests; these need not be exhaustively enumerated, but some illustrations may be mentioned: taking possession as the primary element in occupation, the questions may be asked, is his possession actual, is it transient or temporary, has it a character of permanence, and is it as of right or merely by permissive license. Considerations akin to these may arise in a form of increased complexity where we have to deal with members of joint Mitakshara families. The case before us is, however, free from such serious difficulties. Here the possession of the holding by each of the companies is actual, is as of right, and is not of a transient character. Such possession, if it were exclusive, would undoubtedly constitute "occupying a holding" within the meaning of sec. 85 (a). The only fact which, it is urged, deprives the possession of the characteristics of occupation is that another company is in joint possession in a precisely similar manner. I am of opinion that this circumstance is not material and that each company may, in the eye of law, be regarded as occupying the holding. I am not unmindful that there are expressions in cases reported in the books to the effect that occupation in order to be rateable must be exclusive; Cory v. Bris- tow (12) and London and N. W. Railway Company v. Buckmaster (13). But as was pointed out by Lord Herschel, L. C., and Lord Davey in Holywell Union v. Halkyn District Mines Drainage Co. (14), the statement that occupation must be exclusive does not mean that nobody else has any right in the premises. The cases show that if a person has only a subordinate occupation, subject at all times to the control and regulation of another, then that person has not occupation in the strict sense for the purposes of rating, but the rateable occupation remains in the other, who has the right of regulation and control. Cases also frequently arise where two persons have rights over the same hereditament, the rights of each qualifying the rights of the other, and both persons are rateable; Lancashire Telephone Co. v. Manchester (15), All Church v. Hendon Union Assessment Committee (16) and R. v. St. Georges Union (17). Where the rate is imposed upon the land itself, it may well be that as land may, so to speak, be subject to different strata of occupation super-imposed one upon another, an occupation of one kind may still be regarded as exclusive although other persons may use the land in some other way, and may even use it in such a way as to render themselves also rateable as occupiers. On the other hand, if the tax is assessed on a person as occupier, it is plain that he does not cease to be occupier because other persons are jointly in occupation with him. The second objection to the legality of the assessment must consequently be overruled as untenable.

As regards the final objection, namely, that the assessment list was not prepared in accordance with the provisions of sec. 85 (d) which requires that the list shall include a description of the holding and of the property within the Municipality and the profession or business of the person assessed, we are informed that the assessment list did not show the income upon which the tax was assessed. In my opinion, this was a defect of form and did not invalidate the assessment; Chairman of Chittagong Municipality v. Jogesh Chandra Ray (18). There is clearly no foundation for the sweeping proposition that every defect in the assessment list prepared under sec. 87 destroys the jurisdiction of the Commissioners and renders the assessment ultra vires; and unless this is established, the Civil Court has no jurisdiction to interfere; Chairman of Chapra Municipality v. Basudeo (19) and Chairman of Rajpur Municipality v. Nagendra (4). I hold accordingly that the assessment under sec. 85 (a) is not liable to successful attack on any of the three grounds specified.

The result is that these two appeals are allowed and the suits are dismissed in so far as the Plaintiff seeks a declaration that the assessment under sec. 85 (a) was ultra vires. The decrees will stand in so far as they declare that the assessment of the latrine fee was ultra vires.

S. A. Nos. 690, 1019-1024 of 1919.

It is conceded that these appeals will be governed by the above judgment in S. A. Nos. 2816 and 2817 of 1916, and similar decrees will be drawn up in these cases.

In each case, the Plaintiff will pay costs in this Court and in the lower Appellate Court to the Defendant Municipality:

(19) I. L. R. 37 Cal. 374 (1910).

but all parties will pay their own costs in the Court of first instance.

BUCKLAND, J.—The facts of these cases are simple. The Respondent companies, with the exception of the Anjuman Tea Company, Limited, which has premises of its own, not shared with any other Company, jointly occupy at Jalpaiguri a building or buildings in which they have their registered offices.

Each of them has been assessed under sec. 85 (a) of the Bengal Municipal Act at the maximum rate allowed thereby. It is not disputed that if they are liable to assessment under that section the maximum rate is not excessive.

They filed suits to have it declared that the assessments were illegal and ultra vires and to have them set aside and have succeeded in both the lower Courts.

Three points have been argued on this appeal. The first is that the conclusion as to the companies having property within the Municipality is wrong in law upon the facts as found.

The second is that the companies who jointly occupy a holding cannot all be made liable.

The third is that the provisions of sec. 87 of the Act have not been observed.

As regards the first of these points it is not disputed that the procedure is for the tea, which of course is grown outside Municipal limits, to be sent to Calcutta for sale. The companies are financed by the Jalpaiguri Trading and Banking Co. When the tea has been sold the proceeds which are not paid to the companies or their agents, are credited in the companies' accounts with the Bank after being remitted to Jalpaiguri, where the balance after payment of the Bank's dues becomes available for dividends or for use in the concern as may be decided.

It is quite clear that these proceeds of the sale of tea, deposited in the Bank at

Jalpaiguri are property within the Municipality. These last four words involve a very simple question and do not necessitate any consideration of questions as to where the income accrues and so forth, such as are to be found in connection with questions of assessment for income tax. It has not been suggested that there are any other "circumstances" which have to be taken into account. This point therefore must be decided in favour of the Appellant.

The second point does not concern the Anjuman Tea Co., for reasons already given. The lower Courts have not in my opinion approached this question from the right point of view. They have held that where more than one company occupies one holding, the definition of which is "land held under one title or agreement and surrounded by one set of boundaries" and does not give rise to any difficulty, the Municipality is not entitled to divide the holding into several holdings and assess the companies accordingly. This has resulted in their not finding it necessary to deal with the point as now presented to us.

The companies undoubtedly are persons. They admittedly occupy holdings. There is nothing in the section which saves them from liability because the occupation is joint. The tax is in the nature of a poll-tax, leviable on persons. Not, however, merely as persons, but according to their circumstances and property within the Municipality. So far as a tax per holding is imposed, that is provided for by sec. 85 (b). Sec. 90 to which we were referred on behalf of the Respondent companies supports this view. It provides the procedure if the aggregate amount of rates assessed on any person in respect of his occupation of two or more holdings, exceeds Rs. 84 per annum. That is to say it deals with assessments under sec. 85 (a). Were the tax not a personal tax but a tax per holding, clearly this section would have no place in the Act as in that case there would be no reason for abatement as provided by this section. In the course of argument the position of a Hindu joint family under Mitakshara law was referred to, in connection with the liability of an infant son at birth, who would have a share in the holding. The point does not now arise for decision but that a joint occupier was incapable of earning income or did not own property independently of the other joint occupiers might well be a circumstance such as is contemplated by sec. 85 (a) for not assessing him to the full amount. This illustration of a possible application of the section does not affect the principle.

In my judgment the companies though joint occupiers of holdings are each of them liable to the tax under sec. 85 (a).

The third point is one of no substance. The complaint of the companies is that the assessment list contained no description of the property as required by sec. 87 (d). No proceedings were taken under sec. 113 which provides a remedy in such a case. Moreover the point which has been determined in favour of the Respondent companies by the lower Courts is inconsistent with the second point as there taken on behalf of the companies that the Municipality should not have divided the holding into several holdings for the purpose of assessment. I am not prepared to hold that the omission may invariably be negligible, but for the purposes of this appeal I do not think that the defect is fatal to the Appellant. Sec. 338 was referred to in the course of argument but that does not help the Appellant as it only refers to an assessment or rating of tax on property, whereas the tax in question is one on persons.

THE CHAIRMAN, JALPAIGURI MUNICIPALITY v. THE JALPAIGURI TEA CO., LD.

For these reasons I concur in the orders to be made in the several appeals.

No. 236 OF 1919.

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), sec. 67—Mortgagee's right to a decree for sale when the mortgage is an English mortgage—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), Or. XXXIV, r. 6—Mortgagee's right to a personal decree against the mortgagor when after the transfer and redemption clauses in the mortgage deed there is a covenant for payment of the mortgage debt—Appellate Court's power to pass a personal decree in the appellate stage.

Under the provisions of sec. 67 of the Transfer of Property Act, a decree for sale may be made in favour of the mortgagee when the mortgage is an English mortgage.

When the mortgagor covenants to transfer the hypothecated properties indefeasibly to the mortgagee, with the usual clause for redemption, and further covenants to pay the mortgage debt with interest to the mortgagee, his heirs, and assigns, the latter clause is a personal covenant to pay out of properties other than the hypothecated properties, as the latter clause would be entirely superfluous, if the parties had no intention that the mortgagor should be personally liable to pay to the mortgagee the money due to him. Therefore in such cases the mortgagee is entitled to a decree for sale as also to a personal decree against the mortgagor.

MOOKERJEE, J.—This is an appeal by the Plaintiff in a suit instituted on the 20th September 1918 to enforce a mortgage, dated the 26th July 1916, and repayable on the 21st July 1917. The Subordinate Judge has made a decree for foreclosure. The Plaintiff is not satisfied with this decree and contends that he is entitled to a decree for sale of the mortgaged properties as also to a personal decree against the mortgagors. We are of opinion that the contention of the Appellant is well-founded.

In view of the provisions of sec. 67 of the Transfer of Property Act, there can be no doubt that a decree for sale may be made in favour of the mortgagee when the mortgage is an English mortgage as in the present case. This has not been contested by the Respondent and for an obvious reason. If the hypothecated properties are brought to sale and the sale proceeds prove more than sufficient to satisfy the dues of the mortgagee, the surplus will remain for the benefit of the mortgagors. On the other hand, if the properties are valuable and are foreclosed, the mortgagors will be seriously prejudiced. The real contention between the parties is, whether the mortgagee is entitled to a personal decree. The answer depends upon the solution of the question, whether the mortgage contract contains a personal undertaking by the mortgagor to pay the mortgagee out of his personal estate or any estate other than the hypothecated properties. Reliance has been placed on behalf of the Respondent upon the decision of the Judicial Committee in Narottam Das v. Sheo Pargash Singh (1) which was applied by this Court in Bunseedhur Singh v. Sujat Ali (2); but the case before us is clearly distinguishable from the two cases mentioned. In the present case, there can be no doubt upon a consideration of all the clauses contained in the mortgage deed that there is a personal covenant to pay out of properties other than the hypothecated properties. The mortgagor covenants in the first place to transfer the hypothecated properties indefeasibly to the mortgagee. This is followed by the redemption clause which provides that if the mortgagors repay the dues on the 21st July 1917, the mortgagee would reconvey the hypothecated properties. Next comes the following clause; "And the said mortgagors do hereby, for their heirs, executors, administrators, representatives and assigns covenant with the said mortgagee his heirs and assigns that they the said mortgagors, their heirs, executors, administrators, representatives and assigns shall and will on the 21st day of July 1917 pay unto the said mortgagee, his heirs, executors, administrators, representatives or assigns, the said sum of Rs. 45,609-9-8 or any portion thereof then remaining due and will also pay interest for the same in the meantime and until repayment at the rate of 9 per cent per annum payable by equal yearly instalments and compound interest at the rate aforesaid, in case of default in payment of any one successive instalments of interest aforesaid and all taxes and impositions in respect of the premises duly conveyed and that they shall pay all costs and charges which the said mortgagee shall incur or be liable to pay in and about the recovery of the moneys hereunder or for the protection of the premises hereby conveyed or otherwise in relation to this security or for the realisation of the said sums or debts described in Schedule B as between attorney and client."

It is manifest that this clause would be entirely superfluous if the parties had no intention that the mortgagor should be personally liable to pay to the mortgagee the money due to him. In the two prior clauses the property had been transferred to the mortgagee and there was the corresponding provision for redemption; if repayment was made on the date fixed the property would be reconveyed; with regard to the subsequent clause, it is impossible to attribute to the parties any intention other than to make the mortgagors personally liable even though the property had been conveyed to the mortgagee. We are clearly of opinion that in the present case the mortgagee was entitled not merely to a decree for sale but also to a personal decree; such personal decree can be made at this stage as is clear from the decision of the Judicial Committee in Jeuna Bahu v. Parmeshwar Narayan Mahata (3).

The result is that this appeal is allowed and the decree of the Subordinate Judge modified. The decree will direct that the hypothecated properties will be sold for the realisation of the mortgage dues and that if the sale proceeds are not sufficient to satisfy the judgment-debt, there will be a personal decree for the balance against the mortgagor in terms of Or. XXXIV, r. 6, C. C. P. The mortgagors will have six months from this date for redemption. The Appellant is entitled to the costs of this appeal. We assess the hearing fee at ten gold mohurs.

Indian Contract Act (IX of 1872), sec. 201—Termination of agency—Sec. 209—After the principal's death, if agent is to be treated as a trustee—Indian Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Art. 89 or 120, applicability of, where an agent is sued for accounts after the principal's death.

C. acted as gomastha under J. until the latter's death in July 1912, and then he acted as agent under J.'s widow. The widow, more than three years after her husband's death, brought a suit against the agent for accounts from 1894 to 1915:

Held—That Art. 89 of the Limitation Act applied to the case and the claim for accounts for the period up to the death of J. was barred by limitation as under sec. 201 of the Contract Act the agency was terminated on J.'s death and as the suit was brought more than three years after J.'s death.

MADHU SUDAN SEN v. RAKHAL CHUNDRA

DAS BASAK (1) and NABIN CHANDRA BARUA v. CHANDRA MADHAB BARUA (2) followed.

That as C was not sued for any act done by him after the death of his late principal, which he might have done as a trustee, sec. 209 of the Contract Act or Art. 120 of the Limitation Act did not apply to the case.

This was an appeal preferred on the 14th July 1919 against a decree of the Subordinate Judge of Howrah (Babu Bejoy Gopal Chatterjee), dated 5th April 1919, modifying a decree of the Munsif of Howrah (Babu Hem Chandra Bose), dated 19th February 1918.

The facts of the case are as follows:—

One Golak Ghosh, died in 1299 B. S., leaving him surviving two daughters, named Kumarmani and Kshetramani, as heiresses to his properties. Kumarmani was married to one Ambika and died during the life-time of her sister Kshetramani leaving a son named Jotindra Kumar, the husband of the Plaintiff Sarashibala. Jotin died on 8th Sraban, 1319 B. S., (corresponding to 25th July 1912). The Defendant-Respondent Chuni Lal Ghosh was the son of Kshetramani. The Plaintiff's case was that Chuni lived at the house of his maternal grandfather; that Ambika acquired certain properties in the same village, but lived in Calcutta and finding it inconvenient to realise rents and profits, etc., himself, he appointed Chuni as an agent to manage his properties to realise rents, etc., and to render accounts to him. After the death of Jotin which occurred on 25th July 1912, Chuni continued in his office to collect rents; but when asked to render accounts and make over the collection papers he refused to do so; hence the Plaintiff instituted the present suit for accounts, from 1301 to 1321 B. S. The defence was that the properties belonged to his maternal grandfather, that his mother was the heiress and he was not the Plaintiff's agent, nor her husband's, and further that the claim was barred by the law of limitation. The Munsif decreed the suit. On appeal the learned Subordinate Judge held that the claim from 1301 to 1319 was barred by limitation under Art. 89 of the Limitation Act, but he upheld the other findings. From that decision the present second appeal was preferred to the High Court.

Dr. Sarat Chandra Bysak (with Babu Kshitish Chandra Chakravarti) for the Appellant.—The learned Subordinate Judge was wrong in holding that the claim from 1301 to 1319 B. S., i.e., up to the time of the death of the Plaintiff's husband was barred. Having regard to sec. 209 of the Contract Act the Defendant must be regarded as a trustee by implication; the section says that after the death of the principal the agent must take proper care of the properties and take the necessary steps for safe-guarding his interest, etc. Therefore by construction of law he ought to be treated as a trustee: and therefore Art. 120 applied.

Referred to Nabin Chandra Barua v. Chandra Madhab Barua (2). It was not necessary for counsel to argue the case of a trustee in Madhu Sudan Sen v. Rakhal Chundra Das Basak (1); this aspect of the case was not considered.

Babu Manmatha Nath Ganguly for the Respondent.—The learned Subordinate Judge was quite correct in holding that the claim was barred under Art. 89; the Defendant cannot be both an agent and a trustee; it was not the Plaintiff's case that he was a trustee.

Sec. 209 of the Contract Act does not contemplate such things; it was an amplification of sec. 189, it might have provided for certain other contingencies; the agent may and ought to do certain things after the death of the principal, and those acts may not be altogether void; besides there is no authority cited for the proposition that he is to be treated as a trustee. There is no case which lays down that on the death of the principal, Art. 89 would be applicable. Arts. 89 and 120 have been considered in a series of cases and it was held that in such cases Art. 89 applied. Referred to Madhu Sudan Sen v. Rakhal Chundra Das Basak (1), Mahendra Nath v. Jadu Nath (3), Jogendra Nath v. Deb Nath (4) and Nabin Chandra Barua v. Chandra Madhab Barua (2).

Babu Kshitish Chandra Chakravarti for the Appellant in reply.

This appeal arises out of a suit for accounts against an agent, and the question involved in the appeal is whether the claim for accounts from 1301 to 9 Srabon 1319 corresponding to 25th July 1912 is barred by limitation.

The Defendant acted as gomasta under the Plaintiff's husband Jotindra until his death which took place on the 25th July 1912. He then acted as the Plaintiff's agent. The suit having been brought more than three years after the death of Jotindra, the claim for accounts for the period before the death of Jotindra has been held to be barred under Art. 89 of the Limitation Act. As provided by sec. 201 of the Contract Act, an agency is terminated by either the principal or agent dying, and a suit against the agent for the period during which he acted as agent under the deceased must therefore be brought within three years of the death as laid down in Art. 89 of the Limitation Act. [See Madhu Sudan Sen v. Rakhal Chundra Das Basak (1) and Nabin Chandra Barua v. Chandra Madhab Barua (2)].

It is, however, contended on behalf of the Appellant that the case comes under sec. 209 of the Contract Act. That section lays down that when an agency is terminated by the principal dying or becoming of unsound mind, the agent is bound to take, on behalf of the representatives of his late principal, all reasonable steps for the protection and preservation of the interests entrusted to him. It is contended that the Defendant was in the position of a trustee so far as the interest of the deceased was concerned and that the suit for accounts against him would be in time if instituted within six years from the death of the Plaintiff's husband under Art. 120 of the Limitation Act.

There is however no question here of suing the Defendant for any act done by him after the death of his late principal, which he might have done as a trustee. The suit is for accounts on the ground that he was bound to render accounts to his late principal during his life-time, which he did not render. That would be a suit for accounts under Art. 89 of the Limitation Act.

We think the Court below is right in holding that the claim for the period prior to the death of Jotindra was barred by limitation.

NABAKISHORE
MANDAL and ors., Appellants.,

v.

UPENDRAKISHORE
MANDAL and anr.,
Respondents.

Hindu Law—Widow—Power to make permanent lease—Benefit of estate—Acquisition of tenant's rights—Accretion to husband's estate—Onus on Appellant to show error in judgment appealed from.

A permanent lease executed by a Hindu widow does not bind the reversioners unless legal necessity and benefit to the estate are proved. The mere fact that the rent and purchase price represent the fair market value does not of itself prove necessity.

Tenant rights acquired by a Hindu widow are, in the absence of proof that they were acquired out of the accumulated savings of her income and were dealt with as her separate property, accretions to her husband's estate and as such cannot be sold by her so as to give a title as against the reversioners.

The burden of showing that the judgment appealed from is wrong lies on the Appellant.

This was an appeal from a judgment and decree of the High Court of Bengal, dated the 5th August 1918, which modified a decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of the 24-Pergannahs, dated the 29th June 1915.

The litigation related to the estate of one Madhusudan who died in 1867 leaving a widow Prasanna Kumari entitled to two-thirds of the family properties.

On the 17th September 1869, Prasanna Kumari—in conjunction with Bamakali who was entitled to the other one-third—executed a permanent ijara in favour of her nephew Khetramohan Samanta. On the 15th August 1895, the ijara right of the lessees was sold by the Court in execution of a decree to the predecessor in title of the Appellants. On the 5th May 1895, Prasanna Kumari sold to the Appellants certain lands alleged to have been purchased out of her stridhan. Prasanna Kumari died in 1907 and in 1912 Nilkanta and Srikanta Mandal claiming to be reversioners of Madhusudan repudiated the alienations made by Prasanna Kumari and executed a permanent lease of all the properties of Madhusudan in favour of the Plaintiff-Respondent Upendrakishore Mandal. In 1913 the present suit was brought in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of the 24-Pergannahs. A portion of the original claim was compromised and the present appeal was confined to the claim of the Appellants to possess the properties in suit under the permanent ijara of 1869 and the deed of sale of 5th May 1895. The Plaintiff-Respondent contended that the alienations made by Prasanna Kumari were invalid as being neither beneficial to the estate nor justified by legal necessity. The lower Court held that the ijara of 1869 was bonâ fide and for legal necessity and beneficial to the estate in her hands and that the sale by Prasanna Kumari in 1895 was of property owned by her personally and he accordingly dismissed the suit. On appeal to the High Court, it was held that the Defendants had not discharged the onus of proving legal necessity or benefit to the estate and that the ijara was invalid as against the reversioners. With reference to the sale of 1895 the learned Judges held that it was not binding on the reversioners inasmuch as the property comprised therein was an accretion to, and formed part of, the estate of Madhusudan, and they modified the decree of the lower Court accordingly.

From this judgment the present appeal was brought before His Majesty in Council and was heard on November 17th and 18th, 1921.

Mr. B. Dubé for the Appellants.—The main question for decision is whether a Hindu widow is justified in making an alienation. Both Courts have found that the deceased had debts but the High Court say that I have not discharged the onus on me of proving legal necessity. The debts were paid off after the ijara and the ijara money must have been used in liquidating them. All that I have to show is that the ijara was a transaction which would have been undertaken by an ordinary prudent man in the management of his own property—Dayamani Debi v. Srinibash Kundu (1). A widow is only bound to act fairly to the expectant heirs, [Chimnaji Govind Godbole v. Dinkar Dhondev Godbole (2)].

[LORD CARSON.—How can the taking by her of a premium be an act fair to the expectant heirs?]

Both the recitals in the sale deed and the evidence generally tend to show that the sale of 1895 was of property belonging to the widow in her personal right.

Mr. DeGruyther, K. C. (with him Messrs. Parikh and Palat) for the Respondents.—In regard to the sale of 1895, certain tenants fell into arrears with their rent. The tenant right was purchased by Prasanna and Bama-kali. The tenant right and proprietary right would then both be in the same person. It is inconceivable that Prasanna intended to hold that tenant right quite separate from her proprietary right. The landlord's interest was part of the estate, and the tenant's right, so to speak, merged into it. What is purported to be conveyed by the sale deed is the proprietary right not merely the tenant right. He referred to:—Kula Chandra Chakravarti v. Bama Sundari Dasee (6).

Mr. B. Dubé replied.

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by

LORD BUCKMASTER.—A person who deals with a Hindu widow having a limited estate must be aware that he may be called upon to establish the facts which justify the transactions under which he claims. The Appellants in this case, who are the successors in title of one Rajkishore Mandal, find themselves in that position.

Rajkishore Mandal entered into two transactions, in the one case with two Hindu widows, and, in the other case, with one. These transactions are now impeached, and the burden of proving them valid lies on the Appellants. The first was a lease of the 17th September 1869, which was executed by two Hindu widows, Prasanna Kumari Dasi and Bama-kali Dasi. Their estate in the property arose in the following way. Prasanna was the widow of Madhusudan and Bama-kali was the widow of Harinarayan his brother. Harinarayan, when he died, was entitled to an undivided third share in properties held jointly, and Madhusudan, who died in 1867, was entitled to the remaining two-thirds. The case that is suggested is that this lease was required for the purpose of raising the money necessary for the payment of debts and the performance of the shradh in connection with Madhusudan. Now Madhusudan had died on the 13th August 1867, and certainly a period had not elapsed so long as to render it probable that the debts must have been paid; but, fortunately, the circumstances connected with his estate are not unknown, and there is information that enables their Lordships to recast what that position was. There is no doubt that before his death he had been borrowing money, sometimes in small sums and sometimes in large, but at the date of his death the debts are nowhere put as exceeding Rs. 15,000 or Rs. 16,000, which is probably a very liberal estimate. On the other hand, there is evidence, part of which was called on behalf of the Appellants themselves, to show that he had moveable property to the extent of Rs. 20,000. The petition of the widow showed that he had debts owing to him to the extent of Rs. 9,000, which, it may be, were included in the Rs. 20,000 of moveable property. In addition to that, there can be no doubt that part of the property of the testator had been disposed of shortly after his death, because, although the actual deed of sale is not produced, a deed of sale from the person who purported to have bought is, and that shows that property belonging to Madhusudan had in fact been disposed of. There therefore was not, upon the evidence as it stands, any reason whatever why the property included in the lease should have been used for the purpose of paying debts, and, indeed, if such necessities were the real justification for the transaction it is not probable that it would take the form of a permanent lease, but would have been an out-and-out sale. Their Lordships have no hesitation in saying that the proof of the necessity required to justify the lease of the 17th September 1869, is not forthcoming.

It is then said that this lease must have been a lease for the benefit of the estate, and that it can be supported upon that ground. It is not easy, and in this case it is not necessary, to define what is exactly the character of the transaction entered into by a Hindu widow, which can be supported on the ground that it enured for the benefit of the estate. It is sufficient to say that the mere fact that the rent reserved was a fair market rent, or the price obtained was a fair market price, cannot alone and in themselves be regarded as sufficient, and in the present case there is nothing more suggested.

In their Lordships' opinion the lease was not executed because it was for the benefit of the estate, nor because circumstances arose which rendered it necessary; the true explanation is that it was granted to a man, Khetramohan Samanta, who was the nephew of one of the widows, Prasanna, by whom he had been brought up and with whom he had lived for many years.

Their Lordships think there is no need to add anything further to the very careful and reasoned judgment of the High Court upon this point, with the criticisms contained in which they are in agreement.

There remains only the transaction which was entered into later on the 5th May 1895. That was entered into by the survivor of the two widows, Prasanna Kumari. The alleged justification for this depends on different considerations. It is said that the property sold had been acquired by the widow out of her stridhan, and that consequently she was quite free to deal with it as she thought best. Now there can, their Lordships think, be no doubt that whatever stridhan she possessed was due to the accumulated savings from the income of the property which she received from her husband's estate, and though it is true that when that property had been received it would be possible for her so to deal with it that it would remain her own, yet it must be traced and shown to have been so dealt with, and in this case there is no sufficient evidence of this having been done. Further, in this particular case it appears that part, at least, of the property had been purchased from the tenants of the estate itself. This does not mean that the inheritance had been so acquired, but that, owing it may be to difficulties which had arisen in connection with the occupiers, their tenant rights had been bought in part by the release of the arrears of rent and in part by a payment of cash; and having so acquired their interest, it was the property which they had formerly occupied which was sold under the kobala of the 5th May 1895. If that be the true transaction no question could arise about the right of the widow in connection with her stridhan, because the tenant rights so acquired would be an obvious accretion to the husband's property, which, if it were possible for her to segregate, would require some more unequivocal act for the purpose than anything to be found in this evidence. The evidence of the deed itself leads once more to the conclusion that not only was this property the husband's property, but that the widow knew it and that she was attempting to support the deed by a further effort to urge the necessities of debts and the costs of litigation as a justification. No other explanation can be offered of the fact that the deed contains recitals which, upon the hypothesis that the property was the widow's own, would have been quite unnecessary.

Their Lordships hold with regard to this also that the Appellants have failed to establish, what once more the burden lay on them to prove, that the widow was in a position to deal with this estate. This opinion differs from that formed by the learned Subordinate Judge, but is in agreement with that of the High Court at Fort William, from whose decree this appeal has been brought.

The only further observation that their Lordships desire to make is to call attention once more to the fact that in appeals the burden of showing that the judgment appealed from is wrong lies upon the Appellant. If all he can show is nicely balanced calculations which lead to the equal possibility of the judgment on either the one side or the other being right, he has not succeeded. It is not necessary to invoke that doctrine against the Appellants in the present instance because, for reasons that have already been stated, their Lordships think they have failed, but it is a matter which would be well for Appellants to bear in mind.

Their Lordships think that this appeal should be dismissed, and that the first Respondent who alone appeared should have his costs, and they will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly.

[APPEAL FROM OUDH.]

VISCOUNT HALDANE.	}	NARINDRA BHADUR
LORD ATKINSON.		SINGH, Appellant,
SIR JOHN EDGE.		v.
1921,		THE OUDH COM-
Heard, 9, May.		MERCIAL BANK,
Judgment,		LIMITED, FYZABAD,
9, May.		Respondent.

Mortgage suit—Mortgagor's estate taken over by Court of Wards after preliminary decree—Decree absolute for sale passed against Court of Wards representing the mortgagor—Release of estate thereafter—Release not shown to have had retrospective operation—Refusal of Government to produce correspondence leading to release—Decree absolute if bound mortgagor.

A preliminary decree was made in a suit for sale of mortgaged properties on 15th June 1915. On 21st July 1915, the Court of Wards declared the mortgagor a disqualified proprietor and assumed superintendence of his estate under United Provinces Act IV of 1912. On 21st February 1916, a decree absolute for sale was passed against the Court of Wards representing the mortgagor on the application of the mortgagee. On 12th September 1917, the estate of the mortgagor was released from the superintendence of the Court of Wards under an order of the Local Government which was made under the direction of the Central Government for reasons of State. The correspondence which passed between the two Governments upon the matter was not produced and its production could not be compelled by Court:

Held.—That prima facie, the Local Government acted within its powers in putting the Court of Wards in charge of the mortgagor's estate and it could not be presumed until the contrary was shown that the order of release operated retrospectively.

That the Court in India was therefore right in holding that the decree absolute bound the mortgagor.

This was an appeal from the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

Messrs. Upjohn, K. C. and J. M. Parikh for the Appellants.—On 31st October 1912, preliminary decree was passed for account and sale under the mortgage (under Or. 34, r. 4). This decree was subject of an appeal and was varied by order of 15th June 1915. This order of the appeal Court reduced the rate of interest. On 21st July 1915 declaration was made by Court of Wards under Court of Wards Act, United Provinces Act IV of 1912. On 17th January 1916 application was made under r. 5, Or. 34 by bank for decree absolute. This was not served on Appellant but was served on Court of Wards. On 26th February 1916 decree absolute was made. This decree is the subject of appeal. It was not served. There are two reasons why the decree was not good. First, the declaration of Court of Wards was entirely discharged by an order of the Supreme Government of India. We were not allowed to adduce evidence under sec. 11 of Act IV of 1912. Both Courts said it was irrelevant to consider the question. I say, I was bringing to the attention of the Court that the declaration of the Supreme Government had set aside the declaration of the Local Government. The exact date of the order of the Supreme Government is unknown to us, as we were not allowed to have this. It was done sometime before May 1915. The character of this is shewn by letter of 27th February 1915. Sec. 8, sub-sec. (1), cl. 4 of the Court of Wards Act, sub-para. (a) proviso, “no such declaration shall be made, etc.” The order is illegal and ultra vires because the amount payable is less than 1/3 of the income. Again the amount payable to the bank was still sub judice at the time of the order.

Sec. 11 means only this: If the Local Government makes an order, I cannot go to the Civil Courts, but must go to the superior Government.

[LORD HALDANE.—Let us see what the Courts say on this.]

[LORD ATKINSON.—You wish to shew that the Local Government had no jurisdiction. Prima facie they have, and you have to prove your proposition.]

Refers to sec. (12) d of the Act IV of 1912. There was mis-rejection of evidence. When the bank took out its decree against the Ward it was proceeding against the Ward. Until the Court of Wards is got rid of only the Court of Wards could sue or be sued.

Refers to difference in the language in sec. 55 and sec. 59, where the action is brought against a man who later becomes sui juris. There is no provision that no proceedings could be taken against him by sec. 55. My point is that proceedings taken should be against him and the Collector and not against either singly.

Messrs. DeGruyther and Dubé for the Respondents were not called on.

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by

VISCOUNT HALDANE.—The question on this appeal is whether the Respondents can enforce a decree made a good while ago in a suit for sale of certain mortgaged properties. The preliminary decree was made on the 15th June 1915, on appeal to the Court of the Judicial Commissioner from a decree, dated the 31st October 1912, of the Subordinate Judge of Lucknow. A few days later, on the 21st July 1915, the Court of Wards purported to declare the mortgagor a disqualified proprietor, and assumed superintendence of his estate under the United Provinces

NARINDRA BAHADUR SINGH v. THE OUDH COMMERCIAL BANK, LIMITED, FYZABAD.

Court of Wards Act (Act 4 of 1912). On a date which is variously stated, but appears to have been the 21st February 1916, the decree was made final. On the 14th June 1916, the mortgagor applied for the estate to be released and on the 12th September 1917, the estate was released from the superintendence of the Court of Wards under the direction of the Local Government, which had been set in motion and in some way directed to bring that about by the Central Government of India.

The Appellant is now resisting the execution of the decree, because, he says, the decree absolute is not binding on him, inasmuch as the Court of Wards had no jurisdiction to represent him in the proceedings.

The contention of the Respondents and the view taken by the Court below is that the action of the Court of Wards while its superintendence continued to exist was operative, and that it cannot be treated as having been a nullity; it was good until set aside by the Local Government, acting on the directions of the Central Government of India.

Their Lordships' attention has been drawn to certain sections of the United Provinces Court of Wards Act IV of 1912, to the effect that no declaration made by the Local Government under sec. 8 or by the Court of Wards under sec. 10 is to be questioned in any Civil Court, and there are analogous provisions to those providing for other cases which cover the kind of proceedings which are before their Lordships.

The material facts are these: As has been said, the preliminary decree for sale was obtained on the 31st October 1912, the mortgage having been executed a long time previously, in 1894. The decree stood in substance, although it was modified on appeal, and then there were rather complicated questions raised as to interest which were the subject of proceedings, and they are in form before their Lordships. But as to that the matter was disposed of in the course of the petition that was presented to the Board for a stay of execution. The result is that the question with regard to the interest is not now before their Lordships; the only question that is before them being whether the Court of Wards validly represented the Appellant in the substantial proceedings in regard to the decree itself.

On the 21st July 1915, the Court of Wards assumed superintendence of the estate of the Appellant. The Bank then applied for a decree absolute for sale against the Court of Wards, representing the Appellant, and it was made on the 21st February 1916. Then there were arrangements made between the Court of Wards and the Bank for the postponement of the execution of the terms of the decree with which their Lordships are not concerned, and there were certain questions as to whether there should be an appeal to the Privy Council from the decision in India as to the validity of the decree for sale, but the Court of Wards was unwilling to appeal to His Majesty in Council, and ultimately no appeal was brought. Then by an order of the Local Government made on the 16th May 1917, under the order of the Government of India, the estate of the Appellant was directed to be released upon payment by him of the sum of Rs. 57,000. On the 29th June 1917, the mortgagor paid that sum and on the 12th September 1917, his estate was, as already stated, released from the superintendence of the Court of Wards. On the 3rd July 1917, the Bank made a second application for the execution of the final decree of the 21st February 1916, by which it was declared that the mortgaged properties were to be sold, and the only question before their Lordships is whether the decree absolute is one that was binding on the Appellant, inasmuch as it was made against the Court of Wards, which it is now said had no jurisdiction to act. Their Lordships have not before them the terms of the order made by the Government of India, nor the correspondence which took place between the Central Government and the Local Government. For reasons of State, these documents are not produced and their production cannot be compelled, but there is no reason to infer that they would make the matter in any way different from what it prima facie appears to be. The Local Government put the Court of Wards in charge of the Appellant's estate and prima facie that was within their powers. It continued to be under their control until the Local Government released it. It is not to be presumed, unless it is clearly proved by the Appellant, that the release operated retrospectively, so as to invalidate all the multitudinous acts which must have been done while the Court of Wards was in superintendence. Their Lordships are, therefore, unable to take any view different from that taken by the Court below. In the Court below reference was made to the terms of the United Provinces Court of Wards Act of 1912, and particularly to secs. 8, 11 and 12, and to Chap. VII, which contains secs. 53 to 60, all of which point to what is a stringent provision that no one is to investigate the motives or review the discretion of the governing body which is being dealt with, or to question what it has done in the Courts.

Without proof that the proceedings of the Court of Wards were a nullity, their Lordships are not in a position to look into the matters which have been sought to be discussed before them. It is enough to say that their Lordships agree with the judgment of the Court below, and they will therefore humbly advise His Majesty that this appeal be dismissed with costs.

[ORDINARY ORIGINAL CIVIL JURISDICTION.]

SUIT No. 926 OF 1920.

RANKIN, J.
22, July.

•SANJIB CHANDRA
v.
SANTOSH KUMAR LARIRI
and ors.

Admissibility of an unregistered lease—Lease and agreement to lease—Indian Registration Act (XVI of 1908), secs. 2, 3, 17, 49—Agreement followed by possession, effect of—Doctrine of part performance, if applicable—Statute of Frauds—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), sec. 107—Suit for specific performance—Estoppel against a statute, if available.

An agreement to lease intended to operate as a present demise is a lease within the meaning of cl. (d) of sec. 17 of the Registration Act, 1908, and as such is inadmissible in evidence in a suit for specific performance of its terms, under sec. 49 of the Act, if it is not registered even though the tenant is in possession under the said agreement.

Cases of part performance under sec. 4 of the Statute of Frauds have no application to those arising under sec. 49 of the Registration Act, 1908, as the positions under the two Acts are quite different.

The Plaintiff who was in possession of certain premises under a previous tenancy expiring in December 1916, on the expiry of the said tenancy entered into negotiations for a further tenancy with the landlords, the Mondol Defendants, the terms of which were reduced into writing. This document, dated 15th January 1917, which was unregistered, purported to be in form a memorandum of agreement but was intended to operate as a present demise of the said premises to the Plaintiff for five years from 1st January 1917 and was held to be a lease within the meaning of cl. (d) of sec. 17 of the Registration Act, 1908. In May 1919 the Mondol Defendants sold the said premises to the Lahiri Defendants who had full notice of the unregistered instrument of 15th January 1917 and of its terms. On the 29th May 1919, the Plaintiff was given notice by the Lahiri Defendants to quit by the 30th June 1919 on the allegation that he was a monthly tenant. The Plaintiff brought a suit for the specific performance of the said agreement in terms of the unregistered document:

Held—That the document, dated 15th January 1917, was not admissible in evidence in a suit for specific performance, under sec. 49 of the Registration Act, as it was not registered.

Held, also—That as there was no other evidence before the Court of the terms of the said agreement, there could not be a decree for specific performance.

Per RANKIN, J.—“If I admit the document at all it seems to me that I would be receiving it as evidence of a transaction affecting the property. If upon its true construction it is meant to take effect as a present demise I cannot treat it as something else or as evidence of a transaction different from this in nature and so avoid the statute. My opinion is that against the prohibition of the statute no estoppel avails and that there is nothing in WALSH v. LONSDALE (1) or the cases under the Statute of Frauds to cover the Plaintiff in this case.”

Judgment of Rankin, J., dated the 22nd July 1921, passed in the exercise of the Ordinary Original Civil Jurisdiction.

The facts of the case will appear fully from the judgment.

Mr. Langford James (with him Mr. P. N. Chatterjee) for the Defendants.—A lease includes an agreement to lease by sec. 2 of the Registration Act and this is so when the document is intended to create a present interest in the land. Under sec. 49 such a document is inadmissible in a suit such as the present when specific performance of its terms is asked. No oral evidence of its terms is admissible as the terms were reduced into writing (see sec. 92, Evidence Act). If oral evidence is admitted, sec. 49 is rendered nugatory. The fact that Plaintiff is in possession does not alter the position. Doctrine of part performance has no application as there is no evidence before the Court as to what the agreement was. The Statute of Frauds does not render any evidence inadmissible but says that no judgment could be passed unless there is a written memorandum produced before judgment. In this case there is no other evidence of the terms of the agreement. Refers to cases cited in the judgment.

Mr. H. D. Bose (with him Mr. A. K. Ghose) for the Plaintiff.—In this case the Plaintiff is in possession and the Lahiri Defendants purchased this property with knowledge that the Plaintiff was in possession under an agreement to lease for five years, that being so the Defendants are bound by it and must recognise the Plaintiff's right to be in possession in terms of the agreement. Refers to Walsh v. Lonsdale (1) and other cases. Here the agreement is followed by possession and so any defect in title has been cured by possession which amounts to part performance. The document is admissible to prove that there was an agreement to lease on such and such terms, though it may not be admissible as a lease. In any event the Defendants are estopped from raising the question as to the existence of the agreement to lease inasmuch as they have admitted the agreement in their written statement.

RANKIN, J.—In July 1915 certain proprietors of a business called the "Minerva Library" were in occupation of a shop-room at 54, College Street, Calcutta and by them the Plaintiff was put in possession on his own behalf of the shop and business. It appears that these parties were holding under an unregistered instrument of tenancy which purported to demise the premises for five years ending in December 1916. However, the Plaintiff and his predecessors occupied the premises for the full period of five years, and at the expiry of this period Defendants Nos. 6 to 9, whom I will call the Mondol Defendants, were the landlords. The Plaintiff entered into negotiations with them for a further term and these negotiations resulted in a written instrument, dated 15th January 1917. This the Plaintiff tenders in evidence but it is objected to by Counsel for Defendants Nos. 1 to 5 (whom I will call the Lahiri Defendants) on the ground that it comes within sec. 17 of the Registration Act (XVI of 1908) and is hit by sec. 49. Having regard to the issues in the case and the state of the decisions it seemed to me advisable to reserve the question whether the document is admissible in evidence until the whole case was before me.

Apart from the document there is not on the evidence proof of the terms of the intended tenancy. It is not open to me apart from the document to find any prior or independent oral agreement in January 1917. In my opinion what took place between the Plaintiff and the Mondol Defendants at that time was merely a treaty or negotiation for a further tenancy the terms of which were intended to be reduced into writing and were concluded only in that form. The document tendered purports to be in form a memorandum of agreement but in its operative clauses it uses the language of a present demise. From its terms and from the admitted circumstances I think it clear that it was intended to operate as a present demise to the Plaintiff for five years from 1st January 1917 and I must hold it to be a lease within the meaning of cl. (d) of sec. 17 of the Registration Act. One of its provisions is this :—"And be it known hereby that if the lessors transfer this house by sale before this term of five years then a notice will have to be given to me six months beforehand and the salami money which is paid for a period of five years will have to be returned to me proportionately taking into consideration the number of months before the expiry of which the house is sold." Considerable time and space might be occupied in setting out the various possible meanings of this clause, but I do not think it can be contended nor was it contended before me, that it prevents the document from being a "lease" for a term exceeding one year. It is therefore within sec. 49 of the Act.

The Plaintiff continued his occupation thereunder without interference or dispute until May of 1919. In that month the Mondol Defendants sold the property to the Lahiri Defendants. The conveyance dated 28th May 1919 is in evidence. The Lahiri Defendants had full notice of the unregistered instrument of 15th January 1917 and of its terms. Neither they nor the Mondol Defendants gave any notice whatsoever to the Plaintiff prior to the transfer, but on the 28th May the Plaintiff was given notice (Ex. No. 1) that the transfer had been made, and on the next day, 29th May 1919, he was given notice to quit by the 30th June on the allegation that he was a monthly tenant (Ex. No. 2). It is clear to me that the advisers of both sets of Defendants were of opinion that the unregistered document of 15th January 1917 was one under which the Plaintiff could maintain no rights. Acting somewhat brutally upon this view they were faced with the question of returning part of the Rs. 500 which the Plaintiff had paid as salami. They solved the difficulty in this way, namely, Rs. 250 were paid by the Mondol Defendants to the Lahiri Defendants on an oral agreement between them that the latter would pay to the Plaintiff when he vacated the premises a proportion of the original salami commensurate with the period that should then remain unexpired of the five years. The Plaintiff has alleged that between the two sets of Defendants there was at this time an agreement, of which he was informed, that the Lahiri Defendants would allow him to remain for the rest of the five years. In my opinion there was no such agreement and the Plaintiff was not so informed. The Plaintiff alleges also that the Lahiri Defendants received the sum of Rs. 250 on the footing that the whole of it was to be paid by them to him independently of the date at which he might give up possession. Whether or not this be the Plaintiff's right as between himself and the Mondol Defendants on a true construction of the instrument of 15th January 1917, I am of opinion that no such arrangement was made between the two sets of Defendants at the time of the transfer.

On the 9th June 1919, the Plaintiff in reply to the notice to quit wrote referring to this stipulation for six months' notice and asking for even longer notice. On the same day the Lahiri Defendants brought a suit for ejectment against him in the Small Cause Court, which has no jurisdiction to decree specific performance. The suit was decided on 12th September 1919 and resulted in a decree for ejectment but the Plaintiff was given time by the decree until the 20th May 1920 to vacate the premises. The Plaintiff waited until the 12th May 1920 and then filed the present suit.

The first question I think is one which was not argued before me, namely, whether on a true construction of the clause which I have quoted from the document of 15th January 1917 the Plaintiff was entitled to specific performance on the 12th May 1920. The Plaintiff has not at any time been given a notice to vacate in six months. Nor was he given a notice of intention to sell six months before the sale. In September 1919 the Small Cause Court gave him more than six months in which to vacate but this was on the footing that he had no rights under the document of 15th January 1917. The Plaintiff on the 12th May 1920 had had more than six months' notice of the sale. I read the clause in question as one giving to the landlords a right to determine the tenancy. The exercise of such a right is a matter strictissimi juris and though the Lahiri Defendants have shown every disposition to be as inconsiderate to the Plaintiff as possible and have met with but small success I cannot see that the Plaintiff's tenancy, if he can claim a tenancy under the document, has been validly determined by virtue of the clause.

Coming therefore to the question whether the Plaintiff can get specific performance of the terms of the unregistered document, I find the matter complicated by the state of the pleadings. The Plaintiff pleads "a fresh agreement" without stating that it was in writing. The Lahiri Defendants instead of applying for particulars or saying that they do not admit the alleged agreement and will rely on sec. 49 of the Registration Act, plead that they admit that on 15th January 1917 the Plaintiff in writing entered into an agreement . . . purporting to create a demise for a period of five years . . . and so on, setting out their version of the document. On this Plaintiff's Counsel naturally contends that where there is admission there is no need of evidence and that cl. (c) of sec. 49 is thus got over. I cannot give effect to this contention, however, because in the circumstances and taking the written statement as a whole (see para. 6 thereof) the Plaintiff's advisers cannot at any time have been in doubt that these Defendants in this suit as in the Small Cause Court were relying upon the provisions of sec. 49. Although I do not regard them as fit objects of any special sympathy, I would, if necessary, rather allow them to amend than allow the rights of the parties to depend upon the comparative skill of their advisers in the lost art of pleading. In any case cl. (c) of sec. 49 would remain.

In the result therefore and to my regret I must endeavour to apply the Registration Act to this case and must decide whether it is any answer to the Plaintiff. The suit is one for specific performance of an agreement to lease which agreement is by secs. 3 and 17 (1) (d) brought within sec. 49. The special feature of the case is that unless the document is admissible in evidence the Plaintiff although he has been in possession cannot and does not pretend to prove the length of time for which he was to hold or the conditions upon which his tenancy was determinable.

Now the Legislature in the Registration Act has made such provision as it was minded to allow for preventing sec. 49 taking effect upon documents which merely create a right to obtain another document as the substantive transfer or upon agreements to lease which are not intended to confer an immediate interest. Moreover oral agreements for leases are allowed by the law. If any such concluded agreement, written or oral is not followed by any more formal or effective transfer, or is only followed by the execution of a document which comes within sec. 49, there would seem to be no difficulty in such statutory provisions as that contained in sec. 107 of the Transfer of Property Act in the way of applying the rule in Walsh v. Lonsdale (1) and Bibi Juwahir Kumari v. Chutterput Singh (2) by granting a decree for specific performance of the original agreement. But a serious difficulty arises if it is said that in cases where there has been entry and possession, the document hit by sec. 49 can be treated as a document of a nature not within the section, or as evidence of an oral agreement to the same effect as its terms. Walsh v. Lonsdale (1) has no bearing on this question. It merely decided that when a valid agreement is proved and possession is shown to have been taken under it and the agreement is such that specific performance can be given in the suit, then the parties will be treated exactly as though the title had been perfected from the commencement. But proper proof of a valid agreement is the very first condition. In the same way I cannot profess to see how the cases on part performance under sec. 4 of the Statute of Frauds—cases of which Maddison v. Alderson (3) is the chief—can have any application under sec. 49 of the Registration Act. The Statute of Frauds makes nothing inadmissible in evidence. It makes no oral agreement and no written agreement invalid as affecting property or otherwise. Its provision is that no party to a contract or sale of lands shall be charged upon—i.e., shall suffer judgment for the enforcement of—such contract unless either at the time of the contract or at any time before suit he or his agent has authenticated by signature a written statement of the terms. A casual letter to a third party written the day before suit may satisfy the statute. The object of the Statute of Frauds is neither revenue nor registration: it is simply to take away temptation to perjury in Courts of Justice by enacting what in a large sense may be called “evidentia rei.” Lord Selborne’s reasoning in Maddison v. Alderson (3) may be put in four propositions :—

(1) “The contract is not a nullity, there is nothing in the statute to estop any Court from enquiring into and taking notice of the truth of the facts.”

(2) “When the statute says that no action is to be brought to charge any person on a contract concerning land it has in view the simple case in which he is charged upon the contract only and not that in which there were equities resulting from res gestae subsequent to and arising out of the contract.”

(3) “So long as the connection of these res gestae with the alleged contract does not depend upon mere parol testimony, but is reasonably to be inferred from the res gestae themselves, justice seems to require some limitation of the scope of the statute.”

(4) “The acknowledged possession of a stranger in the land of another is not explicable, except on the supposition of an agreement, and has therefore constantly been received as evidence of an antecedent contract and as sufficient to authorise an enquiry into the terms.”

It may be argued that the second of these four propositions has some analogy to the meaning of the phrase “affecting the property”: but in all other respects the position under sec. 49 of the Registration is as different as possible from that under the Statute of Frauds.

In Kedarnath v. Poorasundari (4), Fletcher, J., held that notwithstanding secs. 3, 17 and 49 of the Registration Act an unregistered kabuliyat was admissible in evidence for the purpose of proving the oral agreement sought to be specifically enforced. In Sm. Baranashi Dassi v. Papat Velji Rajdoo (5), Woodroffe, J., put two questions and left both questions open. “It by no means follows that an agreement to lease, that is an obligation to transfer, is a transaction affecting the property. Nor is it necessary to determine whether an unregistered document void as a lease may be used to establish an agreement to lease." Shortly afterwards the Privy Council in Rani Hemanta Kumari Debi v. Midnapur Zemindari Co., Ltd. (6) had before them a suit for specific performance of an agreement to grant jote settlement of certain lands. Their Lordships expressly held as I understand the decision that if the agreement in that case had been intended as creating a present and immediate interest in the lands so as to be an "agreement to lease" within sec. 3 and therefore a "lease" within sec. 17 (1) (d), the document could not have been received in evidence. I collect from this case the further ruling that the same result would arise in the case of a document falling within sec. 17 (1) (b) unless it was saved by one or other of the exceptions mentioned in sub-sec. 2 of sec. 17.

In no one of the three cases already cited had the Plaintiffs been let into possession, but it seems to me that the Privy Council case would exactly cover the case before me unless the fact of the Plaintiff's entry and possession makes a difference in the application of cl. (c) of sec. 49.

What then is the effect of possession under a document hit by sec. 49? Is the document evidence in a suit for specific performance of its provisions? Is it evidence of an oral agreement leading up to it? Can a decree be made for specific performance of its terms?

In Shyam Kishore v. Umesh Chandra (7), it was said by Mookerjee, J. "It is well settled, as the result of a long series of decisions in this Court that when in pursuance of an agreement to transfer property the intended transferee has taken possession though the requisite legal documents had not been executed and registered, the position is the same as if the documents had been executed provided specific performance can be obtained between the parties to the agreement in the same Court and at the same time as the subsequent legal question falls to be determined These decisions are based on the well-known doctrine of equity enunciated in Walsh v. Lonsdale (1), that under certain circumstances, equity regards that as done which should have been done. The result attained in these cases was reached by the Judicial Committee in the case of Muhammad Musa v. Aghor Kumar (8) by the application of the doctrine of part performance enunciated in Maddison v. Alderson (3)." The passage cited and other passages in the judgment refer to an "agreement to transfer property" and there is some reference also (p. 77) to "the contract of sale" but I cannot find from the report, which consists only of the judgment, any facts other than these, that on 9th June 1906, the auction-purchaser executed a conveyance of the property to one of the mortgagors, that this conveyance was not registered as required by law, but the original owners (mortgagors) continued in occupation.

On examining the line of decisions referred to, I find that in Bibi Jawaher Kumari v. Chutterput Singh (2), there was no difficulty in proving the agreement. In 1910, Fletcher, J., followed this case and applied the rule in Walsh v. Lonsdale (1) to protect Defendants who were in possession under purely verbal agreements. To an objection that Defendants were in possession under verbal leases; that these were void by sec. 107 of the Transfer of Property Act; he replied that even so they might be specifically enforced as agreements on the analogy of English cases under 8 and 9 Vic., c. 106. In Sarat Chandra v. Shyam Chand (9), an agreement to recognise the Defendant as Plaintiff's tenant at a certain rent was made in writing by way of settling a suit about other property. It was included in the consent decree. Subsequently Plaintiff sued for the rent agreed on. The Court held that the decree must be ignored but that the petition of compromise though as a lease hit by cl. (d) of sec. 17 of the Registration Act was "admissible as indicating the existence of an oral agreement to grant the lease." In Puchha Lal v. Kunja Behari (10), the only facts appearing are that an owner of lands executed an unregistered kobala to A who paid the purchase money and entered into possession. The owner in the next year sold the lands to the Plaintiff who knew of the previous transaction. Jenkins, C. J., says: "So we have the position that the Defendant first party was in possession of the lands under a contract of sale" and the rule in Walsh v. Lonsdale (1) was applied.

In a recent case before the Privy Council [Port Canning and Land Improvement Co., Ltd. v. Sm. Katyani Debi (11)], the Plaintiff sued for enhancement of rent. The Defendants or their predecessors had gone into possession of the lands under a memorandum of agreement and on this account it was held by their Lordships that the document was a lease within sec. 17 (1) (d) of the Registration Act. The question in issue was the nature of the tenancy: whether the rent was liable to enhancement or not. The decision as to the document was: "Being unregistered, it is inadmissible in evidence and no effect can be given to it." The nature of the tenancy was decided on other evidence.

It is certainly true that no question of specific performance arose in that case or was discussed at any stage so far as it appears. But this decision makes it extraordinarily difficult to suppose that possession taken under a document can make any difference to its admissibility.

I come last to the case of Mahomed Musa v. Aghor Kumar Ganguli (8). In 1873 a suit to enforce a mortgage was compromised on the terms that the encumbered properties should be divided up between the mortgagor and two sets of mortgagees in a certain manner, the mortgagees releasing their security and the mortgagor agreeing to execute deeds of transfer to give effect to the arrangement. A razinama recording the arrangement was filed in Court but was not stamped or registered: the decree of the Court did not recite the document but simply "ordered that the suit be decided in pursuance of the razinama." No conveyance was made by the mortgagor as promised but by the law of India as it then stood no written conveyance was necessary. The parties for years acted on the compromise and dealt with their own shares thereunder as their own. Thirty or forty years afterwards representatives of the mortgagor sued the representatives of the mortgagees for redemption of the original mortgage. The Defendants were met with an objection that the razinama was not registered and the decree did not recite it. To this they replied that there was an oral agreement. There was on the record ample other evidence of the agreement which in the previous suit had been put before the Court in the form of the razinama. The question being whether an equity to redeem still remained with the Plaintiffs, their Lordships, having given more than one answer in the negative, go on to say that "even although the razinama and the decree taken together were considered to be defective or inchoate as elements making up a final and validly concluded agreement for the extinction of the equity of redemption the actings of the parties have been such as to supply all such defects." And their Lordships proceed to refer to Maddison v. Alderson (3) and to passages from Bell's commentaries which had been cited by Lord Selborne in that case. It was certainly argued that the razinama could not be put in evidence but this is nowhere upheld in the judgment. In any case the judgment is in no part embarrassed by the contingency that the document could not be looked at and there is no discussion of the 49th section of the Registration Act (VIII of 1871), I am inclined to think that the hypothesis as to the razinama and decree being defective or inchoate had reference to the fact that the arrangement itself provided expressly for a formal transfer and to the contention that a mortgage could not be modified or the equity effectively released save by a formal transfer. The passages from Bell's commentaries cited by Lord Selborne in Maddison v. Alderson (3) were again referred to by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in Lakshmi Venkayamma Rao v. Narasimha Appa Rao (12) in similar language. The meaning of "inchoate or incomplete" is made plainer. The words are used as descriptive of a case where a conditional offer made is not shown to have been accepted in terms but performance of the condition is to the knowledge of the party offering made upon the footing of his proposal.

In my opinion the decisions of the Judicial Committee in the case of Rani Hemanta Kumari Debi v. Midnapur Zemindari Co., Ltd. (6) and Port Canning and Land Improvement Co., Ltd. v. Sm. Katyani Debi (11) make it impossible for me to hold that the agreement in this case can be put in evidence or that its terms can be specifically enforced. If I admit the document at all it seems to me that I would be receiving it as evidence of a transaction affecting the property. If upon its true construction it is meant to take effect as a present demise I cannot treat it as something else or as evidence of a transaction different from this in nature and so avoid the statute. My opinion is that against the prohibition of the statute no estoppel avails and that there is nothing in Walsh v. Lonsdale (1) or the cases under the Statute of Frauds to cover the Plaintiff in this case.

As regards the claim for a refund of the balance of the salami, if I am right as to the agreement which was made between the two sets of Defendants in May 1919, I cannot see that the Plaintiff has any present right on the facts to recover against the Lahiri Defendants. As against the Mondol Defendants I think that the non-registration of the document will not stand in his way in an action for money had and received to his use. The question is whether he is entitled to Rs. 250 as the proportionate part due to him at the time the house was sold or whether on vacating the premises he will become entitled to a refund of a part proportionate to the time by which his occupation will fall short of five years. If the latter be the true position then at the date of this suit he had no cause of action. I think the language of the document of 15th January 1917 is in favour of the former alternative and as between the Plaintiff and the Mondol Defendants I see no reason why his precarious possession maintained in spite of the Lahiri Defendants and after the Mondol Defendants had ceased to be the landlords should be regarded as a reason why the Mondol Defendants can retain the salami which was apportionable from the beginning. I give judgment against the Mondol Defendants for Rs. 250 with one-third of the costs of suit. I must leave them to take such steps as they may be advised to adjust matters with the Lahiri Defendants. In the result the Lahiri Defendants are successful and I cannot say that there is sufficient judicial reason for refusing to them their costs.

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE ORDER

No. 236 of 1920.

MOOKERJEE, J. PANTON, J. 1921, 25, July.	{	CHOWDHURY AJODHYA NATH PAHARY, Decree- holder, Appellant, v. CHOWDHURY SRINATH CHANDRA PAHARY, Judgment-debtor, Respondent.

Limitation—Execution, application for—Objection on the ground that decree had been satisfied out of Court—Objection and application both dismissed for default Subsequent application for execution, if in continuation of previous application

A decree-holder after applying for execution filed processes and process-fees as directed by the Court. Thereafter the judgment-debtor objected to the issue of execution on the allegation that the decree had been satisfied out of Court. On a subsequent date on which both the application for execution and the objection had been fixed for hearing, the latter case was dismissed for default, and the Court recorded the further order: "the decree-holder has no objection to his case being dismissed provided he gets his costs. The execution case is dismissed for default. The decree-holder will get his costs":

Held—That the order dismissing the execution case must be treated as equivalent to an order for striking off the case or removing it from the file for the convenience of the Court; and a subsequent application for execution made more than three years after the date of the first application was therefore to be regarded as one in continuation or revival of the previous application.

This was an appeal against the order of M. Yusuf, Esq., District Judge of Zillah Midnapore, dated the 31st of March 1920, affirming the order of Babu Bistupada Ray, Munsif, 3rd. Court at Contai, dated the 16th of January 1920.

Appellant applied for the execution of a decree, dated the 26th June 1915, on the 24th June 1916. On the 5th August 1916 the Judgment-debtor Respondent objected to the issue of execution on the allegation that the decree had been satisfied out of Court. The objection case was dismissed for default on 9th December 1916 and on the same day the Court recorded the following order in respect of the execution case: "The pleader for the decree-holder has no objection to his case being dismissed provided he gets his costs. The execution case is dismissed for default. The decree-holder will get his costs." The present application for execution by Appellant was made on 27th November 1919. Both the lower Courts were of opinion that the present application was barred.

Babus Karunamoy Bose and Bimala Charan Deb for the Appellant.

Babu Phanindra Nath Das for the Respondent.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

This is an appeal by the decree-holder against an order of dismissal made on an application for execution of a decree. The decree was made by consent of parties on the 26th June 1915. The first application for execution was made on the 24th June 1916. Thereupon a writ of attachment was issued. The writ was returned unserved and on the 4th August 1916 the Court directed a fresh attachment to issue in the following terms: "The decree-holder is to file process and process-fees within five days." This order was carried out. But on the very next day, the judgment-debtor filed a petition under Or. 21, r. 2 of the Code of Civil Procedure to the effect that the decree had been satisfied out of Court and consequently no execution could issue on the basis thereof. This objection was numbered as a separate case. The two cases were adjourned from time to time and on the 9th December 1916 the objection case as well as the execution case came up for consideration. The objector applied for further time but the Court refused adjournment on the ground that the case was already very old. The pleader for the objector thereupon stated that he had no further instructions. The objection case was consequently dismissed for default. We find thereafter the following entry in the order sheet. "The pleader for the decree-holder has no objection to his case being dismissed provided he gets his costs. The execution case is dismissed for default. The decree-holder will get his costs." Subsequently, on the 27th November 1919 the present application was made. The judgment-debtor objected that the application was barred by limitation inasmuch as it had been presented more than three years after the 24th June 1916, when the previous application for execution had been made. We are of opinion that this contention should have been treated as unsustainable. It is plain that the execution proceedings which had been initiated on the 24th June 1916 had been suspended by reason of the objection by the judgment-debtor. During the period the objection remained under consideration of the Court, execution could not obviously proceed. As soon as the objection was abandoned on the 9th December 1916, it became the duty of the Court to proceed with the application for execution. The decree-holder had done everything that he was required to do to enable the Court to proceed with the case. He had filed processes and had paid process-fees as directed on the 4th August 1916. The order for dismissal made on the 9th December 1916 must accordingly be treated as equivalent to an order for striking off the case or removing it from the file for the convenience of the Court. these circumstances, the principle applicable is that stated in the case of Madhabmani Dasi v. Lambert (6). "An application for execution of a decree may be treated as one in continuation or revival of a previous application, similar in scope and character, the consideration of which has been interrupted by the intervention of objection and claim subsequently proved to be groundless or has been suspended by reason of an injunction or like obstruction." In support of this view, reliance may be placed on the decision of the Judicial Committee in Quamaruddin Ahmed v. Jawahir Lal (7), which has been recently applied in Rameshwar Singh v. Homeswar Singh (8).

We are of opinion, therefore that this appeal must be allowed. The order of the lower Appellate Court is set aside and the case is sent back to the Court of first instance in order that the execution may proceed.

The decree-holder will get his costs throughout. We assess the hearing-fee in this Court at one gold mohur.

process—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Arts. 61, 99 120—Time from which limitation runs.

The Plaintiff and the Defendants were owners of five different jotes. In execution of one of the decrees obtained by the landlord in respect of the five jotes one of the jotes was put up to sale and purchased by the Plaintiff. The landlord took out the amount of his dues in respect of that jote out of the sale proceeds and in respect of the other jotes he attached the balance and ultimately withdrew it. The sale of the first jote was set aside, but the Plaintiff failed to obtain restitution of the sale proceeds. The Plaintiff thereupon sued the Defendants for contribution :

Held—That the joint liability of the Plaintiff and the Defendants having been discharged by the money of the former there was no doubt that the Defendants obtained the benefit of the same.

That although under sec. 173 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, the Plaintiff being one of the judgment-debtors could not purchase at the sale, the Plaintiff and the Defendant having bid for the jote and the Plaintiff's bid having been accepted the purchase by the Plaintiff was not void but only voidable. In any case after the sale was set aside the money deposited became the money of the Plaintiff alone and should be treated as having been lawfully paid or appropriated in payment of the decree for rent.

That so far as the right of contribution against co-sharers is concerned it does not matter whether the money is actually handed over by the party seeking contribution or is realised from him by coercive process by the creditor. In either case the right to contribution arises from the fact that one of the co-sharers has paid in excess of his share and the joint liability of all the co-sharers has been discharged.

That the suit was not barred under

GOPENATH MOONSHI v. CHANDRANATH MOONSHI.

Arts. 61 or 99 of the Limitation Act, having been brought within three years of the setting aside of the sale or under Art. 120, having been brought within six years of the date of payment.

These were appeals preferred on the 21st August 1917, against a decree of Babu Bepin Chandra Chatterjee, Subordinate Judge of Zillah Jessore, dated the 20th June 1917, reversing a decree of Babu Banku Behary Chatterji, Munsif at Magura, dated the 30th June 1916.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

Babus Ram Chandra Majumdar and Bhudhar Haldar for the Appellant.

Dr. D. N. Mitra and Babu Satish Chandra Singh for the Respondent.

These two appeals arise out of two suits for contribution. The Plaintiff and the Defendants are owners of five different jotes. The landlord obtained decrees for rent in respect of these five jotes. In execution of one of these decrees one of the jotes was put up to sale on the 29th March 1909 and was purchased ostensibly by Defendant No. 4 but really for the Plaintiff for Rs. 1,600. The sale was confirmed on the 7th November 1909. On the 2nd March 1911 the landlord took out Rs. 564-14 as. 9 pies out of the sale proceeds in satisfaction of his decree for rent in respect of that jote. In execution of the decrees obtained by the landlord in respect of the four other jotes, the landlord attached the balance of the sale proceeds and withdrew a sum of Rs. 963-3 as. 9 pies on the 24th February 1912. The sale of the first jote, however, was set aside on the 9th December 1912. The Plaintiff, thereupon, attempted to get a refund of the amount realised, from the landlord but failed, as he was one of the judgment-debtors. The Plaintiff then brought these suits for contribution against Defendants Nos. 1 and 2. No relief was claimed against Defendant No. 3 as he agreed to pay his share amicably to the Plaintiff. The Court of first instance found that the Defendants were benefited by the payments or rather by the satisfaction of the decrees, and gave a decree to the Plaintiff. That decree was set aside by the learned Subordinate Judge on appeal; and the Plaintiff has appealed to this Court.

Now the Plaintiff and the Defendants were jointly made liable under the decrees for rent and that joint liability having been discharged with the money of the Plaintiff, there is no doubt that the Defendants have obtained the benefit of the same. The learned Subordinate Judge held against the Plaintiff on the ground that the payment of Rs. 1,600 into Court was not lawful and that the character of the payment was not altered by the subsequent setting aside of the sale. This has reference to the fact that the Plaintiff, being one of the judgment-debtors, could not, having regard to the provisions of sec. 173 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, purchase at the sale. It appears, however, that the Plaintiff as well as the Defendant bid for the jote and that it was the Plaintiff's bid that was accepted. The purchase by the Plaintiff was not void, but was only voidable. However that may be, after the sale was set aside, the money deposited became the money of the Plaintiff alone, and we do not see why after the sale was set aside the money should not be treated as having been lawfully paid, or appropriated in payment of the decrees for rent.

It is contended on behalf of the Respondents that it is not in every case that a man has benefited by the money of another, that an obligation to repay that money arises. Reference was made to the cases of Ram Tuhai Sing v. Bisheswar Lal Sahoo (1), The Ruabon Steamship Company, Ltd. v. The London Assurance (2) and Abdul Wahid Khan v. Shaluka Bibi (3). These cases, however, are distinguishable. The first case was not a case between co-sharers, nor a suit for contribution. There was no obligation to pay any joint debt in that case. In the case of Ruabon Steamship Company, Ltd. v. The London Assurance (2), the Lord Chancellor referring to the observations made by the learned Judges in the cases referred to in the judgment, observed that "the liability of each of the persons held to be bound to contribute is assumed to exist either by contract or by some obligation binding them all to equality of payment or sacrifice in respect of that common obligation; but this is the first time in which it has been sought to advance that principle where there is nothing in common between the two persons, except that one person has taken advantage of something that another person has done, there being no contract between them, there being no obligation by which each of them is bound and the duty to contribute is alleged to arise only on some general principle of justice that a man ought not to get an advantage unless he pays for it." The Lord Chancellor referring to the case of Dering v. Lord Winchelsea (4) stated that the principle established in that case was universal, and that the right and duty of contribution was founded on doctrines of equity and that it did not depend upon contract. His Lordship further said "If several persons are indebted and one makes the payment, the creditor is bound in conscience, if not by contract, to give to the party paying the debt all his remedies against the other debtors. So in the case of land descending to co-parceners, subject to a debt, if the creditor proceeds against one of the co-parceners, the others must contribute."

In the case of Abdul Wahid Khan v. Shaluka Bibi (3), there was no joint liability. The Defendant in that case had spent money in prosecuting certain suits for his own benefit, and without any authority express or implied from the Plaintiffs, and it was held that the fact that the result was also a benefit to the Plaintiff did not create any implied contract or give the Defendant any equity to be paid a share of the costs by the Plaintiffs.

It is also contended on behalf of the Respondents that at the time the money was paid there could not be any question of intention of benefiting any body by paying money "without intending to do so gratuitously." This is true, because at the time when Rs. 1,600 was paid into Court, it was paid as purchase money, and so long as the sale was not set aside the property purchased remained in the Plaintiff, and the money which was taken by the decree-holder therefore was the money which belonged to all the co-sharers, and it was only after the sale was set aside that the money became the Plaintiff's money and then only the question of any intention of payment not gratuitously would arise. The payment must, therefore, be taken to have been made on behalf of the Plaintiff on the date on which the sale was set aside.

It is further contended on behalf of the Respondents that as a matter of fact the money was not paid by the Plaintiff as it was realised in execution by the creditor. We do not think that that makes any difference in principle. So far as the right of contribution against the co-sharers is concerned, it does not matter whether the money is actually handed over by the party seeking contribution, or is realised from him by coercive process by the creditor. In either case, the right to contribution arises from the fact that one of the co-owners has paid in excess of his share, and the joint liability of all the co-sharers has been discharged. We may refer in this connection to the cases of Matangini Debya v. Prasannamayee Debya (5), Rajah of Vizianagram v. Rajah of Setracharlu (6), Ibn Hasan v. Brijbhukan (7) and Dhakeshwar Prasad v. Harihar Prasad (8).

We now come to the question of limitation. Art. 61 of the Indian Limitation Act lays down a period of three years (in a suit for money payable to the Plaintiff for money paid for the Defendant) from the date when the money is paid, and under Art. 99 the period of three years commences from the date of the payment in excess of the Plaintiff's own share. Where the money is realised in execution and there is no actual payment of the money by the party, it has been doubted whether it is a payment within the meaning of Art. 61 or Art. 99. See Fuckorudin Mahamed Ahsan v. Mahima Chunder (9); see also Marrivada v. Veerapurain (10), although in Rajah of Vizianagram v. Rajah Setracharlu (6), a different view has been taken. If Art. 61 or Art. 99 applies then the cause of action for the suit must be taken to have arisen when the sale was set aside. In the case of Matangini Debya v. Prasannamayee Debya (5), Maclean, C. J., observed :

"When a putni is purchased under circumstances such as the present, namely, by one of the defaulters, there is nothing in the regulation to make the sale absolutely void, though it is voidable, but, until it is avoided, the property would remain in the purchaser. If it be held that the purchase in this case was voidable and was not avoided until the 12th June 1899, seeing that, on the 5th September 1898, when the payment was made, the Plaintiff was the owner of the putni, the payment must be regarded as made on his own account, and not for the co-putnidars. In this view the statute would not begin to run until after the 12th June 1899. The Plaintiff would have no cause of action against the Defendants until the 12th June 1899. To revert, for a moment, to Art. 61, it cannot be said that there was any money paid for the Defendants until the sale had been set aside. Up to that time, the money must be taken as paid by the Plaintiff on his own account." But even if the cause of action is taken to have arisen on the date of actual payment to the decree-holder, the payment of Rs. 963 odd was made within three years of the suit and so far as that amount is concerned it is not barred by limitation. It is otherwise with the sum of Rs. 564 which was paid more than three years before the institution of the suit. We are of opinion, however, that if Art. 99 or Art. 61 applies, then the cause of action must be taken to have arisen when the sale was set aside. If neither of the two articles applies, then Art. 120 would apply. Art. 120 gives six years' period within which the suit is to be brought. Here both the payments were made within six years of the suit. Under the circumstances we think, that the suit is not barred by limitation.

There are, however, certain issues in connection with the third and fourth questions set out in the judgment of the lower 'Appellate' Court which have not been gone into. They must be gone into before the cases are disposed of.

The result is that the decrees of the lower Appellate Court are set aside and the cases are remanded to that Court for disposal after the decision of the two points referred to above.

Costs will abide the result.

[CRIMINAL REVISIONAL JURISDICTION.]

REV. No. 848 OF 1921.

NEWBOULD, J.	}	HAJARI SONAR,
GHOSE, J.		Accused, Petitioner,
1921,		v.
8, November.		THE KING-EMPEROR.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), secs. 237, 227—Charge under sec. 457, I. P. C., of house-breaking by night with the object of committing theft, conviction under sec. 456, for house-breaking by night with the object of carrying on intrigue with the complainant's wife—Propriety of conviction, without amendment of charge—Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), secs. 456, 457.

The accused was tried on a charge under sec. 457 of the Penal Code of breaking open at night the door of the complainant's house with the object of committing theft and was convicted under sec. 456 for having committed the offence of house-breaking by night with the object of carrying on an intrigue with the complainant's wife:

Held—That though it cannot be laid down as a general rule that in all cases a prosecution for house-trespass with the alleged object of theft must fail if that object is not proved, when a charge has been definitely framed in which theft is alleged as the object the accused cannot be convicted of house-trespass with some other object without an amendment of the original charge unless the Court is satisfied that he has not been in any way prejudiced in his defence by the omission to amend the charge.

That in the circumstances of the case the conviction was liable to be set aside.

This was a Rule granted against an order of the Honorary Magistrate of Serampore, dated 16th June 1921, convicting the Petitioner under sec. 456, I. P. C., and sentencing him to undergo three months' rigorous imprisonment and to pay a fine of Rs. 25, an appeal from which order was dismissed by the Sessions Judge of Hughly, dated 31st August 1921.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

Babu Narendra Krishna Bose for the Petitioner.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

The accused Petitioner was tried on a charge of breaking open the khirki door of one Ram Lakhan Sonar to commit theft of property to the value of Rs. 30-4-0 when he was caught red-handed and thereby of committing an offence punishable under sec. 457, I. P. C. The finding of the trying magistrate and also of the Appellate Court is that the prosecution has failed to establish that theft was the object with which the accused entered into the complainant's house. They have both held that he came to complainant's house to carry on an intrigue with his wife and following the decisions of this Court in the cases of Kailash Chandra Chakrabarti v. Queen-Empress (1), Balmakandram v. Ghansamram (2) and Premnand Saha v. Brindaban Chung (3), they have convicted the accused of the offence punishable under sec. 456, I. P. C.

Though it cannot be laid down as a general rule that in all cases a prosecution for house-trespass with the alleged object of theft must fail if that object is not proved, we think, as was held by a Bench of this Court in the cases of Jharu Sheikh v. King-Emperor (4) and Mohomed Hossain v. Emperor (5), that when a charge has been definitely framed in which theft is alleged the accused cannot be convicted of house trespass with some other object without an amendment of the original charge unless the Court is satisfied that he has not been in any way prejudiced in his defence by the omission to amend the charge. In the present case had the Petitioner been called upon to answer the charge of the offence of which he has been convicted he might have been able to establish his innocence. If an amended charge had been framed an important point which would have to be decided would be whether the accused came to the complainant's house at the invitation of his wife or not. That is a point to which no enquiry appears to have been directed and there is no distinct finding on this point by either of the Courts.

We therefore hold that the Rule succeeds on the first ground on which it was issued and we accordingly make this Rule absolute. We do not think it necessary to direct a retrial and the accused is accordingly acquitted. His fine, if paid, will be refunded and the bail-bond discharged.

[APPEAL FROM BENGAL.]

CHANDRA KANTA DAS, since deceased (now represented by Manindra Nath Das
(and ors.), Appellants,
v.
PARASULLAH MULLICK, Respondent.

Indian Contract Act (I of 1872), sec. 27—Rival businesses in plying ferry boats—Sale of good-will of one to the owner of the other—Agreement not to start similar business by vendor, if in restraint of trade.

The Respondent plied passenger ferry boats on a river. The Appellant started a similar business and gained an advantage over the Respondent by securing better landing places and negotiating facilities for collecting dues. In 1910, the Appellant purported to sell to the Respondent the goodwill of his trade in plying the ferry boats and every description of interest and ownership which the Appellant had acquired in the several landing places as well as settlements obtained for the collection of tolls. By a separate document the Appellant undertook to close the business of plying the particular ferry boats and that if he ever carried on the business again he would return the whole amount of consideration:

Held—That the transaction amounted to a sale of a real goodwill within the meaning put on the expression in CHURTON v. DOUGLAS (1), TREGO v. HUNT (2) and INLAND REVENUE COMMISSIONERS v. MULLER (3) and as used in the same sense in sec. 27 of the Contract Act.

This was an appeal against a decree, dated the 31st January 1917 of the Calcutta High Court, varying a decree, dated the 27th January 1912, of the Subordinate Judge at Khulna.

The facts of the case will sufficiently appear from the judgment.

Mr. Meyer, K. C. (with Mr. H. N. Sen) for the Appellants stated the facts.

[LORD ATKINSON.—Referred to Bishop v. Kitchin (4).]

If there is a sale of good-will proviso to sec. 27 of the Contract Act applies.

Trego v. Hunt (2) and Inland Revenue Commissioners v. Muller (3).

He had the legal right to occupy the landing stages and use them.

It cannot be said that there is no ad idem as both the parties have signed the agreement.

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by

VISCOUNT HALDANE.—The question in this appeal arises in a suit by which it was sought to have decided that the Plaintiff who is the Appellant, was entitled to recover a sum of Rs. 5,400, with interest amounting to Rs. 67-8, as due to him under certain agreements. The defence was a charge of fraud in obtaining the agreements, and as a separate defence, that the main agreement was invalid as being in restraint of trade. The learned Additional Subordinate Judge of Khulna in Bengal, who tried the case, decided it in favour of the Appellant for the modified amount of Rs. 5,280, the difference being given on the footing that the Respondent (being the Defendant) was entitled to a small amount for compensation, on the ground of partial failure of consideration. As to this difference, no substantial controversy has been raised, and their Lordships do not think that any question is before them for decision in relation to it.

(2) [1896] A. C. 7.

(3) [1901] A. C. 217.

(4) 38 L. J. Q. B. 20 (1868).

When the case went on appeal to the High Court at Fort William, the decree of the Subordinate Judge was reversed. Chatterjee, J., held that the parties were never ad idem, the Respondent having been misled by the Appellant, and further that there was no real goodwill to assign, such as was the basis of the agreement on the part of the Appellant. But he thought that as the Respondent had entered into possession on the footing of the agreement, although inoperative, he ought to make compensation to the Appellant to the extent of Rs. 1,000. Walmsley, J., the other member of the Court of Appeal, was of opinion that there was nothing fraudulent to render the agreement inoperative on that ground. But he held that it was void as contravening sec. 27 of the Indian Contract Act, which makes every agreement by which anyone is restrained from exercising a lawful profession, trade or business, void. The trial Judge had been of opinion that the case came within the exception to the section which provides that it is not to apply where there is a sale of the good-will, but Walmsley, J., held otherwise, on the ground that there was no real goodwill.

The appeal comes before their Lordships ex parte, and they have scanned the case presented for the Appellant with some closeness. But, particularly having regard to the fact that the learned Judge who tried the suit found that there was nothing to establish fraud on the part of the Appellant in obtaining the agreement, and that this opinion met with the concurrence of Walmsley, J., and also because of the character of the evidence itself, they are of opinion that the agreement was, apart from the point of law arising under the Contract Act, a valid agreement.

All that it is necessary to observe is that there was a dispute between the Appellant and the Respondent. Each of them had passenger ferry boats on a river. The Respondent had entered on this business first. But he had not been prosperous, and the Appellant gained an advantage over him by securing better landing-places and negotiating facilities for collecting dues. In 1910 the parties, who had had controversies, entered into agreements for putting an end to them. Under one of these, called the Kistibandi bond, executed by the Appellant in favour of the Respondent, the former purported to sell to the latter the goodwill of his trade in plying the ferry boats, and every description of interest and ownership which the Appellant had acquired in several river landing-places for plying the boats, as well as the settlements obtained for the collection of tolls. The price was to be Rs. 5,400, payable by instalments, with interest, and if default was made in payment of any instalment the entirety was to become due at once. No question of title was to be raised by the Respondent.

Default in payment was made, and the Appellant has instituted the present suit. Much evidence was taken on the question of fraud, but for the reason already given their Lordships do not think it necessary to enter on this question. It has been, in their opinion, satisfactorily disposed of in the Courts below. The question that remains is that raised as to the operation of sec. 27 of the Contract Act. This section has, under the express exception which it contains, no application if there was here a genuine sale of the goodwill of the business. It ought to be observed that, in addition to the transfer of goodwill and other assets already referred to, there was an agreement or kobala executed about the same date by the Appellant in favour of the Respondent. Under this document the Appellant contracted that, in consideration of the Rs. 5,400, he sold his rights in the landing-places and settlements and in the goodwill of the business of plying the ferry boats, and that he ceased to have any rights thereto. The Respondent was to be able to enjoy and possess these rights by exercising whatever right the Appellant had in them, and the latter was not to be able to make any obstacle in the Respondent's enjoyment of the same. The Appellant further undertook to close the business of plying the particular ferry boats, and that if he ever carried on the business again he would return the whole amount of the consideration.

Their Lordships are of opinion that this transaction amounted to a sale of a real goodwill, and they are unable to agree with the views expressed in the judgment of the High Court. They entertain no doubt that what took place was a sale of the good-will, within the meaning put on the expression in such cases as Churton v. Douglas (1), Trego v. Hunt (2) and Inland Revenue Commissioners v. Muller (3) and used in the same sense in sec. 27 of the Indian Contract Act. Accordingly they are of opinion that the decree of the Subordinate Judge must be restored, and that the Appellant is entitled to his costs of this appeal and in the High Court. They will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly.

Solicitors: Messrs. Geo. and Wm. Webb for the Appellants.

PRIVY COUNCIL.

[APPEAL FROM MADRAS.]

LORD BUCKMASTER.

LORD CARSON.

SIR JOHN EDGE.

MR. AMEER ALI.

19, December.

THE SECRETARY OF
STATE FOR INDIA IN COUNCIL, Appellant,

v.

SRI PUSAPATI VIZIA-RAMA GAJAPATHIRAJU,
RAJA OF VIZIANA-
GRAM and anr.,
Respondents.

Alluvion—Lanka formed in the Godavari—Accretion—Concurrent findings of fact—"Gradual, low, and imperceptible," test how applicable to Indian rivers.

A lanka formed by alluvion in the river Godavari was claimed by the Maharajah of Vizianagram as being an accretion to his pre-existing land. This claim was denied by the Government on the ground that the lanka was a vertical accretion to the bed of the river:

Held—That both the lower Courts had found as a fact that the lanka was a lateral extension of the Maharajah's property and the Board saw no reason to dissent from their findings.

Held, also—That the question whether the accretion was "gradual, slow, and imperceptible" had not been raised in the pleadings or issues and it was doubtful whether the contention could be raised now. On the assumption that it could,

Held—That the accretion was "gradual, slow, and imperceptible."

In the English rule which provides that all accretions must be "gradual slow and imperceptible" the words "slow" and "imperceptible" are only qualifications of the word gradual and this word with its qualifications only defines a test relative to the conditions to which it is applied. The actual rate of progress necessary to satisfy the rule when used in connection with English rivers is not necessarily the same when applied to the rivers of India.

REX v. YARBOROUGH (2), explained.

This was an appeal from a decree of the High Court, Madras, dated the 15th November 1916, confirming a decree of the temporary Subordinate Judge of Rajahmundry, dated the 27th September 1913.

The suit was instituted against Government for a declaration of the Plaintiff's (Respondent's) title to an island in the Godavari river comprising about 1,000 acres and for other relief. The island in question was an alluvial formation on the bed of the Godavari where the stream is tidal and navigable.

On the northern bank is the village of Kotipalli belonging to the Respondents: adjoining it on the east is the Government village of Kota.

During the flood season the river rises and carries with it large quantities of soil and deposits it on the banks and islands which it submerges or in new formations on the river bed. These formations are known as lankas.

The Maharajah owned a lanka called Betaru to the south and south-east of Kotipalli and Government owned the Kota Seri lanka to the south-west of Kota.

In 1850 a lanka known as the Thoorpu or Velapu lanka was formed between the Betaru and Kota Seri lankas and after prolonged litigation between the Maharajah and the Government this lanka was in 1868 decreed to the former.

The Maharajah was also the owner of two lankas known as Chiguru and Voota which were accretions to Betaru. In the course of time the river formed this mass of lankas into two portions and in 1909 the Government claimed the Eastern portion.

The Maharajah refused to admit the Government's claim and Government thereupon imposed a penal assessment under Madras Act III of 1915, on the Eastern part.

THE SECRETARY OF STATE v. SRI PUSAPATI VIZIARAMA GAJAPATHIRAJU.

The present suit was then brought by the Maharajah claiming a declaration of title to the eastern portion and when Government in their written statement denied his title to the western portion also, he amended his claim so as to have the latter included in the declaration.

The Maharajah contended that the lanka in suit belonged to him as being an accretion to his lankas. Government disputed the claim on the ground that it was an island emerging in a navigable river and contended that even if formed contiguously with lands belonging to the Maharajah yet it vested in Government as a vertical accretion to a navigable river. They further argued that the evidence showed that the growth was so rapid as to be perceptible.

The suit was decreed by the Subordinate Judge who gave the declaration prayed for and on appeal the High Court of Madras affirmed his decision.

From these decrees Government appealed to His Majesty in Council.

Mr. L. DeGruyther, K. C. (with Mr. Kenworthy Brown) for the Appellant.—

The bed of a river is admittedly Crown property where the river is both tidal and navigable and Government claim the lanka as an accretion to the river bed. I contend also that this was not a gradual and imperceptible accretion.

Both lower Courts agree as to facts but they say the law in England is different and inapplicable to local conditions and they adopt American decisions.

[LORD BUCKMASTER.—Can you apply English rules and law to something England never contemplated?]

[SIR JOHN EDGE.—You have no rivers in England comparable to the Godavari or the Ganges.]

I agree, but you have the sea—The Godavari is described in Ramalakshamma v. The Collector of Godavari Dis- trict (1). My contention is that this was not a gradual and imperceptible accretion.

[LORD BUCKMASTER.—The law of accretion is the common law but that common law has been brought in India into conditions very different to those operating in England. The same and very similar conditions have been found in America and I presume reference is made to American decisions in order to see how the common law has been interpreted in those altered conditions.]

The principle of “gradual, slow, and imperceptible” has been recognised in India in, e.g., the cases of Sardar Jaggot Singh v. Rani Brijnathi Kunwar (4) and Thakurain Ritraj Koer v. Thakurain Sarfaraz Koer (5). The reasoning adopted in Lopez v. Muddun Mohun Thakoor (6) does not apply to the Godavari. Too much reliance has been placed by the High Court on Srinath Roy v. Dinabandhu Sen (3).

There the Board were considering a set of circumstances in which the Indian Courts had always taken a slightly different view to the English Courts. It is not so with regard to accretion. The cases and authorities in India on the point are all reviewed in Raikrishan Chandra v. Saidar Bibi (7) and Narendra Bahadur Singh v. Achhaibar Shukul (8).

points out that property in soil is one thing, profits a prendre in flowing water another thing. There is an attempt here to use Lord Sumner's judgment to make an entirely new law. Reference was also made to the following:—Madras Civil Courts Act, III of 1873, sec. 16, Madras Act, III of 1905 and Bengal Regulation, XI of 1825. *Nogender Chunder Ghose v. Md. Mr. Upjohn, K. C. (with Sir G. R. Lowndes, K. C. and Mr. E. B. Raikes) for the Respondents.—The suit lanka originated before 1850 and there has been gradual accretion and gradual erosion ever since. The western part of the suit lanka was Betaru which was the property of the Maharajah before 1850: Thoorpu is an addition to Betaru and was decreed to us in 1868. The lanka is an accretion to the western portion of Betaru. The Appellant has based his case entirely on reformation. This is a case of alluvion. The contention that the ownership of the river bed goes quâ river bed wants cutting down. If you accept the argument that the bed of the river remains the bed of the river even when thrown up above the water surface you do away with all title by alluvion or accretion. The meaning of "gradual" is given in Rex v. Yarrowborough (2). In the Bengal Regulation, XI of 1825, the principle of which holds good in Madras and in New Orleans v. U. S. A. (11), the word "imperceptible" is left out because it adds nothing to "gradual" and the same thing is found in Lord Sumner's judgment in Srinath Roy v. Dinabandhu Sen (3).

[LORD BUCKMASTER.—Isn't the onus on you to prove "gradual?"]

No. We came to trial on the issue as to whether the suit lanka was formed in contiguity to our land, or as an island. This point as to gradual accretion was raised in the Court of Appeal and was only dealt with by that Court, as it was immaterial since they were in my favour on this point also. The Government acquiesced in my possession for a number of years therefore the onus is on the Government to prove that I am in unlawful possession so as to justify their penal assessment. Haidar Khan v. Secretary of State (13).

The pleadings and issues contain no reference to the Government's contention in regard to "gradual" and it was not raised in the memorandum of appeal. Even if the onus is on me there is uncontradicted evidence by which I have discharged it. The doctrine of accession is meant to apply to big rivers. This appears from the preamble to Bengal Regulation, XI of 1825. The rule is the same in Bengal and Madras. The preamble shows that the Common Law on this point was recognised in India but in Bengal for greater clarity it was codified. In the law dealing with rivers of this type the word "gradual" must include anything that is added to the land by the ordinary action of the river, unless it can be shown that a large portion of land was torn off from one place and deposited somewhere else.

Sir G. R. Lowndes, K. C. (following) : On the question of "gradual," there is no statutory law, therefore you must apply justice equity and good conscience and that consists of the English law so far as it is applicable to India.

The formation has been created by a "gradual" deposit of particles.

Mr. DeGruyther, K. C., in reply : Bengal Regulation, XI of 1825, does not apply to Madras.

Ramalakshamma v. Collector of Godavari District (1). In the Madras High Court the rule applied was that where accretion was gradual slow and imperceptible it went to the riparian owner. The argument before the Privy Council was that there was no law of accretion in Madras at all and that it was only present in Bengal owing to the Regulation. The remarks of the Board when the case came before them in Ramalakshamma v. Collector of Godavari District (1) only state that this is a wrong argument. The law of India on accretion is exactly the same as the law of England. Even under the Bengal Regulation the rule of "incrementum latens" is recognised and that is the real test. There is no difference between "gradual" and "slow and imperceptible." Haridas Acharya v. Secretary of State (15). There is no common law in India which this Regulation embodies. The Madras view is found in Secretary of State v. Kadirikutti (16).

The Madras rule is justice equity and good conscience under sec. 16 of the Madras Civil Courts Act, III of 1873.

The formation was not gradual because the Maharajah's accounts show that 600 acres were formed in a single year.

[LORD BUCKMASTER.—There is no evidence to show the meaning of the accounts.]

In order to be gradual it must be slow and imperceptible. This rule was affirmed in Ramalakshamma v. Collector of Godavari (1), where the Court refers to "acquisition by gradual slow and imperceptible increase" as the basis of the well-known principle applicable. This case lays down that the rule of English law is the rule to follow. I say further that this was not an accretion at all owing to its sudden formation.

[LORD CARSON.—I can find no trace of this contention throughout your case. The whole question that has been thrashed out has been the question of accretion.]

On the question of onus I submit that this is part of the river bed until it is shown to be otherwise, therefore it is Crown property and the onus is on anyone claiming title to prove such title. Secretary of State v. Chelikani Rama Rao (17).

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by LORD CARSON.—The question in dispute in this action is as to the ownership of a certain lanka formed by alluvion in the bed of the river Godavari. It consists at the present time of an island being surrounded on all sides by the river, and in extent consists of about 1,000 acres. At the place where this lanka is situated the Godavari is both navigable and tidal, and it is not disputed that the bed of the river at that place belongs to the Government of India. The extent of the river and the operation of its currents in forming alluvial tracts during the flood season must be borne in mind with reference to questions arising in this case. A description of this river will be found in Ramakshammamma v. The Collector of Godavari District (1).

The Maharajah of Vizianagram, the first Respondent, has for some years been in possession of this property; the other Respondent is a trustee of the Vizianagram estates.

The Defendant (Appellant), as representing the Government of India, treating the Maharajah and his tenants as being in unlawful occupation of the lands in question, proceeded to levy penal assessment in respect of them amounting to Rs. 9,020. This sum the Maharajah paid under protest and has brought the present action claiming a declaration of title to the said lands and repayment of this penal assessment.

The main questions raised by the pleadings and issues, and to which the evidence was directed in the trial Court before the Temporary Subordinate Judge, were whether the lanka in question was an accretion formed laterally as an adjunct to or in continuity with any lanka or other property belonging to the Maharajah and became his property, or was formed vertically as an island in the bed of the Godavari and was therefore the property of the Government.

The Subordinate Judge before whom the action was tried held that the lanka in question was formed by alluvion in contiguity with the Maharajah's land and was subsequently separated therefrom by the river and gave a decree for the Respondents.

On appeal the High Court of Judicature at Madras, on the 15th November 1916, confirmed the decree of the lower Court and dismissed the appeal, concurring with the finding of the Temporary Subordinate Judge that the land in dispute was formed as a lateral extension of the Maharajah's lanka, or at least of the site of his lanka.

There are therefore concurrent decisions upon this the main question raised, and their Lordships see no reason for dissenting from the conclusion arrived at. The further question, however, and indeed the main one argued on behalf of the Appellant before this Board, was that even if the lands in question were accretions to lands of the Maharajah the process of accretion was not such as to give him title to them.

In dealing with the great rivers in India and comparing them with the rivers in this country, it is necessary to bear in mind the comparative rapidity with which formations and additions take place in the former.

It was claimed by the Appellant's Counsel that by the settled law of England, which he argued was the law applicable to Madras, land to be an accretion must be formed by gradual, slow and imperceptible degrees as laid down in the case of Rex v. Yarborough (2) and other English authorities, and he alleged that the accretions in the present case were not formed by "gradual, slow and imperceptible degrees." On the other hand, the Board were referred to sec. 4 of Bengal Regulation XI of 1825, the only requirement of which is that this accretion should be "gradual"—not that it should be slow or imperceptible. That Regulation was promulgated to be in force throughout the Provinces subject to the Presidency of Fort William, and did not apply to the Presidency of Madras. It has, however, been contended that this regulation embodies the law of accretion as applicable generally to the rivers of India. Their Lordships do not find it necessary to decide whether the law as to accretions promulgated in the Bengal Regulation coincides with the law as to accretions in the Presidency of Madras or elsewhere in India, nor to discuss the exact meaning of the word "perceptible" in the English rule which provides that all accretions must be "gradual, slow and imperceptible," for assuming the applicability of the English rule, "slow" and "imperceptible" are only qualifications of the word "gradual," and this word with its qualifications only defines a test relative to the conditions to which it is applied. In other words, the actual rate of progress necessary to satisfy the rule when used in connection with English rivers is not necessarily the same when applied to the rivers of India. The application of the rule is, in their Lordships' opinion, correctly laid down in the judgment of Mr. Justice Ayling in the present case when he says :—

"It seems to me the recognition of title by alluvial accretion is largely governed by the fact that the latter is due to the normal action of physical forces; and the different conditions of Indian and English rivers is such that what would be abnormal and almost miraculous in the latter is normal and commonplace in the former, as pointed out by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Srinath Roy v. Dinabandhu Sen (3)."

Their Lordships observe that neither in the plaint nor the Defendants' written statement, or what is still more important in the issues as settled, is there any question raised as to the accretions being "gradual," "slow" or "imperceptible."

Further, in their memorandum of appeal to the High Court, the Government did not make the decision on this point a ground of objection. An examination of the evidence given before the trial Judge, shows that although several of the witnesses proved that the said lankas or parts of them "arose gradually" or increased "gradually," or "gradually extended," or "had been gradually growing in size," no question challenging this evidence was put upon cross-examination, nor was any evidence given on behalf of the Appellant to attempt to displace such evidence.

Some attempt was made to show by a comparison of farm leases and accounts of different years (which were put in evidence on behalf of the Maharajah to prove contiguity) that there must have been extensive accretions at a particular date, but such a comparison does not when examined show the contents of the lanka but only what land in the place was cultivated in each year.

Further, the judgment of Mr. Justice Srinivasa Aiyangar has pointed out that throughout the long dispute which has led to the present suit the Government had never suggested that the land in question "was not an accretion in the sense of a gradual formation." Their Lordships doubt whether under these circumstances it is open to the Appellant to raise the contention under consideration, but assuming that it is, their Lordships see no reason to doubt that, applying the principles already explained, the accretion must be held to have been "gradual, slow and imperceptible," and to be the property of the Maharajah. The order appealed for must therefore be confirmed, and this appeal dismissed with costs.

Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly.

Usage, evidence of—Admissibility—Adding to the terms of a written contract—Repugnancy—Whether such usage makes the contract insensible, inconsistent or unreasonable—Due date falling on a Sunday—Contract if may be performed on Monday following—European importer.

Evidence of well-known trade usage is admissible to add to the terms of a written contract when such usage does not make the written contract insensible, or inconsistent or unreasonable.

In a contract, to which both parties were Indians, for the sale of piece-goods imported by a European firm, the due date fell on a Sunday :

Held—That according to the well-known usage in the market the due date would be the Monday following.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

MOOKERJEE, C. J.—This is an appeal from the judgment of Mr. Justice Buckland in a suit for damages for breach of a contract for the sale of goods. The terms of the written agreement between the parties made on the 9th August 1918, were as follows :—

“ This is written to Bhai Harnand Boyjee Fulchand by Kasiram Pania with their compliments. Further, we have bought from you 45 bales, of Grey Shirtings No. B 5-456/15-15 of Mahadeo Company, at Rs. 26-8 annas, ready goods ; godown due 90 days from the 29th July ; allowance and all conditions are according to the outside contract, (that is contract with European firm), interest and cooly charges are according to the inside customs, (i.e., the customs prevailing amongst the Indian Merchants). Broker Meghrajee Ramkumar Serowgee.”

The case for the Plaintiffs is that as the due date of delivery, namely, the 27th October 1918, (the ninetyeth day from the 29th July 1918) was a Sunday, the contract could be performed on the following day, according to a well-known usage in the market which was described in the following terms :—

“ There is a well-known usage in the market in connection with European importing firms that if the due date falls on a Sunday or on a public holiday the same is excluded and the following day is taken as the due date. The Plaintiff firm and the Defendant firm are well aware of the said usage and have always acted in conformity thereto.”

KASIRAM PANIA v. HURNUNDROY FULCHAND.

The Plaintiffs allege that, according to this usage, the due date for delivery under the contract was the 28th October 1918, when they tendered the goods to the Defendants who refused to accept delivery. The Plaintiffs accordingly claim damages on the basis of the difference between the contract rate and the market rate on the due date. The Defendants repudiate the claim on the ground that the usage alleged by the Plaintiffs has really no existence and assert that transactions are carried on according to a different practice which they describe as follows:—

“In transactions with the European firms, if the due date falls on a Sunday, delivery is taken and given on the previous Saturday and not on the following Monday. In transactions between Indian firms, the due date is adhered to, irrespective of its being a Sunday or a week day, and delivery is given and taken on the Sunday if that be the due date.”

The Defendants thus maintain that the due date under the contract was, as stated in the document itself, Sunday the 27th October 1918, and they add that they offered to take delivery on that day, but the Plaintiffs failed to give delivery as they had not the goods and were really not in a position to perform their part of the contract. Mr. Justice Buckland has rejected as untrustworthy the evidence adduced by the Defendants to establish the alleged demand for delivery and tender of the price on Sunday the 27th October 1918. He has further held that the Plaintiffs have proved the existence of a usage that in respect of imported goods, to be delivered from the godown of the importing firm, if the due date falls on Sunday or on a holiday, delivery is given on the following working day. On this basis, Mr. Justice Buckland has held that the due date under the contract in suit was the 28th October 1918, and that although the Plaintiffs were ready and willing to deliver the goods on that date, the Defendants refused to accept delivery. The claim has accordingly been decreed with costs. The Defendants have now appealed against this decree.

We may state at the outset that we see no reason to doubt the correctness of the conclusion that there was no demand for delivery and tender of the price by the Defendants on the 27th October 1918, as alleged by them. The market on that date was against the Defendants, and apart from contradictions in the oral evidence, it is extremely improbable that they would, of their own motion, offer to carry out the bargain on their part and thereby be involved in a heavy loss. We reject this part of the story of the Defendants without hesitation as wholly unreliable. The real controversy in the appeal is, was there a valid trade usage as alleged by the Plaintiffs, and, if so, what was its effect upon the contract between the parties?

According to the Plaintiffs, there is a well-known usage in the market in connection with European importing firms that if the due date for delivery of goods falls on a Sunday or on a public holiday, the following day is taken as the due date. As regards transactions with European firms, there can be no doubt that the alleged usage is fully proved. Mr. Zallichi, manager of the piece-goods department of Ralli Brothers, states that they have a custom by which when the goods (ready or forward) fall due to be delivered on a Sunday or holiday, they deliver them on the next following day. Mr. Barker, who is in charge of the piece-goods department of Graham & Co., states that when the due date for delivery on a contract for sale of goods falls on a Sunday, his firm gives delivery on the following working day, that is, on the first working day after Sunday. Mr. Morgan, who is in charge of the piece-goods department of the Bombay Company deposes that when the due date under a contract for delivery of piece-goods falls on a Sunday, delivery is given, according to usage, on the Monday following. In our opinion, the evidence is conclusive that in transactions with European firms, on the sale of piece-goods, if the due date for delivery falls on a Sunday, the delivery is given on the next following day, and by usage this is regarded by all concerned as due performance of the contract. This is also clearly consistent with the probabilities, as European firms, prima facie, would not be kept open for business on Sundays. The next point for consideration is, whether the same usage prevails with regard to transactions between Indian dealers, when the subject-matter of the sale is goods purchased from a European firm of importers. The balance of evidence, in our opinion, points to the conclusion that the question should be answered in the affirmative. Mr. Zallichi, to whose evidence we have just referred, after stating the usage of his firm, adds that Indian merchants who deal with them recognise the usage. To the same effect is the evidence of Lakshminarayan and Loonkaran who are members of respectable firms of piece-goods dealers and who confirm the testimony on oath of Mulchand, the Manib Gomasta of the Plaintiffs. The existence of the usage alleged by these witnesses is highly probable, because if the goods are lying in the godown of the importing firm, it is impracticable to give delivery on a Sunday; in such circumstances one would expect that delivery would be accepted if given on the next following working day, just as in the case of direct transactions with European firms. We are not unmindful that there is some evidence to show that delivery may be had on a Sunday, even from a European firm, by previous arrangement; but it is plain that such delivery, where given, is in the nature of a concession for the convenience or accommodation of the purchaser. Our attention has also been drawn to a ruling given by the Bengal Chamber of Commerce on the 25th June 1902, in the following terms:

“Sundays and Charter Party Holidays in relation to Mercantile Contracts—Goods falling due for delivery on Sunday or on a Charter Party and shipping Holiday must be delivered on the day previous to the Sunday or the Charter Party and shipping Holiday, as the case may be.”

No evidence has been adduced to show the circumstances under which the ruling was given; it is clear, however, that this has not been regarded as universally or even generally binding by mercantile firms and has not been observed by such firms as Ralli Brothers and Graham & Co. It is further worthy of note that it is not the case for the Defendants that they demanded delivery on Saturday the 26th October 1918 as the due date. Their allegation is that Sunday was the due date; consequently the ruling of the Bengal Chamber of Commerce just mentioned can be of no possible assistance to them. This takes away from the value of the evidence of Mr. Fildes, who is piece-goods salesmaster of David Sassoon & Co., (presumably a firm of non-Christian Jews) and who states that his firm has followed the Chamber of Commerce ruling. A similar observation applies to the evidence of Mr. Oldfield of the Overseas Export and Import Co., a firm which has acted on the Chamber of Commerce ruling. It is not necessary to refer in detail to the other evidence on the record, as, on the whole we agree with Mr. Justice Buckland that the usage alleged by the Plaintiffs covers not merely direct transactions with European firms but also transactions relating to goods imported by European firms and delivered from their godowns. In the case before us, as the Defendants were aware, the Plaintiffs were the benians of the Bombay Company, an importing firm whose goods were the subject-matter of the contract. In such circumstances, the usage, if valid in law and not inconsistent with the written contract, would be applicable so as to make Monday the 28th October 1918, the due date for delivery.

It is well-settled that, in the absence of statutory provision or trade custom or usage to that effect, the fact that the performance of a contract falls due on a holiday does not alter the rights of the parties by suspending the transaction of private business. This is well-illustrated by the case of Richardson v. Goddard (1) where a ship arrived in port with a cargo of cotton and on a holiday discharged the goods, which were destroyed by accidental fire before they were removed. The question arose, whether there had been good delivery. It was ruled by the Supreme Court of the United States that in the absence of proof of statutory or customary prohibition of the transaction of business on a holiday, the delivery must be deemed to have been valid so as to throw the loss on the consignee. Substantially to the same effect is the decision of Farran, J., in Lalchand v. Kersten (2). Consequently, in the present case, the Plaintiffs have to establish that they were entitled to perform the contract on the day following the Sunday, by reason of the existence of a valid usage which may be deemed to have been incorporated in the contract between the parties. As was pointed out by Sir John Coleridge in Juggomohan Ghose v. Manik Chand (3), such mercantile usage, though it needs not either the antiquity, the uniformity or the notoriety of custom, must be so well-known and acquiesced in that it may be reasonably presumed to have been an ingredient tacitly imported by the parties into their contract. To the same effect is the observation of Baron Parke in Gibson v. Small (4).

"The custom of trade, which is a matter of evidence, may be used to annex incidents to all written contracts, commercial or agricultural and others which do not by their terms exclude it, upon the presumption that the parties have contracted with reference to such usage, if it is applicable."

It is consequently plain that the usage of which evidence is received must not be repugnant to or inconsistent with the written contract. This view is lucidly expressed by Coleridge, J., in Brown v. Byrne (5).

"In all contracts, as to the subject-matter of which known usages prevail, parties are found to proceed with the tacit assumption of these usages; they commonly reduce into writing the special particulars of their agreement, but omit to specify these known usages, which are included, however, as of course, by mutual understanding. Evidence, therefore, of such incidents is receivable. The contract, in truth, is partly express and in writing, partly implied or understood and unwritten. But in these cases, a restriction is established on the soundest principle, that the evidence received must not be of a particular which is repugnant to, or inconsistent with, the written contract. Merely that it varies the apparent contract is not enough to exclude the evidence, for it is impossible to add any material incident to the written terms of a contract without altering its effect, more or less." KASIRAM PANIA v. HURNUNDROY FULCHAND.

But in order that the material incident which it is sought to annex should fail within the exception of repugnancy, the incident must be such as, if expressed in the written contract, would make it insensible or inconsistent or thoroughly unreasonable. See the observations of Coleridge, J., in Cuthbert v. Cumming (7), of Lord Campbell, C. J., in Humfrey v. Dale (8), of Cockburn, C. J., in Dale v. Humfrey (9), of Keating, J., in Russian S. N. Co. v. Silva (10), of Lord Esher, M. R. in Aktieselskab v. Ekmand (11), of Stephen, J., in Barrow v. Dyster (12) and of Kennedy, J., in Gulf Sine v. Laycock (13). These cases show that the real difficulty in interpreting transactions of this character, lies in the reconciliation of two conflicting principles, namely, first, that evidence of usage is admissible on the presumption that the parties did not mean to express in writing the whole of the contract by which they intended to be bound but contracted with reference to those usages, and secondly, that the evidence received must not be of a term which is repugnant to or inconsistent with the written contract. The distinction is well put by Mr. Justice Story in The Reeside (14).

“The true and appropriate office of a usage or custom is, to interpret the otherwise indeterminate intentions of parties, and to ascertain the nature and extent of their contracts, arising, not from express stipulations, but from mere implications and presumptions, and acts of a doubtful or equivocal character. It may also be admitted to ascertain the true meaning of a particular word or of particular words, in a given instrument, when the word or words have various senses, some common, some qualified, and some technical, according to the subject-matter to which they are applied. But I apprehend that it can never be proper to resort to any usage or custom to control or vary the positive stipulations in a written contract, and a fortiori, not in order to contradict them. An express contract of the parties is always admissible to supersede, or vary or control a usage or custom; for the latter may always be waived at the will of the parties. But a written and express contract cannot be controlled or varied, or contradicted by a usage or custom; for that would not only be to admit parol evidence to control, vary or contradict written contracts, but it would be to allow mere presumptions and implications, properly arising in the absence of any positive expressions of intention, to control, vary or contradict the most formal and deliberate declarations of the parties.” To the same effect is the decision of the House of Lords in Produce Brokers Co. v. Olympia Oil and Cake Co. (15) and of the Court of Appeal in Westcott v. Hahu (16).

The Plaintiffs must consequently not only prove the existence of a trade usage but also establish that the usage when read into the written contract does not make it insensible or inconsistent. We must, in this connection, bear in mind that the mere fact that the usage varies the apparent contract is not of itself sufficient to exclude the evidence, for it is manifestly impossible to add any material incident to the written terms of a contract without altering its effect, more or less. The test is, whether the incident, if expressed in the written contract, would make it insensible or inconsistent or unreasonable.

KASIRAM PANIA v. HURNUNDROY FULCHAND.

Examined in the light of the principle thus understood, the case of the Plaintiffs is free from difficulty. The written contract states explicitly that the due date of delivery is ninety days from the 29th July 1918, that is, the 27th October 1918. We have then to read into the contract the proviso that if such date falls on a Sunday, the due date will be the day following. It may be conceded that this does vary the apparent contract; indeed, if it did not, the parties would not seek to prove the usage; but although the apparent contract is varied, the contract as modified is sensible and self-consistent. The added term consequently is not open to the objection of repugnancy. We hold accordingly that the Plaintiffs have proved the existence of a legal custom annexed to the written contract.

The result is that the decree made by Mr. Justice Buckland is affirmed and this appeal dismissed with costs.

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE

No. 631 OF 1919.

MOOKERJEE, C. J. BHARAM CHAND GUIN,
FLETCHER, J. Defendant, Appellant,

1920,
 22, July. KANAK SARKAR,
 Plaintiff, Respondent.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), sec 46, suit for ejectment of non-occupancy raiyat on ground of refusal to agree to enhancement—Mode of service of the agreement on the raiyat—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), Or. 5, r. 15, service of notice on son of Defendant, whether sufficient service—Propriety of inference from the relations of father and son.

In a suit for ejectment of a non-occupancy raiyat the statutory agreement was served on his son, and the lower Courts thought that it was sufficient compliance with the requirements of Or. 5, r. 15, C. P. C., as the son was presumed to have duly brought it to the notice of the Defendant:

Held—That this clearly is a consideration which cannot be permitted to weigh with the Court when the question is whether or not the requirements of the statute have been carried out. It has to be definitely found that the Defendant could not be found after reasonable and diligent enquiries, and that the person on whom the notice was served was an adult male member residing with him. It is essential that the requirements of the statute in these matters should be strictly carried out.

This was an appeal preferred on the 11th April 1919 from a decision of A. H. Cuming, Esq., District Judge, 24-Per-ganas, dated the 14th January 1919, affirming that of Babu Upendra Chandra Ghose, Munsif, Basirhat, dated the 12th October 1919.

In a suit under sec. 46, Bengal Tenancy Act for the ejectment of an occupancy raiyat, the agreement required by the section was served upon the son of the raiyat in his absence. That was thought to be sufficient compliance with the provisions of Or. 5, r. 15 of the Civil Procedure Code by the Court of first instance and the lower Appellate Court and the suit was decreed. From that decision the tenant appealed to the High Court.

BHARAM CHAND GUIN v. KANAK SARKAR.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

MOOKERJEE, C. J.—This is an appeal by the tenant Defendant in a suit instituted under sec. 46 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. Sub-sec. (1) of that section provides that “a suit for ejectment on the ground of refusal to agree to an enhancement of rent shall not be instituted against a non-occupancy raiyat unless the landlord has tendered to the raiyat an agreement to pay the enhanced rent, and the raiyat has within three months before the institution of the suit refused to execute the agreement.” Sub-sec. (2) then provides as follows :—“A landlord desiring to tender an agreement to a raiyat under this section may file it in the office of such Court or officer as the Local Government appoints in this behalf for service on the raiyat. The Court or officer shall forthwith cause it to be served on the raiyat in the prescribed manner, and when it has been so served it shall for the purposes of this section be deemed to have been tendered.” . . . R. 30 of the statutory rules made by the Government of Bengal provides as follows :—“The agreement under sub-sec. (2) of sec. 46 shall be filed in the Court having jurisdiction to entertain a suit for arrears of rent of the holding, and shall be served on the raiyat in the manner prescribed for the service of summons on Defendant under the Code of Civil Procedure on payment of the fee prescribed by the High Court.”

In the case before us the Plaintiff alleges that the agreement was duly served in accordance with Or. 5, r. 15 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which provides as follows :—“Where in any suit the Defendant cannot be found and has no agent empowered to accept service of the summons on his behalf, service may be made on any adult male member of the family of the Defendant who is residing with him.”

The first Court found in favour of the Plaintiff that the summons had been duly served. The District Judge has affirmed that conclusion. But the facts found by him are not sufficient to show that the requirements of Or. 5, r. 15 have been fulfilled. The District Judge has held that what is required is that the agreement should be properly brought to the notice of the Defendant, and that as the agreement was served upon the son, one can have little doubt but that it was duly brought to the notice of the Defendant by his son who lives in the same house with him. This clearly is a consideration which cannot be permitted to weigh with the Court when the question is whether or not the requirements of the statute have been carried out. It is not definitely found whether the first condition mentioned in r. 15 existed, namely, whether the Defendant could not be found. The District Judge says that it is very unlikely that the Defendant's son or anyone connected with the Defendant would give any real information as to the Defendant's whereabouts: and, further that “the evidence would go to show that enquiries were made from the Defendant's son as to the whereabouts of the Defendant to which apparently only vague replies were given.” The statute does not require that the enquiry should be confined to the son of the Defendant or to a person related to him. An attempt could easily have been made to find out the Defendant by an enquiry from his neighbours or other persons. The District Judge has not also found whether the son was an adult male member of the family residing with him. The findings are thus insufficient to justify the decree, for it is essential that the requirements of the statute in these matters should be strictly carried out.

The result is that this appeal is allowed, the decree of the District Judge set aside and the case remitted to him for reconsideration.

It is stated that there are other points involved in the appeal. We do not deal with them, because if the point mentioned be decided against the Plaintiff, no other question will arise. But if the point is decided in favour of the Plaintiff and against the Defendant, the other questions which arise in the case will be reconsidered by the lower Appellate Court.

Costs will abide the result.

Receiver, rent decree obtained by, after conditional order of discharge made by Court, but not carried out and before the decree embodying order of discharge was signed by the Judge—Receiver, if bound to disclose to Court order of discharge in such circumstances—Devolution of interest pending suit—No application for substitution—Decree passed in favour of original party, if bad.

In a rent suit instituted by the receiver of an estate as such a decree was obtained after an order discharging the receiver on certain conditions had been made by the Court. It appeared, however, that on the date the rent decree was made the order of discharge had not been in fact carried out nor was the decree embodying the said order signed by the Judge who passed it. The receiver was in possession as before and he was subsequently continued as such by the order of the Appellate Court:

Held—That it was not established that the receiver was in fact and law discharged on the date of the rent decree nor was it proved that there was fraud such as would entitle the Plaintiff to maintain a suit to have the decree set aside.

That it was not shown that there was in fact and in law such a discharge as it was incumbent upon the receiver to disclose before the Court.

That, assuming that the receiver was discharged before the decree was passed, there was only a devolution pending the suit, and the decree made in favour of the receiver would not on that account be a bad decree but would enure for the benefit of the party on whom the interest devolved, such party not having applied for the carriage of the proceedings.

This was an appeal preferred on the 30th August 1920 against a decree of the Subordinate Judge of Howrah (Babu Banwari Lal Banerjee), dated the 6th July 1920.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

This appeal arises out of a suit for a declaration that a certain rent decree, dated the 13th February 1919, obtained by the Defendant as receiver against the Plaintiffs is invalid and inoperative. The Defendant was appointed receiver of the estate of Kumudini Dasi, one of the widows of Gopal Lal Seal, on the 7th January 1918. The Defendant instituted a rent suit as receiver. It is alleged that during the pendency of that suit, he was discharged as receiver and thus was unable to maintain and continue the suit, and that such discharge took place on the 28th January 1919. He was not, it is said, re-instated until 17th February 1919, and that the decree passed in the rent suit on the 13th of February 1919, in favour of the receiver is invalid. It is alleged that the receiver purposely withheld this information from the Court, namely, that he was discharged, and thus induced the Court to believe that he was receiver and he thus obtained a decree in his favour. It is said that the decree was secured by suppression of material facts and thus it was inoperative, entitling the Appellants to bring this suit to have it set aside. As I said, the receiver is said to have been discharged on the 28th January 1919. On that date a settlement was arrived at in the suit of Gour Mohon Mullick v. Srimati Nayan Manjari Dasi and others. In the 8th para. of that settlement it is stated "that the official receiver in this suit do forthwith make over possession of the estate in his hands to the Mullick parties with like notice as aforesaid except a pair of horses and an office jaun which he is to make over to Bahu Panna Lal Seal and that he be discharged and do pass his accounts."

This order is, it has been contended, a conditional order, because in the earlier portion of the order of the High Court discharging the receiver it appears that "the counsel for the parties other than Srimati Nayan Manjari Dasi undertaking that their respective clients shall produce to the Registrar of this Court affidavits from their respective wives stating that so long as this decree remains unreversed they will make no claim to the monthly sums referred to in cl. 10 of the terms of settlement hereinafter referred to."

There is no evidence before us, as the learned Judge has pointed out, which shows that this undertaking was carried out. We then find that there was an appeal, and on the 17th February 1919, an order was passed by the Appellate Court directing that the receiver should retain possession of the share of Srimati Kumudini Dasi until the final determination of that appeal. The decree of the 28th January 1919 to which I have referred was not signed by the learned Judge until the 25th February. The decree was passed in the appeal in the High Court on the 4th April 1919, and after the date of the Appellate Court's decree on the 17th March 1920, an order was passed by this Court on the Original Side by which it was ordered "that the receiver of this Court and the receiver appointed in this suit under the said order dated the second day of January one thousand nine hundred and eighteen of the estate of Gopal Lal Seal deceased, which was held by Srimati Kumudini Dasi deceased, and now in his possession do continue to act as such receiver as aforesaid with all the powers conferred upon him by the said order from the said 4th day of April 1919 until further orders of this Court."

As I have mentioned, the decree in the rent suit instituted by the receiver was passed on 13th February 1919, that is, after the date of the High Court's order of discharge on the 28th January 1919, but before that decree had been signed by the learned Judge who passed it on the 25th February 1919.

It appears from the order sheet, order No. 14, dated the 13th February 1919, that the Plaintiff was ready with his witnesses. But the Defendant asked for time on the ground that his servant who looked after this case was ill. The Judge then recorded the following order: "I am not satisfied as to the truth of the plea. It appears from an examination of this record that the Defendant has obtained adjournments on this very plea which goes to shew that the plea is a mere pretext to delay the decision of this case. The suit is one for rent, and already more than nine months have elapsed of which seven months have elapsed after the Defendant had entered appearance. So I refuse to grant the Defendant's application." Then on the same date, the following two orders were passed. "After the disposal of the above application, the Defendant's pleader stated that he was going to make an application stating that the Plaintiff was discharged from the receivership in which capacity he sued. As there is nothing on the record to prove the correctness of this statement of the Defendant's pleader, I refuse to take cognizance of it. The Defendant's pleader then retired." The next order is "In the course of the examination of the Plaintiff's witness Tarak Chandra Mitra the Defendant's pleaders filed the application stating that the Plaintiff was discharged and asked for a week's time to prove this fact. I refuse to admit this application and to grant the time applied for."

Passing now to the law on these facts it is in the first place urged that when the suit was first instituted, there was no defect in it, on the contrary the receiver had full authority to institute the suit, the decree in which the Appellant seeks to set aside. Assuming for the moment, without deciding that the Appellant's contention is correct, namely, that the receiver ceased to be such before the date of the decree, that is on the 28th January 1919, the decree being signed on the 25th February 1919, there is in this case a devolution of interest. [See the case of N. C.

Macleod v. Kissan Vithal Singh (1)]. But because there was such devolution it does not follow therefrom that the suit should have been arrested, that it could no longer be maintained and that the decree which was passed in favour of the Plaintiff was, as alleged, a bad decree [see the case of Rai Charan Mondal v. Biswanath Mondal (2)]. If the party on whom the interest devolved did not apply, (as they did not), to carry on the proceedings, then in such a case the decree would enure for the benefit of the party. We must distinguish such a case from one in which an event subsequent to suit shows that the Plaintiff had no title to bring the suit on the date of its institution. This argument, however, as I say assumes, that the receiver was discharged before the decree, but the learned Judge holds that he was not discharged; and I am not satisfied that the learned Judge's decision on this point is erroneous. The decree of the 28th January 1919, was, it has been pointed out, conditional, on certain affidavits to which I have referred being filed; as also, it is contended, to the giving over of possession in terms of cl. 8 of the terms of settlement. There is nothing to show that these conditions were carried out and it is for the Plaintiff-Appellant, in my opinion, to show all the facts which are necessary for him to establish in order to prove his claim to have the decree set aside. Not only is there nothing to show that these conditions have been carried out but on the contrary we find that the order of the Appellate Court of the 17th February 1919 orders that the receiver do retain possession during the pendency of the appeal, thereby indicating that the receiver had been and was then in possession or in other words that the order of the 28th January 1919 had not on that date been carried out. Further the decree, dated the 28th January 1919, was not signed until the 25th February 1919. The decree was not complete, and was inoperative for want of signature. Then on the 17th March 1920, the receiver was continued after disposal of the appeal and it is to be observed, as the learned Judge has done, that no reference is here made to any fresh appointment, the date referred to in the order, dated the 17th March 1920, passed by Mr. Justice Greaves being the 2nd January when the receiver was first appointed. I am of opinion therefore that it has not been established that the receiver was in fact and law discharged on the date of the rent decree, that is, the 13th February 1919, nor am I satisfied that it is proved that there was fraud such as would entitle the Plaintiff to maintain the suit to have the decree set aside. Having regard to my findings on the other points it is not necessary for me to elaborate this one, but I desire to say that it is not suggested that the receiver had any intention to deceive.

It is, however, contended that it was the duty of the receiver to state to the Court that he was discharged. It has not been made clear either to us or to the Subordinate Judge that there was in fact and in law such a discharge, as, it is said, it was incumbent upon the receiver to disclose before the Court. On the question of alleged damages for such alleged fraud it is to be observed, having regard to the provisions of sec. 153 (a) of the Bengal Tenancy Act, that the Judge passed the following order. "The Defendants made an application for rehearing on the 14th March. By an order, dated the 14th March (recorded on the application) they were asked to state within three days if any rent was due from them for the period in claim. They have not answered this question. From their application for rehearing, it does not appear that they have sustained any injury by the ex parte decree. So I refuse to admit their application for rehearing. It is rejected accordingly."

For the reasons stated I am of opinion that this appeal fails and must be dismissed with costs.

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE

No. 708 of 1919.

BROJENDRA KUMAR ROY CHOWDHURY and ors., Defendants,
Appellants,

CHATTERJEA, J.
PANTON, J.

v.
ASUTOSH ROY and ors.,
Plaintiffs, Respondents.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Art. 138—"Date when sale becomes absolute," significance of—Arts. 137, 138 and 144, which applies when an execution purchaser obtains symbolical possession, but is kept out of actual possession—Sec. 16, if applies to a suit for possession by such an execution purchaser.

A tenure was purchased at an execution sale, which was confirmed in August 1902. Symbolical possession was delivered to the purchaser in January 1904. An application for setting aside the sale was made in June 1905 and was rejected in April 1906. Being kept out of actual possession the purchaser brought a suit for possession in July 1914 and added some Defendants in March 1916, i.e., more than 12 years from the date on which the sale became absolute, as well as from the date when symbolical possession was delivered to the execution purchaser:

Held—That the sale became absolute on the confirmation of the sale in August 1902 and not in April 1906, when the application for setting aside the sale was dismissed. The confirmation of a sale cannot be kept in abeyance (when no proceedings are taken to set aside the sale before the confirmation) in order to enable the judgment-debtor to take such proceedings afterwards. So if Art. 138 of the Limitation Act applied, the suit would be barred, even deducting the time during which the application for setting aside the sale was pending.

Art. 137 did not apply as the judgment-debtor was in possession at the date of the sale. Art. 138 too was not the proper article applicable to the case. The purchaser obtained symbolical possession, which was as effective as actual possession against the judgment-debtor, and if the latter continued in possession, it was adverse against the purchaser from the very day on which he got symbolical possession. The purchaser therefore had a fresh cause of action for instituting the suit for possession against the judgment-debtor. In such a case Art. 138 does not apply but Art. 144 applies.

GOPAL v. KRISHNA RAO (1) referred to.

Where Art. 144 applies, no deduction of time under sec. 16 of the Limitation Act or under the general principles of equity is allowable, and the suit was therefore barred.

This was an appeal against the decree of M. Smither, Esq., District Judge of Zillah Dacca, dated the 23rd of January 1919, modifying the decree of Babu Sukumar Bhattacharjee, Subordinate Judge, 1st Court of that District, dated the 29th of July 1917.

The Plaintiffs purchased a tenure at an execution sale on the 12th July 1902. The sale was confirmed on the 13th August 1902. The Plaintiffs obtained symbolical possession on the 12th January 1904. The judgment-debtors made an application for setting aside the sale on 21st June 1905 and it was rejected on the 8th April 1906. The Plaintiffs, however, did not obtain actual possession and brought the present suit for possession against the judgment-debtors on the 11th July 1914, and added some Defendants on the 27th March 1916. The Court of first instance held that the suit was barred by limitation and dismissed it. On appeal the District Judge decreed the suit. The added Defendants thereupon preferred the present appeal to the High Court.

Babus D. N. Chakerbuly and Rajendra Chandra Guha for the Appellants.

Babus Ram Chandra Mazumdar, Upendra Lal Roy, Bimola Charan Das Gupta and Khemada Kinkar Roy for the Respondents.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

This appeal arises out of a suit for recovery of possession of the lands in dispute on the ground that they formed part of a tenure which was granted in 1837 to one Hoseinuddin Chowdhury, the predecessor-in-interest of the Defendants.

It is alleged by the Plaintiffs that a suit for rent in respect of the tenure was brought against the heirs of Hoseinuddin and in execution of that decree, the tenure was sold and purchased by the Plaintiffs on the 12th July 1902. The sale was confirmed on the 13th August 1902. The Plaintiffs obtained possession on the 12th January 1904. The Plaintiffs say that they continued in possession and were dispossessed in 1914. They then brought a suit in the Munsif's Court on the 11th July

BROJENDRA KUMAR ROY CHOWDHURY v. ASUTOSH ROY.

1914. That Court held that the suit was not cognisable by that Court, and accordingly returned the plaint. The plaint thereupon was filed in the Court of the Subordinate Judge against the original Defendants on the 15th June 1915. The Defendants Nos. 7 to 20 were added as party Defendants on the 27th March 1916.

The defence was that there was no tenancy created in 1837 in favour of the Defendant, that there was a sale of a portion of the proprietary interest, but that the transferee was to pay his share of the Government Revenue payable with respect to that portion through the transferor so long as mutation did not take place and that that being so, the Munsif's Court which held the sale in execution of the rent decree had no jurisdiction to pass the decree or hold the sale as the suit was one cognisable by the Small Cause Court.

The Court of first instance held that the suit was barred by limitation and dismissed the suit. On appeal the learned District Judge decided the question in favour of the Plaintiff and gave him a decree.

The Defendants Nos. 7 to 20 have appealed to this Court.

The main question in the case is whether the suit is barred by limitation.

As stated above, the sale was confirmed on the 13th August 1902 and symbolical possession was delivered to the Plaintiffs on the 12th January 1904. The judgment-debtors however continued in possession, and the Plaintiffs did not obtain actual possession. The Defendants Nos. 7 to 20 were added as parties on the 27th March 1916. This was more than 12 years from the date of the confirmation of the sale as well as from the date on which symbolical possession was delivered to the Plaintiffs. The learned District Judge was of opinion that the article applicable to the suit was 137 or 138 but that sec. 16 of the Limitation Act applied to the case under which the Plaintiffs were entitled to deduct the time during which an application for setting aside the sale was pending in Court. That application was made on the 21st June 1905. It was rejected on the 8th April 1906.

Sec. 16 lays down that in computing the period of limitation prescribed for a suit for possession by a purchaser at a sale in execution of a decree, the time during which the judgment-debtor has been prosecuting a proceeding to set aside the sale shall be excluded. The only suit for possession by a purchaser at a sale in execution of a decree for which a period of limitation is prescribed is a suit under Arts. 137 and 138. Art. 137 cannot apply to the present case as the judgment-debtor was in possession at the date of the sale; and if any of these articles is applicable, it must be Art. 138. Art. 138 provides for a suit by a purchaser of land at a sale in execution of a decree for possession of the purchased land when the judgment-debtor was in possession at the date of the sale. The period of limitation (12 years) begins to run from the date when the sale becomes absolute. Now, if the sale was made absolute on the 13th August 1902 on which date it was confirmed, the suit would no doubt be barred, even if the Plaintiff was to get deduction of the period during which the application for setting aside the sale was pending, namely, from 21st June 1905 to 8th April 1906.

It is contended, however, on behalf of the Respondent that the sale did not become absolute until the 8th April 1906 when the application under secs. 204 and 311 to set aside the sale was disposed of, and if that is the proper view of the matter, there is no doubt that the suit would be in time.

The question is whether the sale was made absolute on the 8th April 1906 or on the 13th August 1902.

Now, sec. 314 of Act XIV of 1882 provided that no sale of the moveable property should become absolute until it had been confirmed by the Court, and sec. 316 laid down that when the sale had become absolute in the manner aforesaid the Court should grant a certificate and the property should vest in the purchaser from the date of the certificate. The sale therefore became absolute on confirmation of the sale under sec. 312 of the Code; and sec. 312 shows that the sale was to be confirmed if no application were made under sec. 311 or if any such application were made and disallowed. It appears therefore, that the confirmation of the sale followed disallowance of any application that may have been made under sec. 311, C. P. C., and evidently that was to be made before the certificate of sale was issued: and in such cases, sec. 16 of the Limitation Act would certainly be applicable. Here, the application was made several years afterwards. The sale was confirmed on the 13th August 1902, the application to set aside the sale was not made until the 21st June 1905. The confirmation of sale cannot be kept in abeyance (when no proceedings are taken to set aside the sale before the confirmation) in order to enable the judgment-debtor to take such proceedings years afterwards, as in the present case. We are unable therefore to hold that the sale became absolute on the 8th April 1906 when the application was rejected. We are of opinion that the sale became absolute on the 13th August 1902.

We think, therefore, that even if Art. 138 is applicable to the case, the suit will be barred even if the Plaintiff is allowed deduction for the period during which the application to set aside the sale was pending. We do not think, however, that Art. 138 is the proper article applicable to the case.

The Plaintiffs obtained delivery of symbolical possession on the 12th January 1904. Such symbolical possession was as effective as actual possession against the judgment-debtors; and if the judgment-debtors continued in possession their possession was adverse against the Plaintiffs from that very day. The Plaintiffs therefore had a fresh cause of action for instituting the suit for possession against the judgment-debtors; and such a suit would not be one governed by Art. 138 which evidently refers to a case where the purchaser has not obtained delivery of possession.

The cases on the point are discussed in the case of Gopal v. Krishna Rao (1), where it is pointed out that "Art. 137 applies to an auction-purchaser of the rights of a person not in possession, while Art. 138 applies when the auction-purchase is made of the rights of a judgment-debtor who is in possession at the date of the sale. None of these articles contemplate the case of an auction-purchaser or his assign who has obtained formal possession, and is disturbed by the judgment-debtor or his heirs who continue in actual possession, as was the case in the present dispute. In such a case all the Courts agree in holding that Art. 138 does not apply but Art. 144 applies."

If Art. 144 applies, the Plaintiff is not entitled to any deduction of time under sec. 16 of the Limitation Act. But the learned Pleader for the Respondent contends that he is entitled to deduction of the time during which the proceeding for setting aside the sale was pending, under the general principles of equity: We do not think, however, that he is so entitled.

He refers to the cases of Lakhan Chander Sen v. Madhusudan Sen (2) and Hemendra Mohan Khasnabis v. Dharani Nath Chanda Roy (3). In the first case, there was a decree actually in favour of the pro formâ Defendants and so long as that decree was not set aside, a fresh suit for the same relief could not be brought by them.

In the second case, the third mortgagee was prevented by an order of the Court from applying to make the decree absolute until the second mortgage had been redeemed.

In the case of Mussamat Ranec Surnomoyee v. Shoshi Mukhi Burmonia (4) it was pointed out by the Judicial Committee "until the sale had been finally set aside, she was in the position of a person whose claim had been satisfied; and that her suit might have been successfully met by a plea to that effect."

In the present case the principle of those cases cannot apply; because the sale had already been confirmed, and had become absolute; a certificate of sale had been granted to the Plaintiffs and they had obtained delivery of symbolical possession. In these circumstances when the Defendants judgment-debtors withheld possession, the Plaintiffs were quite competent to maintain the suit against the judgment-debtors and the mere fact that the judgment-debtors made an unsuccessful application several years afterwards could not invalidate the confirmation of sale which had taken place, nor entitle the decree-holders to deduct the period during which the proceedings were pending.

We think therefore, that the suit is barred by limitation.

That being so, it is unnecessary to consider whether the transfer in favour of Hosseinuddin by the Plaintiffs' predecessor was a lease or a transfer of a portion of the proprietary interest; and, if it was the latter, whether the Munsif had jurisdiction to pass a decree for rent or hold the sale in execution thereof.

The result is that the decree of the lower Appellate Court is set aside and that of the Court of first instance restored with costs here and of the Court below.

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE

No. 485 OF 1903.

BRETT, J.	}	JOGESH CHANDRA ROY,
1904,		Plaintiff, Appellant,
Heard, 7 and		v.
8, December.		ANNADA CHARAN CHOW-
Judgment,		DHURY, Defendant,
8, December.		Respondent.

Cess Act (IX of 1880, B. C.), sec. 41, cess if payable for lands held on payment of rent in kind.

In a suit for arrears of rent the claim for the tenant's share of the cess was disallowed on the ground that there was no provision for payment of cesses when rent was payable in kind:

Held—That cess is payable in respect of all lands held by a cultivating raiyat, whether the rent is payable in cash or in kind.

This was an appeal preferred on the 22nd March 1903 against the decree of the Subordinate Judge of Chittagong (Babu Jogendra Lal Choudhury), dated the 11th December 1902, modifying a decree of the Munsif of Patiya (Babu Sarat Kishore Bose), dated the 24th June 1901.

The Appellant brought a suit for arrears of rent in respect of 3 plots of land, for which rent in kind was payable for one plot, and he made a claim for the usual cesses. The Munsif decreed the whole claim, but the lower Appellate Court disallowed the claim for cesses in respect of the plot of land for which rent was claimed in kind, on the ground that there is no provision in the law for the payment of cesses when rent is payable in kind and that there was no proof of any agreement to pay such cesses. Hence the present appeal to the High Court.

Babu Hari Bhusan Mookerjee for the Appellant.

No one for the Respondent.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

This appeal arises out of a suit brought by the Plaintiff-Appellant for arrears of rent of 3 plots of land. Money rent was claimed in respect of two of the plots and rent in kind in respect of the third. There was also a claim for the usual cesses.

The Court of first instance decreed the entire claim, but on appeal the lower Appellate Court has modified the decree of the Court of first instance by disallowing the claim for cesses in respect of the plot of land for which rent was claimed in kind. The Subordinate Judge gives as his reason for disallowing that part of the claim for cesses, that there is no provisions in the law for the payment of cesses when rent is payable in kind, and there is no proof on behalf of the Plaintiff of any agreement to pay such cesses.

On behalf of the Appellant it is contended that the Subordinate Judge is in error in supposing that the law does not contemplate that cesses should be paid by the tenant in the case of lands held on rents payable in kind. The contention is in my opinion correct. Sec. 41 of the Cess Act clearly provides that the cess is payable in respect of all lands held by a cultivating raiyat; and, sub-cl. 3 of that section lays down the amount of cesses which the raiyat is bound to pay. The Subordinate Judge was possibly unaware of the rules provided for the levy of cesses in respect of rents payable in kind, and his attention is therefore invited to the explanation given under sec. 4 of the Cess Act, B. C., of 1880, in the Edition of the Act published by the Board of Revenue with the Board's Rules attached.

In my opinion the Subordinate Judge is in error in disallowing the claim of the Plaintiff for the tenant's share of the cesses on the plot of land paying rent in kind and I therefore set aside the judgment and decree of the Subordinate Judge on this point and restore the judgment and decree of the Munsif.

As no one appears on the other side to contest the appeal I make no order as to costs.

AMBA alias PADMA-VATHI, Appellant,

v.

SHRINIVASA
KAMATHI,
Respondent.

Indian Registration Act (III of 1877), secs. 3, 34—Deed of gift in favour of a married minor girl presented for registration by latter's father without authority from executant—Registration if valid—Deeds void.

Two deeds of gift executed by K in favour of his niece A who was a minor and married to his adopted son were presented for registration by A's father and registered:

Held—That upon A's marriage her father ceased to be her natural guardian and never having been appointed her legal guardian was not her assignee or representative within the meaning of sec. 3 of the Registration Act, 1877. Nor was he, within the meaning of sec. 34 of the Act, the representative assign or agent duly authorised on behalf of K. The registration of the deeds was therefore illegal, invalid and void, with the consequence that the deeds themselves were void and unenforceable.

This was an appeal from a decision of the High Court of Judicature at Madras.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

Mr. Kenworthy Brown for the Appellant.—The allegations are that the (1) testator was too old to know what he did; (2) testator was so old that he was easily under undue influence and was so in this case.

[LORD HALDANE referred to the Registration Act and asked whether one could not withdraw the deed once it has been presented but before registration. If it could be withdrawn then the question of undue influence does not arise.]

Sec. 32 of the Registration Act, sec. 35.

[Mr. L. DeGruyther, K. C.—The document could be withdrawn. This has not been challenged in the lower Courts.]

Sec. 47 of the Act. Once it is registered it dates back to date of execution.

[LORD HALDANE.—The other side challenges the validity of registration.]

[LORD HALDANE.—The Judges in the High Court take two points against you.

(1) It was not presented by any one on behalf of the executant. (2) It was no longer a proper document.]

Sec. 32 of the Act.

[LORD HALDANE.—Krishna withdrew his request for registration.]

He wanted to take back the document. Registration was effected under the decree.

[LORD ATKINSON.—The decree gave permission to Plaintiff's next friend to present the document.]

[LORD HALDANE.—The decree says: "duly presented."]

[LORD ATKINSON.—The order was that the documents should be returned to him.]

Messrs. L. DeGruyther, K. C. and K. V. L. Narasimham for the Respondent were not called on.

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by

LORD ATKINSON.—The Appellant, who sues in forma pauperis, is a minor and the second wife of the Respondent. She was also the niece of one Krishna Kamathi, deceased, a man of considerable property, who died on the 14th April 1909. The Respondent is the adopted son of this same Krishna Kamathi. The case made by the Plaintiff was that Krishna Kamathi, being anxious that his line should be perpetuated, pressed the Respondent, who was much attached to his first wife, to marry the Appellant, then a girl only eleven years of age, that the Respondent reluctantly consented to do so, and that the marriage accordingly took place upon the 9th March 1908.

It was alleged to be the custom when these child marriages take place that the wife is not brought to reside in her husband's home till she has reached the age of puberty. However that may be, the Respondent did not bring this wife of his to his home, and in other respects was alleged to have treated her in a way of which Krishna Kamathi so strongly disapproved that he became somewhat incensed against his adopted son. He was the manager of the family property, and, although advanced in years, was admittedly an intelligent man, who managed this property well and looked after all legal matters, such as the institution of suits, etc. On the 30th April 1908, Krishna Kamathi wrote to the Respondent a letter, in which he stated that the latter had recently become disobedient to him and had disregarded him, that it appeared to him the Respondent would behave in the same manner in future, that it did not appear to him, Krishna, proper to live with the Respondent hereafter as a member of an undivided family, and that he had divided the movable and immovable family property into two equal parts, had prepared four lists thereof, and proposed to divide it between himself and his son, in the complicated manner set out in this letter. The Respondent, in answer to this letter, wrote to his adoptive father a letter bearing date the 30th May 1908, in which, after defending himself against the accusations made against him, he suggested that relatives for interested motives had poisoned his father's mind against him, begged of the father not to break up the joint family and divide the family property, but stated that if his father had made up his mind to do so he was ready to take as his share of it the property mentioned in List No. 2.

Krishna Kamathi, in pursuance of the resolution he had formed, employed two pleaders to draw up for him two deeds, dated respectively the 19th and 23rd May 1908. The first is a 'partition deed between him and his son, the Respondent, in which he again sets forth the charges against the latter, as he had already done in the letter already referred to, stating that he had separated and delivered to his son the property in the aforesaid List No. 2, which the latter had accepted, and provided he, the Respondent, should enjoy the immovable and movable property mentioned in that list from generation to generation, he paying the sircar terva and by the entry of kudthala in his, the Respondent's, name. The second deed is a deed of gift to the Appellant, his niece, by which, after reciting that he had effected a partition between himself and his son, of the movable and immovable property, he, Krishna, out of the part of the same which fell to his share, had made to his niece of his own free will, because of the love he had for her, a gift of the movable and immovable property described in a schedule attached thereto and estimated to be of the value of Rs. 15,000. This deed contains the following passage :—

" Though I have given up to you just now the full right of the undermentioned property still as you are now a minor and unable to look to the management of the property, I shall look after the management of the property as your trustee till you become a major, and I shall myself take the rice and cash amount settled to be paid by you each year for my and my wife's maintenance and keep a regular account and spend the amount necessary for the due performance of the Mana Mariyado pertaining to this property and pay the remaining mesne profits to you as soon as you become a major, or I shall get a document executed in your name for such an amount on the safe security of immovable property and deliver the said document to you."

Both these deeds were executed by Krishna Kamathi alone. Neither the Appellant nor her father executed them.

On the 1st June 1908, Krishna Kamathi duly presented both these deeds at the office of the Sub-Registrar of Vittal for registration. Registration, however, did not take place owing to some question as to the amount of stamp duty leviable. This involved a reference to the Registrar of the district, which caused delay. The deeds meanwhile remained with the Sub-Registrar. The Respondent having in the meantime learned that his father had presented these deeds for registration, requested him to obtain a return of them, and the latter accordingly, on the 5th June 1908, presented a petition to the Sub-Registrar praying for a return of the two deeds without their being registered. On the 9th June 1908, Krishna and the Respondent entered into an agreement (Tahanama) to the effect that during their lifetime they would not partition the family property. This agreement was duly registered three days later, namely, on the 12th June 1908. On the 10th June 1908, Ramayya Shanbhogue, the father of the Appellant, presented on her behalf a petition to the said Sub-Registrar objecting to the return to Krishna of the two deeds aforesaid until they had been registered, and informing this official of his, the Petitioner's, intention to institute a suit to secure their compulsory registration.

In answer to this petition the Registrar, on the 19th October 1908, informed the Petitioner that the two before-mentioned deeds would be returned to the presentant, Krishna Kamathi, by the Sub-Registrar of Vittal unless the claimant under the deed of gift obtained an injunction order of a competent Court against their return within one month from the receipt of this notice. Accordingly the minor, Amba Bai, by her father as next friend, instituted a suit (No. 44 of 1908) against Krishna Kamathi and her husband to obtain the suggested relief. The first Defendant, Krishna, then filed a long written statement which is significant in its terms. After admitting that he had executed the two deeds and had presented them for registration, and after stating that his adopted son left his own house and went to reside in the house of his father-in-law at Mangalore for many days, he alleged that Ramayya Shanbhogue, taking advantage of his, Krishna's, old age, diseased and helpless condition, had represented to him that the conduct of his son, the second Defendant, amounted to deliberate disobedience and to a disregard of his, Krishna's, comforts; that his said son intended to abandon him altogether, and if necessary to marry a third girl or to himself adopt a son; that by these fraudulent misrepresentations the Plaintiff, Amba Bai's father, had prevailed upon him, Krishna, to consent to a partition of his property and to make a provision for this girl, his niece, out of his own share; that in this way the two deeds in question were by fraud, misrepresentation and undue influence procured from him, an old man struck with disease. He further alleged that he only became aware of the effect of the two deeds after he had presented them for registration and therefore was entitled to have them returned to him unregistered. And he made the point that the Plaintiff, not being a party to the deed of partition, had no right to maintain a suit for its registration under the Registration Act. It clearly appears from these statements that Krishna Kamathi thus early clearly made the case afterwards strenuously insisted upon that the Plaintiff's father, for the purpose of procuring for his daughter the benefits conferred upon her by the two before-mentioned deeds, exercised upon Krishna undue influence by the insidious method of poisoning his mind against his adopted son. This suit was dismissed as against Shrinivasa, the Appellant's husband, but compromised as between her father on her behalf, and her uncle Krishna. The terms of the compromise were embodied in a deed, dated the 29th March 1909, styled in the proceedings the deed of rectification. By this deed it was provided that Krishna would consent and thereby did consent to the registration of the two deeds, dated 19th May 1908, and 23rd May 1908, respectively, and further that the Appellant should enjoy the partitioned property subject to certain amendments and conditions therein set out. These alterations and conditions seriously modified and diminished the provision made for Amba Bai by the deed of gift of the 29th May 1908. For instance, it burdens the property given to her by the latter instrument with a liability to pay Rs. 360 annually to Krishna's wife, Devi. Though providing that he, Krishna, should continue to be her trustee till her majority, it provides that owing to his ill-health her father should manage the property given to her on her behalf. It further provided that though the property given to her by the deed of gift was to be enjoyed by her from generation to generation, if she and her husband came together and lived amicably, and had children, the property was to be enjoyed on that line in succession; but that if she should have no children, and her Sayathe (co-wife) should have children, this property should be enjoyed by the latter's descendants after her, Amba's, death. Numerous provisions are, in addition, introduced in reference to adoption contingent on the many events named, and then the important provision is introduced that Amba should have no right to alienate the properties given to her in any manner while she behaved herself according to the conditions contained in the deed. This deed was executed by Krishna Kamathi in the presence of many witnesses. It was not executed by Amba Bai nor by her father, Ramayya Shanbhogue, nor by her husband, the Respondent. It is obvious that it supersedes the deed of gift of the 29th May 1908. Its aim, object and effect are substantially different. A decree by consent was accordingly made in the compromised suit on the 31st March 1909, in which, after reciting at length the effect of the compromise, it was ordered and decreed "that the partition deed of the 19th May 1908, and the gift deed of the 23rd May 1908, in dispute be returned to the Plaintiff's next friend for presentation before the Sub-Registrar of Vittal, that the Sub-Registrar do register them if they be duly presented before him for registration within thirty days from this date."

The deed of the 29th March 1909 was duly registered. The two deeds of the 19th and 23rd May 1908, were returned to the Appellant's father and on the 14th April 1909, the day upon which Krishna Kamathi died, were presented by the Appellant's father to the Sub-Registrar and registered.

The suit out of which this appeal has arisen was, on the 17th August 1914, brought by the Appellant, suing in formâ pauperis by her father as her next friend, to recover from her husband possession of the property given to her by the deed of gift of the 29th May 1908. On the 26th November the Defendant filed a written statement in the suit in which the main defences relied upon were (1) that the execution of these two deeds of May 1908 was procured by the misrepresentation, fraud and undue influence of the father of the Plaintiff upon Krishna Kamathi, by which the mind of the latter was poisoned against the Respondent and the said deeds were therefore inoperative and unenforceable and not binding upon him; (2) that the compromise of the suit No. 41 of 1908, and the execution of the deed of the 29th March 1909, respectively, were instituted and procured by similar means, and that the decree made in said suit was void and of no effect; (3) that the deed of gift of the 29th May 1908 was cancelled and annulled by the execution of this rectification deed; and (4) that the registration of the two deeds of May 1908 was invalid and ineffective under the provisions of the Registration Act, and was therefore void ab initio.

The Subordinate Judge found (1) that the two deeds of May 1908 were procured by undue influence by the Appellant's father exercised upon the Respondent's aged father, and were therefore void; (2) that the agreement of the 9th June 1908, entered into between the Respondent and his father was valid, that the deed of rectification was therefore invalid and void, that therefore the Appellant was not entitled to recover possession of the properties mentioned in the plaint; and (3) that the two deeds of May 1908, were validly registered. He in the result dismissed the Plaintiff's suit with costs. On the appeal from this decree to the High Court of Madras, Abdur Rahim, J., concurred with the Subordinate Judge's finding that the two last-mentioned deeds upon which the Appellant's case rested, had been obtained by the undue influence of the Appellant's father. Also that the two deeds were repudiated by Krishna Kamathi before they were registered, that they were not properly presented for registration and were not validly registered.

Oldfield, J., differed from his colleague on the question of the procurement of these deeds by the exercise of undue influence on Krishna Kamathi, but agreed with him in the view that Krishna had the right to revoke the deed of gift of the 23rd May 1908, and had revoked it, and both of these learned Judges held that under the provision of the 32nd section of the Registration Act, the two deeds of May 1908, were not validly registered. They accordingly affirmed the judgment of the Subordinate Judge.

Their Lordships do not think it necessary to pronounce any decision on the question upon which these two learned Judges differed. It was not and is not disputed that these two deeds cannot be given in evidence or enforced if they have not been duly registered. Their Lordships are clearly of opinion that as the Appellant was not only a minor but a married woman, her father had ceased to be her natural guardian, and had never been appointed her legal guardian, and was not therefore her assignee or representative within the meaning of sec. 3 of the Registration Act, 1877. He was not an executant of the said deeds or either of them; neither was within the meaning of sec. 34 of that Act, the representative assign or agent duly authorised on the behalf of Krishna Kamathi deceased, the only executant. The presentation by him of the two deeds for registration was in direct conflict with the express provisions of this 34th section. The deeds were consequently never legally registered. The registration of them which was procured was illegal, invalid and a nullity; and if that be so, as in their Lordships' opinion it must be held to be, it is not disputed that the deeds would be void and unenforceable, and this apart altogether from the question whether they have not been impliedly revoked by the agreement dated the 9th of June 1908, entered into between Krishna Kamathi and the Respondent and duly registered by the former on the 12th of June 1908. It is therefore unnecessary for their Lordships to expressly decide this latter question. They are of opinion that owing to the invalidity of the registration of the two deeds of May 1908, the appeal fails and must be dismissed, and they will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly.

Registration Act (III of 1877), sec. 17 (1)—Document whether Will or an authority to adopt—Registration compulsory if latter.

ANANGA BHEEMA DEO v. KUNJA BEHARI DEO.

The operative part of a document which the writer called a "Will" stated that having, owing to severe illness, had serious misgivings and not having been blessed with an heir apparent, the writer had consented to his wife adopting a son at her pleasure and conducting the management of the estate in the best manner:

Held—That the document was not a Will but only a power to adopt and as such ought to have been registered as being an authority to adopt a son, not conferred by a Will within the meaning of sec. 17 (1) of the Registration Act of 1877.

This was an appeal against a judgment and decree of the High Court of Judicature at Madras, dated the 12th September 1918, affirming a judgment and decree of the District Court of Ganjam at Berhampur, dated the 12th March 1918.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

Mr. L. DeGruyther, K. C. (with Mr. Kenworthy Brown) for the Appellant.

The Hon'ble Sir William Finlay, K. C. (with Mr. J. M. Parikh) for the Respondent said that there was a short point in the case and if their Lordships are with him on that point the other issues need not be argued.

Mr. Kenworthy Brown (who was called on to argue this short point of the construction of a Will) said:—It is clear the document was not intended to and did not operate de presenti. If the deed is not a will then it must be registered under sec. 17, Indian Registration Act of 1877. The lower Courts held the document was void as it was not registered.

The cases relied on are—Bhoobun Moyce Debia v. Ram Kishore Acharj Chowdhry (1), Somansundara Mudaly v. Duraisami Mudaliar (2) and Seshamma v. Olinnappa (3).

I say the document is really a Will as the deceased refers to it as a "Will." It is in favour of his wife. He also speaks of "executors."

Sir William Finlay.—This is an authority to adopt. The fact that the document is a Will has to be established apart from this. I am not pressed to say that this is not a Will for other purposes.

Mr. K. Brown.—I proceeded on the assumption that the adoption was not to take place till after death.

Sir William Finlay.—That does not affect my point.

Mr. Parikh was called on to state whether an authority to adopt de presenti could be given and he cited Mayne's Hindu Law and the authorities referred to therein.

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by

VISCOUNT HALDANE.—This case is an important one, and but for a preliminary point on which it turns, might have been a long one. There is, however, a preliminary question which goes to the root of the appeal. Sri Sri Brojo Kishore Deo executed a document in favour of his wife on the 14th August 1906. He called it a Will, in the body of the document; but its only operative contents are to be found in the words which follow:—

"I have been laid up with severe bodily illness for about the last seven months. Consequently having had serious misgivings, and not having until now been blessed with an heir-apparent for want of divine favour, I have consented to your adopting a son at your pleasure and conducting the management of the estate in the best manner. None of my heirs shall have cause to raise disputes touching this matter. This Will has been executed with my consent."

(3) I. L. R. 20 Mad. 467 (1897).

(1) 10 M. I. A. 279 at p. 309 (1885).

ANANGA BHEEMA DEO v. KUNJA BEHARI DEO.

It will be observed that what is said by the writer of the document is that having had serious misgivings, and not having been until now, blessed with an heir apparent, he has consented to his wife adopting a son at her pleasure, and conducting the management of the estate in the best manner. That standing by itself appears to their Lordships to be no more than a present authority to the wife to make an adoption, and there is nothing else of substance in the document. It may be that the writer was in a position under the law applicable to give her such power, but whether he was or was not, he purports to give her nothing else; for the references to property that occur in it are no more than consequences of the guardianship of the wife, and the character of being a Will is not established independently of these. Their Lordships therefore agree with the learned Judges in the Court of Appeal in thinking that the document is not a Will, but only a power to adopt, and as such ought to have been registered as being an authority to adopt a son, not conferred by a Will within the meaning of sec. 17 (l) of the Registration Act of 1877.

Their Lordships will, therefore, humbly advise His Majesty that this appeal should be dismissed with costs.

VISCOUNT HALDANE THIRUVENKATASAMI
LORD ATKINSON. IYENGAR and anr.,
SIR JOHN EDGE. Appellants,
1921, v.

Heard, 3, May. PAVADAI PILLAY and Judgment, 26, May. ors., Respondents.

Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), secs. 36, 37—Party within jurisdiction—Pleader appointed not by party but by agent acting under special power of attorney—Pleader, if must be appointed by recognised agent.

Certain decree-holders who were resident within the local limits of the jurisdiction of the Court to which the application for execution was to be made executed a special power of attorney in favour of one R authorising him on their behalf inter alia to "execute vakalat to vakils to sign execution petitions and put in affidavits and to conduct all necessary proceedings," and the application for execution was signed and filed by a pleader who was appointed by a vakalat executed by R:

Held—That the pleader was duly appointed on behalf of the decree-holders within the meaning of sec. 36 of Act XIV of 1882, sec. 37 not applying to the case.

The possessive pronoun "his" in the expression "pleader duly appointed to act on his behalf" refers to the party and not to his intermediary or agent.

This was an appeal from the judgment of the High Court of Madras, dated the 25th November 1910, which affirmed a decree of the Subordinate Judge of Kumbakonam, dated the 30th September 1907.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

Mr. Kenworthy Brown for the Appellants referred to secs. 36 and 37 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1882.

The petition was duly signed. The view to the contrary is based on a wrong construction of secs. 36 and 37 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1882. Again a duly appointed recognised agent can appoint a pleader although principals are within District. What was done did not purport to come within sec. 37. The parties were within jurisdiction. Therefore initial conditions in sec. 37 were not present. Recognised agent under sec. 37 is different. The position of agent is conferred by power of attorney executed on 8th September 1902, which ran thus :—

“As we have hereby fully empowered you to conduct Execution Proceedings in Tanjore Sub-Court on our behalf in E. P. No. 14 of 1891 on the file of Tanjore Sub-Court in O. S. No. 4 of 1884 on the file of Kumbakonam Sub-Court for the said temple against the Defendants in the said suit, namely, Chidambaram Pillay and others, to execute Vakalat to Vakils to sign Execution Petitions and put in affidavit and to conduct all necessary proceedings, all proceedings conducted by you orally and in writing in connection therewith shall be approved of by us though they were done by us.”

He is agent for purpose of appointing a vakil: Badri Prasad v. Bhagabati Dhar (1) covers this case.

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by

LORD ATKINSON.—This is an appeal against the judgment and decree of the High Court of Judicature at Madras, dated the 25th November 1910, which affirmed the decree of the Subordinate Judge of Kumbakonam, dated the 30th September 1907, and made on an execution petition No. 279 of 1905.

The Appellants are the punchayetdars or trustees of a temple and as such hold a decree for mesne profits against the Respondents or their predecessors in title.

Their petition praying for the execution of this decree was dismissed by the Subordinate Judge, and his judgment was upheld by the High Court. From this latter decision the decree-holders have brought this appeal.

There were nine Plaintiffs originally in the suit. All but three of them have died or resigned or been removed from the trusteeship.

The Appellants, to use the words of sec. 37 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1882, are resident within the local limits of the jurisdiction of the Court within which limits the application by petition was to be made, and the sale applied for carried out. The case of the Appellants does not come within any one of the sub-sections of sec. 37. The execution petition No. 279 of 1905 was not signed by any of the Appellants. It was signed by a pleader appointed in writing to make the application embodied in the petition, and that writing was filed in the Court.

Both the High Court of Madras and the Subordinate Judge of Kumbakonam held that this petition was not validly presented because, to use the words of the judgment of the High Court, “the person who executed the vakalat to the pleader to act on his behalf was not a recognised agent of the decree-holder as defined under sec. 37 of the Civil Procedure Code, 1882, and could not have presented the application for execution himself. Under sec. 36 of the Civil Procedure Code the pleader appointed can only do what might be done by the party on whose behalf he is appointed.” The only question for their Lordships' decision is whether the construction in this passage put upon secs. 36 and 37 of the Code of Civil Procedure is their true construction. Their Lordships do not think it is their true construction for this reason: that it confounds the intending litigant, the pleader's client, with the intermediary by whom, as the agent of that litigant, the pleader is appointed to act on the litigant's behalf. The pleader is not appointed, on behalf of the intermediary or agent, to act on the agent's behalf, but by the agent on behalf of his principal, the litigant, to act on the litigant's behalf. The litigant is at once the principal of the agent and the client of the pleader. The lines of sec. 36 of the Code of Civil Procedure immediately preceding the proviso run thus : "be made or done by the party in person or by his recognised agent or by a pleader duly appointed to act on his behalf." The possessive pronoun his all through this sentence refers to the "party," i.e., the litigant, not the intermediary or agent.

This construction gives a reasonable and natural meaning to the provisions of sec. 36. The application is to be made or done by the party in person or by the recognised agent of the party in person, or by the duly appointed pleader of the party in person, while the other construction would leave entirely uncovered the case where the party himself in person without the intervention of any agent duly appoints his own pleader to act on his own behalf.

In the present case, the Appellants on the 8th September 1902, executed, not a general power of attorney, but a special power of attorney in favour of one Raghava Naicken, authorising him on their behalf to, amongst other things :—

"execute vakalat to vakils to sign execution petitions, and put in affidavits and to conduct all necessary proceedings" in this suit. On the same day this same Raghava Naicken, the Appellants' agent, authorised the pleader to appear in the Tanjore Court to present the execution petition verified by him, the agent, to examine witnesses, argue, etc. No doubt the words run : "to appear on my behalf in the Tanjore Court," and he describes himself as general agent of the Appellants under a general power of attorney, but that was a misrecital. The power of attorney was not a general power of attorney, but a special one, and the words, "on my behalf" are misleading. The execution petition was to be presented on behalf of the Appellants, they were the only persons who had the right to put the decree into execution and have the property of the debtors attached and sold.

Their Lordships are therefore of opinion that the judgment appealed from as well as that of the Subordinate Judge which it affirmed were erroneous, and should be reversed, and a declaration made that the Appellants' decree should be put into execution. They will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly.

The Respondents will pay the costs of the appeal.

APPEAL FROM ORIGINAL DECREE

No. 84 of 1920.

MOOKERJEE, J.	}	RAJENDRA LAL GHOSE,
BUCKLAND, J.		Plaintiff, Appellant,
1921,		v.
22, March		SRIMATI MRINALINI DASI and ors., Defend- ants, Respondents.

Will, construction of—Legacy on a condition precedent, if takes effect when the condition by reason of subsequent events becomes impossible of performance—Intention of the testator, to be the guiding principle.

A testator bequeathed a sum of money to some of his relatives asking them to re-excavate a tank with the money and take the surplus. But the testator himself re-excavated the tank before his death :

RAJENDRA LAL GHOSE v. SRIMATI MRINALINI DAS.

Held—That the re-excavation of the tank was a condition precedent, i.e., there was no gift intended unless the condition was fulfilled. The ascertainment of the testator's intention shown by the Will cannot be varied by events which occur afterwards. That intention must be determined from the terms of the bequest, and where the performance of the condition appears to be the motive of the bequest the impracticability of the performance will be a bar to the claims of the legatee. In such a case the bequest does not take effect, discharged of the condition.

DARLEY v. LANGWORTHY (1), GATH v. BURTON (2), WEDGWOOD v. DENTON (3) and LOWTHER v. CAVENDISH (7) and other cases referred to.

This was an appeal against the decree of Babu Lal Behary Chatterji, Subordinate Judge, 2nd Court, of Zillah Hooghly, dated the 6th April 1920.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

MOOKERJEE, J.—This is an appeal by the Plaintiff in a suit for construction of a Will executed by his step-brother Nataraj Ghose. The substantial controversy between the parties relates to the construction of cl. (5) of the Will which is in the following terms : "That I have some tezarati karbar in my own name and in the benami of my son Girish Chandra Ghose. After my death my said step-brother Sriman Rajendra Lal Ghose and his sons, etc., in succession shall realise either amicably or by suits, the amounts that may remain due from my debtors and with the said money and with the Government Promissory Notes that may be left by me, they shall re-excavate in my name, the tank known as Panja tank belonging to us in village Khorda Cawnpore and remove thereby the water difficulty of the public. Whatever will remain surplus, after defraying the said expenses, shall be obtained by my said brother and his sons, etc. If he does not re-excavate the said tank in my name, then my three married daughters Srimati Mrinalini Dasi, Srimati Bibhabati Dasi and Srimati Rashmani Dasi, and after them my daughters' sons, shall realise the money of the tezarati karbar and with the said money and with the Government Promissory Notes that may be left by me, they shall re-excavate the said tank in my name; and if any surplus be left, it will be obtained by the married daughters and widowed daughter Srimati Nikunja Dasi and daughter-in-law Srimati Subhasini Dasi in equal shares."

It appears that after the execution of the Will and before his death the testator re-excavated the tank. Consequently it is no longer possible for the legatee to fulfil the condition imposed in the Will. There can be no question that according to the true construction of this clause this is a condition precedent, that is to say, there is no gift intended at all unless and until the condition is fulfilled. At the time when the Will was executed the condition was not impossible of performance but by reason of event subsequent, the condition has now become impossible; for, the testator himself re-excavated the tank after he had executed the Will and before his death. Consequently at the time of his death, when the testamentary disposition came into operation, the legatee could not re-excavate the tank. The contention of the legatee is that the condition has been discharged by the act of the testator himself and he can accordingly claim the legacy as if the condition had never been imposed. He invokes in substance the aid of the doctrine that the donee may not be bound by a condition imposed by the Will, where on account of the acts of the testator or other events subsequent to the date of the Will the effect is that substantially the condition is performed or nullified in the testator's life-time or that substantially the testator has dispensed with the condition or has put performance out of the power of the donee. As an illustration of the application of this principle, reference has been made to the decision of the House of Lords in Darley v. Langworthy (1), where there was a bequest of chattels at a mansion house conditional on residence there. The testator afterwards suffered recovery of the estate; it was ruled that the wife was entitled to the use of the furniture discharged of the condition which the recovery had put out of her power to perform. Reference has also been made to other cases of the same type such as Gath v. Burton (2), (condition requiring payment of debt held satisfied by testator accepting composition); Wedgwood v. Denton (3), (surrender of term followed by acceptance of new term); Walker v. Walker (4), (condition requiring conveyance by donee fulfilled by purchase by testator of donee's interest) and Re Park (5), (marriage with testator's consent). There are remarks in some of these cases suggesting that the true principle is not that of considering that the condition has been fulfilled but that the donees are exempt from the condition altogether so that the Will must be read as if there were no condition. But this view may militate against the principle that the ascertainment of the testator's intention shown by the Will cannot be varied by events which occur afterwards; see the observations of Wood V. C. in Re Clarke's Trusts (6). That intention must be determined from the terms of the bequest, and where the performance of the condition appears to be the motive of the bequest the impracticability of the performance will be a bar to the claim of the legatee. In such a case the bequest does not take effect, discharged of the condition. Reference may in this connection be made to Lowther v. Cavendish (7) and Priestly v. Holgate (8), which afford illustrations of the principle that where a condition precedent becomes impossible to be performed even though there be no fault or laches on the part of the devisee himself, the devise fails. The case before us is clearly of this description. The motive of the testator was that the water difficulty felt by the people of the locality should be removed and that this should be effected by the re-excavation of the tank in his name, to be accomplished by means of the funds placed by him at the disposal of the legatee. The essence of the intention consequently was that the legacy should be applied in the re-excavation of the tank; and as an inducement to the legatee to carry out this injunction, the testator provided that the surplus should belong to the legatee or his representative in interest. By reason of events over which the legatee had no control, the re-excavation of the tank has become impossible and unnecessary, in other words, the motive of the bequest had ceased to exist at the date of the death of the testator, whence the Will takes effect. If we test the matter from a plain common sense point of view, we may put the question whether, if the Will had been made at the time of the death of the testator, he would have inserted this particular provision therein. The answer must obviously be in the negative. As the tank had already been re-excavated by him, he could not very well impose the obligation either upon the Plaintiff or upon his daughters to re-excavate it. The substance of the matter is that the purpose which he had in view was not then in existence; it is consequently impossible for us to hold that the Will intended that even in such circumstances the bequest should take effect. We are of opinion accordingly that the clause has been correctly construed by the Court below and that this appeal must be dismissed with costs.

No. 180 OF 1917.

MOOKERJEE, J.	}	YASIN ALI MIRDHA

1919,		Appellants,

Judgment,		DHURI and ors., Defend-

Assam Land and Revenue Regulation (I of 1886), sec. 97, partition of an estate, the lands of which, in whole or in part, are joint with those of other estates—Jurisdiction of Revenue Courts—Sec. 96, imperfect partition—Mode in which lands of an estate are held, if material to the jurisdiction of Court to effect partition—Modus operandi of partition—Interpretation of statutes—Sec. 154, jurisdiction of Civil Courts.

Plaintiffs brought a suit for declaration that an order for partition of an estate made by the revenue authorities was without jurisdiction and was consequently inoperative in law on the ground that some of the lands of the estate sought to be partitioned were joint with the lands of other estates, and the revenue authorities were not competent under the Assam Land and Revenue Regulation, 1886, to effect a partition of lands included in several estates:

Held—That sec. 97 of the Regulation confers upon every recorded proprietor of a permanently settled estate, subject to the qualifications specified therein, the right to claim a partition of the estate. It makes no reference directly or by implication, to the mode in which the lands of the estate are held. The duty is imposed upon the Revenue Court to effect a partition of an estate on an application by a person competent to claim partition under sec. 97. The first step in the performance of that duty is to ascertain the lands which constitute that estate. To carry out this preliminary step, it may conceivably be necessary to have recourse to an ancillary measure, namely, to effect a partition of the joint lands of the several estates and thereby to ascertain the lands which belongs to the estate under partition. It is a well-known rule of interpretation of statutes that where a statute confers jurisdiction, it impliedly grants also the power to do such acts, adopt such measures, and employ such means as are essentially necessary to its execution.

and BRAJENDRA KISHORE v. KALIKUMAR (6) referred to.

It cannot be maintained that the joint lands should first be divided by a Civil Court, as then the result would follow that the Civil Court would in essence be called upon to constitute an estate for the purpose of partition under sec. 97 and consequently to deal with a matter which affects the Government revenue and is excluded from its jurisdiction by sec. 154 (1) (f) of the Regulation.

GOURI KRISHNA v. SABANANDA (5) dislinguished.

This was an appeal from a decision of Babu Upendra Chandra Mukherjee, Subordinate Judge, Sylhet, dated the 24th April 1917.

The facts will fully appear from the judgment.

Babus Dwarkanath Chakravarty, Debendra Narayan Bhattacharyee and Promotho-nath Banerjee for the Appellants.

Dr. Sarat Chandra Basak and Babus Rajendar Chandra Guha and Hemendra Kumar Das for the Respondents.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

This is an appeal by the Plaintiffs in a suit for declaration that an order for partition of an estate made by the Sub-Divisional Officer of Sunamgunj on the 15th April 1913 and confirmed successively by the Deputy Commissioner of Sylhet on the 14th July 1913, by the Commissioner on the 9th December 1913 and by the Chief Commissioner on the 22nd November 1914, was without jurisdiction and was consequently inoperative in law. The case for the Plaintiffs is that they objected to the applications for partition presented by the Defendants to the revenue authorities on the ground that some of the lands of the estates sought to be partitioned were joint with the lands of other estates and the revenue authorities were not competent, under the Assam Land and Revenue Regulation, 1886, to effect a partition of lands included in several estates. This objection was overruled as untenable. The substantial matter in controversy in the present litigation, is the question of the legality of the order made by the revenue authorities. The Subordinate Judge has held that the decision of the Revenue Court was not ultra vires and that the Plaintiffs were not entitled to the declaration and injunction asked for in the plaint.

To appreciate the true position reference may be made to the application for imperfect partition, which was presented on the 31st October 1911 by the first two Defendants, and may be regarded as typical, as the applications presented by the third Defendant on the 21st February 1912 and by the fourth Defendant on the 22nd March 1912 respectively may be treated, for the solution of the question raised before us, as similar in scope and purpose. The application of the first two Defendants describes the estate to be divided as Taluk Krishnamani (No. 24,202/12) appertaining to Perganah Pagla, total revenue Rs. 6-3 as. Then follows the statement that Account No. 1 of that Mehal stands in the names of the Petitioners and bears the total revenue Rs. 4-2 as. This indicates that the applicant's own two-thirds share in the Taluk. The next column specifies the Mouzas included in the estate, namely, Dekharhant, Dhamdharpur, and Kastachpur. The fourth column states that the applicants have a two-thirds share of the original Mehal. Then follow in the sixth column the names of the other sharers with their respective shares. In the seventh column it is prayed that the lands of the original

YASIN ALI MIRDHA v. RADHAGOBINDA CHOWDHURI.

Mehal, the subject-matter of the application, may be imperfectly partitioned and an allotment in respect of two-thirds share may be made in favour of the applicants. The eighth column contains the important statement that the lands of the original Mehal in respect of which the application is made are joint with six Mehals (names and numbers specified). The applicants pray that the lands of the original Mehal in respect of which this prayer is made may be separated from those of the other Mehals and the same may be partitioned, and, treating it as 16 annas, the applicants may be given an allotment representing two-thirds of 16 annas. Then follows the statement that the proprietors of the joint Mehals have all been made parties to the proceeding. The question thus arises, whether the Revenue Court has jurisdiction to effect a partition of an estate when the lands of that estate, in whole or in part, are joint with the lands of other estates.

The answer to the question in controversy must depend primarily upon the true construction of the provisions of the Assam Land and Revenue Regulation. Sec. 3, cl. (b) furnishes a definition of an estate; it includes, amongst other things, any land subject, either immediately or prospectively, to the payment of land revenue, for the discharge of which a separate engagement has been entered into. Sec. 96 which finds a place in the sixth Chapter devoted to partition and union of revenue-paying estates, classifies partition as either perfect or imperfect. Perfect partition means the division of a revenue-paying estate into two or more such estates, each separately liable for the revenue assessed thereon. Imperfect partition means the division of a revenue-paying estate into two or more portions jointly liable for the revenue assessed on the entire estate. Sec. 97 defines the persons entitled to partition and is in these terms:—

Every recorded proprietor of a permanently settled estate and every recorded land-holder of a temporarily settled estate, may, if he is in actual possession of the interest, in respect of which he desires partition, claim perfect or imperfect partition of the estate:

Provided that (a) no person shall be entitled to apply for perfect partition if the result of such partition would be to form a separate estate, liable for an annual amount of revenue less than five rupees;

(b) no person shall be entitled to apply for imperfect partition of an estate unless with the consent of recorded co-sharers holding in the aggregate more than one-half of the estate;

(c) a person may claim partition, only in so far as the partition can be effected in accordance with the provisions of this Chapter.

(2) When two or more proprietors or land-holders would be entitled under sub-sec. (1) to partition in respect of their respective interests in the estate, they may jointly claim partition in respect of the aggregate of their interests."

It is plain that, subject to the restrictions specified in the proviso, every recorded proprietor of a permanently settled estate and every recorded land-holder of a temporarily settled estate may, if he is in actual possession of the interest in respect of which he desires partition, claim perfect or imperfect partition of the estate. The Plaintiffs contend that in order to entitle the revenue Court to effect a partition under sec. 97, the land comprised in the estate must be land which exclusively belongs to that estate; in other words, if any portion of the lands of an estate is joint land of that and other estates, sec. 97 ceases to be applicable.

YASIN ALI MIRDHA v. RADHAGOBINDA CHOWDHURI.

The Defendants contend, on the other hand, that the construction put forward by the Plaintiffs narrows the operation of the section in a manner not justified by its language. After a careful consideration of the language of the section, we have arrived at the conclusion that the contention of the Plaintiffs should not prevail. The section confers upon every recorded proprietor of a permanently settled estate, subject to the qualifications specified therein, the right to claim a partition of the estate. It makes no reference, directly or by implication, to the mode in which the lands of the estate are held. If all the lands included in the estate belong exclusively to that estate, no difficulty admittedly arises. But if some or all of the lands included in the estate are the joint lands of several estates, there is no reason in principle why the right to claim partition should be negatived. The duty is imposed upon the Revenue Court to effect a partition of an estate on an application by a person competent to claim partition under sec. 97. It is plain that the first step in the performance of that duty is to ascertain the lands which constitute that estate. To carry out this preliminary step, it may conceivably be necessary to have recourse to an ancillary measure, namely, to effect a partition of the joint lands of the several estates and thereby to ascertain the lands which belong to the estate under partition. The Plaintiffs had contended that this view is open to the objection that it may enable the parties to do that indirectly which cannot be done directly. If a partition were claimed of the portion which constitutes the joint lands of several estates, the application would be forthwith refused, because those joint lands do not constitute an estate within the meaning of the Assam Land and Revenue Regulation. This may be conceded; but no valid objection in principle can be taken to the procedure indicated. It is a well-known rule of interpretation of statutes that where a statute confers jurisdiction, it impliedly grants also the power to do such acts, adopt such measures, and employ such means as are essentially necessary to its execution. If the legislature had intended that the Revenue Court should have authority to effect a partition of such estates alone as do not include lands joint with other estates, a suitably restricted phraseology might easily have been framed to indicate that view. On the other hand, there is a serious objection to the contention put forward by the Plaintiffs. If it be maintained that the joint land should first be divided by a Civil Court, the result would follow that the Civil Court would in essence be called upon to constitute an estate for the purpose of partition under sec. 97 and consequently to deal with a matter which affects the Government revenue and is excluded from its jurisdiction by sec. 154 (J) (f) of the Regulation. But, in this Regulation as in other legislative enactments of this description, the policy is consistently followed that the partition of an estate which affects the distribution of the revenue should be effected not by a Civil Court but by the appropriate Revenue Court. To take another illustration—Suppose a partition has been effected of an estate and four new estates A, B, C, D have thereby been created in such a way that some lands of the estates are joint, though each estate constitutes a separate entity in the revenue records. If, in course of time, estate A passes into the hands of several persons who find it necessary to seek a partition, perfect or imperfect, no partition can according to the Plaintiffs be effected, because a partition is not permissible when the lands of an estate (e.g., A) are joint with the lands of other estates (e.g., B, C, D). If the argument of the Appellants were to prevail, no partition, perfect or imperfect, could be made of lands included at one time in an estate which has later formed the subject-matter of partition keeping some of the lands joint. The Court would be slow to place so narrow a construction upon the Regulation and thereby largely restrict the application of its provisions, unless the language used by the legislature left no escape from such a position.

In view of all this, the Appellants have been indeed driven to suggest that neither the Civil Court nor the Revenue Court is competent to effect a partition under these circumstances. Reference has been made to the provisions of sec. 13 of the Reg. VIII of 1800 and sec. 4 of Reg. XIX of 1814 to show that no partition by revenue authorities was possible in respect of lands common to several estates, and our attention has been invited to the cases of Durgakanta v. Radha Mohun (1) and Omashchandra v. Manikchandra (2), which affirmed the proposition that when land was held in joint possession, each proprietor receiving his portion of the rent according to his interest in the land, it could not, under the partition Regulation of 1814, be divided either by the Civil Courts or by the revenue authorities—not by the former, because such partition might endanger the Government revenue, nor by the latter because such a partition was not contemplated by the Partition Regulation. It has also been suggested that with a view to remove this difficulty, Act VIII of 1876, B. C., included a provision in sec. 112 for partition of lands common to two or more estates, which has been subsequently reproduced in sec. 84 of Act V of 1897, B. C. The Plaintiffs have contended that, by an oversight, the framers of the Assam Land and Revenue Regulation did not embody a similar provision therein. We are of opinion that, this assumption, even if well-founded, is of no real assistance in the solution of the question before us, because neither sec. 112 of Act VIII of 1876 nor sec. 84 of Act V of 1897 would have covered the contingency which has arisen here. We prefer accordingly to base our judgment upon an examination of the provisions of the Assam Land and Revenue Regulation.

We may observe that our conclusion is in harmony with what has been recognised as settled law for nearly a quarter of a century. In Abdul Khalek Ahmed v. Abdul Khalek Choudhry (3), Banerjee and Gordon, JJ., ruled that in a suit for partition, without division of revenue, of lands held jointly by the parties in four different estates, governed by the Assam Land and Revenue Regulation, although the division asked for might not include all the lands of each of the four estates, the suit was in reality one for an imperfect partition, because such division would result in a division of each of those estates, the lands left out forming one portion and the lands sought to be divided forming another. The suit was accordingly deemed barred under sec. 154, cl. (e) of the Assam Land and Revenue Regulation, which provides that no Civil Court shall exercise jurisdiction in the matter of claims of persons to imperfect partition, except in cases in which a perfect partition could not be claimed from and has been refused by the revenue authorities on the ground that the result of such partition would be to form a separate estate liable for an annual amount of revenue less than Rs. 5. The Plaintiffs have contended that the expression of opinion contained in this judgment is in the nature of an obiter dictum. We are not prepared to adopt that view, because the reason assigned was essential to justify the conclusion. A similar view was taken by Macpherson and Ameer Ali, JJ., in Sarat Chandra v. Prokash Chandra (4), where it was ruled that an estate does not cease to be an entire estate within the meaning of the Assam Land and Revenue Regulation, because a few plots of land are common to it and some other estate or because they are held in some undefined way jointly with other persons. The result followed that where a suit was brought for the partition of an estate, excluding certain portions as being held jointly by third persons, the jurisdiction of the Civil Court was still barred by sec. 154 of the Regulation. These decisions have, so far as we can discover, never been questioned, and we are not prepared at this distance of time, to treat the matter as if it were res integra. Reference has also been made to the decision in Gouri Krishna v. Sabanunda Sarma (5), which, however, is clearly distinguishable. It was there ruled that a suit for the partition of certain specific plots of land situated within a revenue-paying estate in Assam, the Plaintiff having no joint interest in the other lands of the estate, is not covered by sec. 154 of the Assam Land and Revenue Regulation and is cognizable by the Civil Court, as the revenue authorities have no jurisdiction to make such a partition. We need not pause to consider, whether this may be reconciled with the principle involved in the two decisions previously mentioned. But it is plain that the view taken by the majority does not militate against the conclusion that an estate does not cease to be an estate within the meaning of the Assam Land and Revenue Regulation, merely because its lands are held jointly with the lands of other estates, provided it fulfils the requirements of the definition given in sec. 3. The proposition adopted by us is identical with that formulated in Brajendra Kishore v. Kalikumar (6). But we have not placed reliance upon that case as one of the arguments assigned in support of the decision appears on examination to be incorrect. It was assumed in that case that the Assam Land and Revenue Regulation repealed the Bengal Partition Act, VIII of 1876, which in reality was not repealed by the Regulation, for the simple reason that it was never in force in Assam; indeed, it could not be, as it was passed by the Bengal Legislative Council after the separation of Assam in 1874. The Partition Law in force when the Assam Regulation came into operation was Reg. XIX of 1814, which was repealed by sec. 2. But although we cannot thus adopt the reasoning in the case of Brajendra Kishore v. Kalikumar (6), we have reached the same conclusion on other grounds.

The result is that the decree of the Subordinate Judge is affirmed and this appeal dismissed with costs.

Art. 109 of the Limitation Act, include receipts of profits that cannot be legally substantiated.

It was held in a suit between the purchaser at a mortgage sale and the holder of a usufructuary mortgage granted by the mortgagor after the passing of the mortgage decree that the usufructuary mortgage was void as against the purchaser owing to the application of the doctrine of lis pendens. The purchaser having sued the usufructuary mortgagee to recover rents realised by the latter from certain tenants of the property before the Plaintiff obtained possession under his purchase :

Held—That Art. 109 of the Limitation Act applied to the case.

This was an appeal preferred on the 8th November 1919 against a decree of the District Judge of Zilla Bankura (S. C. Mallik, Esq.), dated the 3rd July 1919, affirming a decree of the Subordinate Judge of that District (Babu Sarat Kishore Bose), dated the 11th October 1917.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

Babu Nagendranath Ghose for the Appellant.

Babus Kalikinkar Chakravartty, Panchanon Ghose and Monindra K. Bose for the Respondents.

THE JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

This appeal arises out of a suit for recovery of rents realised by the Defendant from certain tenants in respect of certain lands purchased by the Plaintiff at a sale held in execution of a mortgage decree obtained by two persons, Digambar Pal and Gopinath Daripa.

It appears that subsequent to the decree obtained by the mortgagee, the mortgagor granted a usufructuary mortgage in favour of the Defendant. The Defendant entered into possession of the property under it and realised rent from certain tenants of the property. The Plaintiff, after his purchase at the sale held in execution of the mortgage decree, obtained possession of the property through the Court from the Defendant, and then brought the suit out of which this appeal arises for recovery of monies realised by the Defendant from the tenants for certain kists of Jaist and Bhadro 1320, Fusli.

It is found that the Defendant's usufructuary mortgage was pendente lite and, as such, invalid as against the Plaintiff. The Plaintiff describes the Defendant in the plaint as a trespasser.

One of the questions raised in the case was whether the suit was barred by limitation; and, if so, which article of the Limitation Act was applicable to the case?

The Plaintiff contended that Art. 120 was the proper article; while the Defendant contended that it was Art. 62.

The Court of Appeal below held that Art. 62 did not apply and that Art. 120 was the proper article applicable to the case.

The Defendant has appealed to this Court and has contended that the proper article applicable to the suit is Art. 109 but even if that is not applicable, Art. 62 should be held to apply and in any case Art. 120 is not applicable to the suit.

We are of opinion that the first contention is correct, and that Art. 109 is the proper article applicable to the suit.

That article provides a period of three years' limitation for a suit for recovery of profits of immoveable property belonging to the Plaintiff which have been wrongfully received by the Defendant.

There is no doubt that the monies received by the Defendant are profits of immoveable property and, upon the finding, those profits belong to the Plaintiff.

NAGENDRA NATH PAL v. SARAT KAMINI DAS.

It is contended, however, on behalf of the Respondent that those profits cannot be said to have been wrongfully received by the Defendant at the time they were received; because at that time, the Defendant claimed to realise them as usufructuary mortgagee. But as stated above, that mortgage was invalid as against the Plaintiff; the words "wrongfully received" in Art. 109 include receipt of profits that cannot legally be substantiated.

In the case of Peary Mohon Roy v. Khelaram Sarkar (1), a suit was instituted by the owner of a putni for recovery of mesne profits against the Defendant who had purchased the putni at a sale under Reg. VIII of 1819 and had been in possession under the purchase which was subsequently set aside. It was held that the Defendant wrongfully received the profits which were receivable by the Plaintiff and that Art. 109 and not Art. 120 governed the case.

Our attention has been drawn on behalf of the Respondent to the case of Bhubaneswar Bhattacharjee v. Darkeswar Bhattacharjee (2). But that was a case in which a suit was brought by a co-sharer landlord against another for a share of the paddy rent collected by the latter the paddy rent being due in respect of lands held by the co-sharers not separately but jointly, and different considerations would arise in a case of this kind as the receipt of rent by the co-sharer was not wrongful.

We are accordingly of opinion that Art. 109 is applicable to the suit. That article lays down that the period of three years is to be counted from the time when the profits are received.

In this case there is no finding when the profits were received.

The case must accordingly be sent back to the lower Appellate Court in order that that matter may be inquired into.

If the profits were received within three years, the question of limitation must be decided in favour of the Plaintiff.

The learned Pleader for the Respondent has contended that even if the profits were received beyond the three years before the date of the institution of the suit, the Court should consider whether limitation was suspended or not; because the sale at which the Plaintiff purchased was on a later date, i.e., on some date within three years of the suit. This question, however, was not raised in the Courts below, and all the materials for deciding the question whether there should or should not be any suspension of limitation in the case are not before us. We, therefore, think that if the Court below finds that the profits were received more than three years before the date of the suit, this question will be gone into by that Court.

It is contended on behalf of the Appellant that even if the suit is not barred by limitation, the rent ought to be apportioned between the Defendant and the Plaintiff, having regard to the principle embodied in sec. 36 of the Transfer of Property Act. This question will also be considered by the Court below.

The case is accordingly sent back to the lower Appellate Court for disposal according to law, having regard to the observations made above.

Costs to abide the result.

No. 1088 of 1919.

Suit in ejectment—Homestead within Municipal limits forming part of non-transferable occupancy holding sold to a pleader for residential and professional purposes—Recognition by landlord on receipt of salami, rent previously paid being quadrupled—Settlement whether fresh or in continuation of the old tenancy—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882) or Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), which applicable.

Where a raiyat occupying his homestead within the residential suburb of the Naraingunj Municipality as part of his non-transferable occupancy holding first sold the rest of the holding to a certain person, and next sold his homestead to the Defendant a pleader who purchased it for the purpose of residence and for carrying on his profession as a pleader in the local Civil Courts, was recognized by the Plaintiffs, landlords, on payment of salami and was granted rent receipts in the forms prescribed in the Bengal Tenancy Act as for a karsha holding, while the rent previously paid was now quadrupled:

Held, in a suit brought by the Plaintiffs for ejectment of the Defendant after service of six months' notice to quit terminating with the end of a year of the tenancy—That the Defendant's contention that his tenancy was in continuation of the old tenancy of the outgoing raiyat was not maintainable, that the tenancy originated in a fresh settlement with the Plaintiffs and that in view of the purpose for which the new tenancy was created it was governed by the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

Dr. Sarat Chandra Basak and Babu Prakash Chandra Palcrasi for the Respondent.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

This appeal arises out of a suit in ejectment.

It has been found that the land in question was originally the homestead of one Lobai Chang a cultivating raiyat who held the same as part of his non-transferable occupancy holding.

Having sold the other portions of his holding he next proceeded to sell his homestead to the Defendant on the 23rd Kartik 1304 (8th November 1897). The land in question is situated in Chashara, a Mauza lying within and now forming what may be described as a residential suburb of the Municipality of Naraingunge. The Defendant is a pleader practising in the Civil Courts established in that Sub-divisional head-quarter.

It has been held by the Courts below that having purchased from Lobai, the Defendant next secured from the landlords their recognition of his purchase, and have thus acquired in the land the rights of an occupancy raiyat.

(2) I. L. R. 19 Cal. 459 (1892).

On behalf of the landlord Appellant it has been contended before us that the arrangement between the landlord and the Defendant should have been and should be regarded not as a recognition and an admission into an existing tenancy but as a new settlement, that the tenancy thus created is one governed by the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act, and not being of a permanent nature terminated on the expiry of the six months' notice to quit served upon the Defendant, that is, at the close of the year 1922.

The facts upon which the Courts below have relied are as follows :—

Lobai was a cultivator and had the rights of an occupancy raiyat in his holding and in the homestead (1½ bighas house and garden forming part thereof). The purchase by Plaintiff from Lobai has been proved : nazar or salami was paid to and accepted by the landlord. The arrears of rent due from Lobai were also paid by the Defendant. His name was mutated or substituted in the landlord's papers in place of Lobai's name. Plaintiffs' witness No. 2 whom both Courts have believed deposed that at the time of the recognition or settlement what right the Defendant should obtain thereby was not specified, he should have such rights as under the circumstances the law might give him. The dakhilas granted to the Plaintiff since 1897 are in the form prescribed by the Bengal Tenancy Act, and the tenancy is described therein or in most of them as a karsa, a term usually applied to an agricultural holding.

On behalf of the landlord Appellant it is contended that the Courts below should have had regard to or laid more stress upon other facts in the case such as the following : the homestead was the last remaining portion of his holding, and on its transfer the landlords were entitled to re-enter. It was known that the Defendant was a pleader, and was taking this homestead for purpose of residence and of carrying on, not any form of agriculture or horticulture, but the practice of his profession as a pleader in the local Courts. The rent previously payable was quadrupled : Entries in the landlord's papers are for his information, and for the purpose of preserving a record of the history of the holding, and are not of importance for the purpose of showing the right acquired by the new tenant. The arrears due from Lobai when paid by the Defendant should be regarded as part of the salami or premium. The deposition of Plaintiffs' witness No. 2 believed by both Courts shows that the incoming tenant was not admitted into the rights of Lobai and so far from supporting the case of recognition negatives that case and shows that the arrangement was a new settlement.

Having given to the case our careful consideration we are of opinion that the inference legally deducible from the facts found or not disputed in the present case is that the Defendant having bought out Lobai was not admitted by the landlord into the tenancy and the rights previously held by Lobai but obtained from the landlord a fresh settlement or a new tenancy. We are of opinion that the Courts below have been misled by the use of the terms "tenant-at-will" or "tenancy-at-will" and by the attempt made at one time by the landlords or their agent to introduce the words "sweccadhin or tenant-at-will," into one of the dakhilas granted to the tenant. These words have been wrongly used for a tenancy terminable on a proper notice to quit, for instance, the six months' notice terminating with the close of a year of the tenancy actually served upon the tenant in this case.

HARENDRA KUMAR ROY CHOWDHURY v. HARA KISHORE PAL.

The Courts have further overlooked the significance to be attached to the fact that on the settlement with the Defendant the rent previously payable was quadrupled. The Court of First Appeal makes no reference to this fact and the Court of first instance but casually alludes to it. Yet by itself and certainly taken with the other facts this is inconsistent with any admission of the Defendant into the occupancy rights previously held by Lobai.

We therefore hold that the Defendants' tenancy is not a continuation of Lobai's tenancy but originated in a new settlement with the landlord in the year 1304. It has been found by both Courts below that the lease since taken by the Defendant was taken not for purpose of agriculture or horticulture but for residential purposes and in order to the practice of the Defendant's profession as a pleader in the local Courts.

The tenancy is therefore governed by the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act and has been terminated by the notice to quit, duly served as is not disputed before us, on the Defendant. In support of our view as to the nature of the Defendant's tenancy we may refer to the cases of Rakhal Das Addy v. Dinomoyi Debi (1), 'Raniganj Coal Association v. Jadoo Nath Ghosh (2) and Umrao Bibi v. Mahomed Rojabi (3). It was suggested on behalf of the Defendant that if the Plaintiffs' contention succeeded there should be a remand to the Court of First Appeal in order that the Defendant's claim to compensation for improvements should be determined. This question was not raised in the Court of First Appeal and was decided against the Defendant in the Court of first instance. A remand is not necessary. The Defendant may remove his structures and for this purpose a period of four months will be allowed to him from this date. In these terms this appeal and the Plaintiffs' suit are decreed. Parties will bear their own costs throughout this litigation.

[CIVIL REVISIONAL JURISDICTION.]

RULE No. 701 of 1920.

NEWBOULD, J.
4, March.

SURENDRA PRASAD
LAHIRI CHOUDHRY, Defendant, Petitioner,
v.
ATTABUDDIN AHMED,
Plaintiff, Opposite Party.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), sec. 27, "suit duly instituted," meaning of—Dismissal of a suit for not putting in deficit court fees—Or. 47, r. 4, cl. (a), reversing of that order without notice to the Defendant, legality of—Secs. 148 and 149, Court's power to extend time for putting in deficit court fees after expiry of the period of limitation.

A suit was instituted on the last day for filing the suit under the Limitation Act. The plaint was insufficiently stamped and the deficit Court fees not having been put in within the time fixed by the Court, the suit was dismissed. Thereafter on an application for review, the order of dismissal was set aside without any notice to the Defendant and time was granted for putting in the deficit Court fee:

Held—That at the time the order of dismissal was set aside, there was no Opposite Party on whom the notice could be served, as the summons in the suit had not yet been issued on the Defendant and as, until the suit was registered, the suit could not be said to have been duly instituted. The order of dismissal passed at that stage of the case can be reviewed without notice to the Defendant.

SURENDRA PRASAD LAHIRI CHOUHURY v. ATTABUDDIN AHMED.

MUSSTI. GULABOO v. RAMDYAL SINGH (1) and SAHEBZADA MD. ZAHURUDDIN v. NURUDDIN (2) referred to.

The principle of JOY RAMA v. ESHAREK NAND (3) and JANAKINATH v. PRABHASINI (4) applied.

Once the order rejecting the plaint is set aside in review, the Court has full power, under secs. 148, 149 of the Civil Procedure Code, to extend the time for payment of the deficit Court fee, and the plaint having been originally filed within the period of limitation, the suit was not barred.

This was a Rule granted on the 2nd September 1920 against the order of the Small Cause Court Judge of Dinajpur (S. K. Ghosh, Esq.), dated the 7th June 1920.

The facts will fully appear from the judgment.

Babu Atul Chandra Gupta for the Petitioner.

Babu Girija Prosanna Sanyal for the Opposite Party.

THE JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

This Rule was directed against an order of the Small Cause Court Judge decreeing a suit against the Petitioner. The plaint in the suit was presented on the 16th January 1919, the last day for filing the suit under the Limitation Act. That plaint was insufficiently stamped and the Court required the Plaintiff to supply the deficit Court fee within four days. This was not done and the plaint was rejected on the 28th May 1919. On the 5th June 1919, the Plaintiff applied for a review of the order rejecting the plaint and the review was granted without any notice of the application to the Defendant. The order of rejection of the plaint was set aside and the Plaintiff was allowed 15 days' time from the date of that order, the 20th December 1919, for putting in the deficit Court fee. The Court fee was duly paid by the Plaintiff and the plaint was registered in the due course. The suit was tried and at the hearing of the suit, the pleader for the Defendant stated that he would not press any other objection than that of limitation taken in the written statement, and he did not adduce any evidence, nor cross-examine the Plaintiff who deposed in support of his claim. The point of limitation was decided against the Defendant and the suit decreed.

Under the present Civil Procedure Code, it is clear under secs. 148 and 149 that a Court has power to extend the time for filing deficit Court fee and can extend that time, even though the period which had been fixed may have expired.

The question to be decided in this appeal is whether the order of the 20th December reviewing the order rejecting the plaint was bad, because it was made without notice to the Defendant. On behalf of the Petitioner reliance is placed on the wording of Or. 47, r. 4, cl. (a) which provides that no application for review shall be granted without previous notice to the Opposite Party. So far as they go, the words of the rule are perfectly clear. In support of the contention reliance was placed on rulings in Mussti. Gulaboo v. Ramdyal Singh (1) and Sahebzada Md. Zahuruddin v. Nuruddin (2).

There is a further point to be considered and that is whether at the time the review was granted there was any Opposite Party on whom notice could have been served. When the order rejecting the plaint was made, no summons had issued on the Dependant, nor could any summons be issued, since sec. 27, C. P. C., only provides summons to issue where suits have been duly instituted, and until the plaint is registered, the suit has not been duly instituted. In the case of Joy Rama v. Esharee Nand (3), which was followed in Janakinath v. Prabhasini (4), it was held that when an appeal is summarily dismissed by a Division Bench of this Court, that order can be set aside on review on an ex parte application without notice to the Respondent. In the former of those cases, it was contended on behalf of the Respondent that no review of judgment could be granted without a previous notice to the Opposite Party and it was held that there would be no Opposite Party, as the first application for admission of the special appeal was necessarily ex parte. It seems to me that these remarks are equally applicable to the case of the proceedings in Court in a suit before it reached the stage of the plaint being registered. They are necessarily ex parte; and following the principle of these rulings I hold that the order passed at that stage of the case can be reviewed without notice to the Defendant, who could not have appeared before Court when the order was made. Once the order rejecting the plaint is set aside on review, the Court has full power to extend the time for payment of the deficit Court fee, and the plaint having been originally filed within the period of limitation, the suit was not barred.

In this view I discharge the Rule with costs, one gold mohur.

YADAO, Appellant,

v.

NAMDEO, Respondent.

Hindu law—Marhatta School—Widow's power to adopt without husband's authority and without consent of kindred—Authority by husband—Particular boy named—Direction if operates as prohibition to adopt another boy on his death.

The rule laid down in RAKHMABAI v. RADHABAI (7) that in the Marhatta Country, a Hindu widow may, without the permission of her husband and without the consent of his kindred, adopt a son to him, if the act is done by her in the proper and bona fide performance of a religious duty and neither capriciously nor from a corrupt motive, is equally applicable whether her husband at the time of his death was joint or separate and whether his property was or was not vested in her as his heir at the time when she made the adoption.

RAMJI v. GHAMAU (4) and DINKAR SITARAM v. GANESH SHIVRAM (5) overruled.

Report of RAYABAI v. BALA VENKAT (6) commented on.

Where the most that could be said was that the husband directed his wife to adopt a particular boy, but said nothing as to what should be done if the boy named should be unavailable or should die after he was adopted, and the boy who was adopted after the husband's death died in childhood and unmarried;

YADAO C. NAMDEO.

Held—That there was no explicit or clearly expressed intention to prohibit the widow against adopting any boy other than the boy named, and a second adoption by the widow to her husband subsequently to his death was validly made.

This was an appeal from a decree of the Judicial Commissioner of the Central Provinces, dated the 27th April 1918, reversing a decree of the Additional District Judge, West Berar, Akola, dated the 15th December 1916.

The facts of the case will appear from their Lordships' judgment.

Sir G. Lowndes, K. C. (with Mr. E. B. Raikes) for the Appellant.—If property was separate, widow required no consent. We say it was separate on a construction of the deed of Namdeo. This deed amounts to an actual partition by metes and bounds. On the first adoption (in 1905) the property ceased to be joint property. In 1907 the adoption in question took place.

[Mr. Dubé for the Respondent.—This point does not arise if there was a prohibition to adopt on which there are concurrent findings.]

Sitabai v. Bapu Anna Patil (3). The words used there are "mandatory power" which the husband might give. There is no issue as to "prohibition."

[LORD ATKINSON refers to p. 307 of the records, where Lakshmibai v. Rajaji (12) is referred to and reference therein to West and Bühler, Vol. II, p. 965.]

I set up a general authority and both the Courts have found against me.

(12) L. L. B. 32 Bom. 996 (1897).

K. C.) for the Respondent.—Both the Courts have taken the view and it was no casual expression of opinion.

[SIR JOHN EDGE.—Would you go to the extent of saying that whether the widow is told her husband's wishes or not, she is still bound by them?]

Yes. Whether it is communicated to her or not. All that is necessary is that those are the husband's wishes.

The deed referred to is one of adoption and not of separation. When the first adoption was made, the boy ceased to belong to his original family.

[SIR JOHN EDGE.—If there had been no separation he could not have got half.]

[LORD ATKINSON.—Deed shows partition.]

Mere statement that one is owner of "half" does not mean a partition by metes and bounds.

Mr. L. DeGruyther, K. C. (following):—There need not be express prohibition. Any indication that a particular person should be adopted operates as a prohibition as regards any others.

The object of the "adoption" deed was to enable Champabai and Annapurnabai to manage the entire property. Girja Bai v. Sadashiv Dhundiraj (1), Suraj Narain v. Ikbal Narain (13) and Kawal Nain v. Budh Singh (2).

These cases lay down that once there is an unequivocal intimation of a co-sharer's desire for partition there is separation from the joint family.

Sitabai v. Bapu Anna Patil (3) lays down that widow must have express or implied authority.

YADAO v. NANDEO.

Bayabai v. Bala Venkatish (6) states the law clearly.

Rakhmabai v. Radhabai (7) is really later than the case of Bayabai v. Bala Venkatish (6), although reported in an earlier volume.

In a separate family a wife has power to adopt unless expressly prohibited. Here the separation was after the death of husband and so the wife had no power to adopt.

[LORD HALDANE.—What is the test as to whether she has power?]

The only case where the wife has power to adopt is where the husband dies separate and she is his heir. There is no implied authority where the husband dies leaving a son.

The statements of Pandlik do not imply any authority to adopt anyone except Pandurang. Both Courts find this.

[LORD HALDANE.—This is purely a matter of construction.]

Can you say that the widow acquires an authority to adopt if the son separates and then dies say 40 years hence?

Ramji v. Ghamau (4).

[LORD HALDANE.—On the words used we all take the view there was separation.]

Sir George Lowndes.—My point is that the widow has a general power and so it must be prohibited and it does not depend on the fact whether she was heir to her husband or not. And she has implied authority even if it is a joint family. Under Mitakshara law in Bombay, she has a "co-extensive power" with her husband and that is not cut down unless there is an express prohibition. Even then it depends on wifely duty.

An adopted son is exactly in the same position as the son of the body. An adoption is a continuation of line and refers back to the death of the deceased. She can exercise the power whether any property is vested in her or not.

Lakshmibai v. Sarasvatibai (9) (Sir Lawrence Jenkin's judgment).

Sitabai v. Bapu Anna Patil (3) (per Lord Buckmaster).

In Bayabai v. Bala Venkatish (6), there was a minority differing judgment.

Rakhmabai v. Radhabai (7).

[Mr. DeGruyther.—Lakshmibai v. Sarasvatibai (9) rejects this case.]

Sir Michael Westropp was the first to introduce this distinction between joint and separate property.

The Board says the widow has the authority in her and the consent is merely a test whether it is properly exercised in Balusu Gurulinga Sami v. Balusu Rama Lakschamma (14).

[Mr. DeGruyther.—I have never seen Ramji v. Ghamau (4) differed from anywhere.]

Rakhmabai v. Radhabai (7). There is no distinction between joint and separate property. If there is a prohibition then of course I have no case.

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by

SIR JOHN EDGE.—This is an appeal by the Plaintiff, a minor, through his guardian, from a decree, dated the 27th April 1918, of the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of the Central Provinces, which reversed a preliminary decree of partition, of the 15th December 1916 of the Additional District Judge of Akola, in Berar, and dismissed the suit. By the preliminary decree it was declared that the parties to the suit were entitled to separate possession of the property mentioned in the schedule to that decree, and that :—

“The Plaintiff, as a legally adopted son of the deceased Pundlik Patil, is entitled to a half share in the property immoveable and moveable, including the shop assets, and that he is entitled to the possession of that half share after a partition of it all by metes and bounds as against the Defendant. If any other property besides that in the hands of the receiver available for partition is brought to the notice of the Court, till the passing of a final decree of partition, it shall be put into the schedule.”

and a Commissioner was appointed to make partition of the said property.

The plaint in the suit was not in the form of a plaint for partition, but in the Courts below the suit was treated as a suit for partition, and as a suit for partition their Lordships will consequently regard it.

The following short pedigree shows the position of the parties :—

At the time of his death Pundlik was a member of a joint Hindu family, which consisted of himself, his cousin Namdeo, and Namdeo's two sons Pandurang and Rambhau. The property mentioned in the schedule to the decree of the trial Judge was the property of that joint family. The parties to the suit are Hindus to whom the Hindu law applicable to Hindus of the Mahratta country of the Presidency of Bombay applies, and the question upon which the result of this appeal depends, is whether Mussamat Champabai had, under circumstances which later will be mentioned in some detail, power validly to adopt the Plaintiff as a son to her deceased husband Pundlik.

Pundlik died childless in January 1905, leaving his two wives, Mussamat Champabai and Mussamat Annapurnabai surviving him. Mussamat Champabai was the senior wife, and she, with the concurrence of Mussamat Annapurnabai, adopted in 1905 as a son to her deceased husband, Pandurang, who was one of the two sons of Namdeo, the Defendant. The validity of that adoption is not disputed. Pandurang, whose adopted name was Vithal Rao, died in childhood and unmarried in 1907; and Mussamat Champabai in December 1908 in fact adopted to her deceased husband the Plaintiff without having obtained the consent of anyone, except the consent of the Plaintiff's natural father, who had given him to her to be adopted by her to her deceased husband. Namdeo had refused to give his consent to the adoption, and his contention was and is that Mussamat Champabai had, under the Hindu law which was applicable to their family, no power as a widow to make the adoption, and also that any such adoption by her had been prohibited by Pundlik. The trial Judge came to the conclusion that after the adoption of Pandurang the joint family had separated, and that afterwards, when the contingency for a second adoption arose by reason of Pandurang's death, Mussamat Champabai could validly adopt the Plaintiff without the consent of Namdeo who was then separate, and made the preliminary decree for partition. The learned Judges of the Court of the Judicial Commissioner came to the conclusion that there had been no separation of the joint Hindu family; that Pundlik intended that Pandurang only should be adopted, and had given no general permission as regards the adoption of a son; that on Pandurang's death Namdeo and his son Rambhau became by survivorship sole owners of the joint family estate; and that Mussamat Champabai could not under such circumstances make a valid adoption of the Plaintiff without having obtained the sanction of Namdeo; and, holding that the adoption was invalid, they, by their decree, dismissed the suit. From that decree of the Court of the Judicial Commissioner this appeal has been brought.

Except that their Lordships agree with the Court of the Judicial Commissioner that Pundlik had not given an authority for the adoption of the Plaintiff, they do not agree with the Court of the Judicial Commissioner as to what the facts were. Pundlik, until he died in January 1905, had managed the joint property. On the 31st March 1905, Mussamat Champabai, with the concurrence of Mussamat Annapurnabai, adopted as a son to their deceased husband Pandurang, and on the 23rd April 1905, Namdeo executed the following deed:—

“Deed of adoption.

“In favour of both Mt. Champabai and Mt. Annapurnabai, widow (widows) of Pundlik Vithoba Patil, resident of Warwat Bakal, Taluq Jalgaon, District Akola. I, Namdeo Yekoba Patil, Warwatkar, execute this writing to the effect that in accordance with the wishes of the deceased Pundlik Vithoba Patil, who was my real cousin (uncle's son) at the time of his death, I have placed upon your lap my own son Pandurang.

“The adoption ceremony in accordance with the popular usage in regard to it was settled with the consent of us three to be performed at an auspicious time on Friday Falgun Vadya 11, corresponding to 31st

March 1905, and the ceremony has been done. In his capacity as an adopted son, Pandurang would hereafter be called by the name of Vithal Rao, son of Pundlik Patil. He has become the sole owner of the entire moveable and immoveable property of the deceased Pundlik Vithoba Patil, and even in all sorts of papers the management should hereafter be conducted as “Pundlik Vithoba Patil shop at Warwat” Firm through managing proprietor Vithal Rao, son of Pundlik Patil, minor, through guardian mothers Mt. Champabai and Mt. Annapurnabai. Deceased Pundlik Patil and I formed a joint family. Immoveable and moveable property belongs to the joint family. Vithal Rao is the sole heir to half of the entire property on the authority of the deed of adoption and half of the property belongs to me. The following are the conditions on which the adoption business was settled amongst us.

“1. My half share in the moveable and immoveable property may be kept as joint if both Champabai and Annapurnabai would approve, but if you do not approve of it you may separate it and give it at any time you like.

“2. A list of the entire property should be made and signed by us three. After preparing such list it should be kept with Jairam Govind Patil of Sowghad and Govind Hari Sawarkar as Panchas. It is true that Vithal Rao, son of Pundlik Patil by virtue of his adoption, is the owner of all the property of the deceased Pundlik, son of Vithoba. But for the protection of the property and for the future welfare of the real owner Vithal Rao, you both should do the management of the entire property till the adopted son completes his 25 (twenty-fifth) year. After Vithal Rao attains majority he should do the management according to the orders of both of you. This is the original desire in making the adoption. But the above condition is specially mentioned to-day for the good conduct, for excellent dwelling in the world and for the growth of the family tree of Vithal Rao. If there arise any difference between Vithal Rao and both of you then on the authority of this writing Vithal Rao will have no right at all during the lifetime of both of you and the entire property should be managed by Champabai.

"4. After Vithal Rao completes his 25 (twenty-fifth) year, Champabai has got power to make over the entire property to his charge. If after the transfer of the power you and Vithal Rao do not pull on amicably a separate yearly allowance of Rs. 200 to Champabai and a separate yearly allowance of Rs. 200 to Annapurnabai may be apportioned. This allowance would be a charge on the entire moveable and immoveable property.

"5. If Annapurnabai desires to live separate on account of household affairs before Vithal Rao completes his 25th year, Champabai has power to give an allowance of Rs. 5 per mensem to her, and Vithal Rao would never acquire the right to interfere in this decision. On the conditions as mentioned above I have placed my son on the lap of you both. He should secure for the deceased Pundlik Patil and his ancestors spiritual, final and eternal happiness, and by the grace of God he may propagate the family and give you all the pleasure, and with this object I have completed this writing of the deed of adoption with my free will, and I have made my signature to-day in order to make it over to the charge of you both. Dated 23rd April 1905. Written by Bhao Sheoram Patil, Keli.

"Namdeo Yekoba Patil."

As their Lordships construe that deed of the 23rd April 1905, Namdeo by it declared that he had separated from Pandurang, whom he had given in adoption. It was not merely an expression of an intention to separate, although an unequivocal intimation of an intention to separate by a member of a joint Hindu family governed by the Mitakshara would operate as a severance of the joint status [see Girja Bai v. Sadashiv Dhundiraj (1) and Kawal Nain v. Budh Singh (2)]. Their Lordships find as a fact and hold in law that on the date of that deed

Namdeo and his son Rambhau had separated from Pandurang, and had ceased to be members with Pandurang of the joint family, although no partition of the family property had been effected.

It is common ground that the adoption of Pandurang was a valid adoption. Pandurang died unmarried in 1907. After the death of Pandurang, Mussamat Champabai tried to obtain the consent of Namdeo to her adopting to her deceased husband Rambhau, but Namdeo refused to give him in adoption, and on the 11th December 1908, she adopted to her deceased husband the Plaintiff, who was by birth a son of Raoji Patil.

It has not been and cannot be disputed that Mussamat Champabai had the authority of her husband Pundlik, if she chose to exercise it, to adopt to him Pandurang. That authority she acted upon in adopting Pandurang in 1905, but on behalf of Namdeo it is contended that Pundlik's authority to his wife to adopt a son to him was limited to an adoption of his son Pandurang, and that Pundlik's expressed wish in his last illness was that no boy except Pandurang should be adopted to him. If it had been proved that Pundlik had in fact expressed as a direction to be followed by his wife his wish that no boy except Pandurang should at any time be adopted to him, their Lordships would hold that the direction prohibited Champabai from adopting the Plaintiff, and consequently that the Plaintiff's adoption was invalid. But such a direction to operate as a prohibition against his widow adopting any boy to him as a son except the boy named by him must be explicitly made and clearly intended by the husband to limit the discretion of his widow for all time, and on every occasion on which otherwise after his death his widow might validly make an adoption to him. Such a direction may be given by the husband orally or in writing, as for instance by a Will. The duty of a Hindu widow is to obey such directions as her husband may have given as to the way in which she should exercise a power of adoption to him. That is a general principle of Hindu law as to adoptions, and is not applicable only in cases in which the husband and wife were subject to the Bombay School of Hindu law. In Sitabai v. Bapu Anna Patil (3) in which a husband had given in his Will a direction as to how his wife should exercise a power of adoption to him, the Board held:—

“That according to the Bombay School of Law the duty of a Hindu widow to obey her husband's command compels her to act upon any mandatory direction that he may give by Will as to the way in which her power of adoption may be exercised.”

In the present case the strongest evidence suggestive of a prohibition by Pundlik, of any kind as to the making of an adoption to him by Mussamat Champabai was that given by Balkrishna, who had been Pundlik's gumashta. Balkrishna said:—

“He (Pundlik) told us that he was very ill and that we should manage the property well. We opened the talk about the arrangement of inheritance. He told us that his cousin's (Namdeo's) sons were his heirs, and if at all an adoption was wanted Namdeo's son Pandurang should be the only boy for adoption, otherwise he had no wish to adopt anybody else or to make any other arrangement. Namdeo's younger son (Rambhau) was then four or five months old.”

To a similar effect as to Pundlik's intention as to the boy who might be taken in adoption to him was the evidence of Raibhan, a Tahsildar and Magistrate, the evidence of Ranchandra, a pensioner, and the evidence of Jayram, who had married a sister of Pundlik. According to Jayram, some persons who were present during Pundlik's last illness were pressing him to adopt a son as he was sonless, and Pundlik “said then that he did not want to adopt . . . Pundlik Patil told them that he was not obstinate, and that if a son was to be adopted he would adopt Namdeo's son, Pandurang, and none else.”

The conclusion which their Lordships draw from the evidence is that Pundlik intended if he adopted any boy as his son, to adopt Pandurang, and if his statements can be construed as a direction to his wife, that direction was that she should adopt Pandurang, and that he gave no direction as to what should be done if Pandurang should be unavailable or should die after he was adopted.

Under these circumstances and Pandurang having died in childhood and unmarried, it is necessary to consider what power, if any, Mussamat Champabai had under the Hindu law applicable in the Mahratta country of the Presidency of Bombay to adopt the Plaintiff as a son to her deceased husband.

It has been decided by the High Court at Bombay that in the Mahratta country of the Presidency of Bombay and in Gujarat a Hindu widow, who is sole or joint heir to her husband's estate, may adopt a son to her deceased husband, without authority from her husband, and without the consent of his kindred, or of the caste or of the ruling authority, but that she cannot adopt where her husband has expressly forbidden an adoption. That is not now disputed; it is undoubtedly the law. But it has been held by that High Court in Ramji v. Ghamau (4), and by the same bench in Dinkar Sitaram v. Ganesh Shivaram (5), that a Hindu widow in the Mahratta country of that Presidency or in Gujarat, who has not her husband's estate vested in her, and whose husband was not separated at the time of his death, is not competent to adopt a son to her husband without his authority, or the consent of her father-in-law, or of her husband's undivided coparceners. See paragraph 130 of Mayne's Hindu Law, where the two authorities above-mentioned are cited, as the authorities for the last-mentioned proposition. They were decisions of the 8th July 1879 of a Full Bench consisting of Sir Michael Westropp, C. J., Melvill and Kemball, JJ. The decision in Dinkar Sitaram v. Ganesh Shivram (5) merely followed the decision in Ramji v. Ghamau (4). It is contended in this appeal that these decisions were wrong in law. It may be mentioned that in Dinkar Sitaram v. Ganesh Shivram (5), the District Judge had held that the consent of relations was unnecessary in the Presidency of Bombay.

In the present case Pundlik had not separated; he had died a member of a joint Hindu family, and the estate which was vested in Mussamat Champabai at the time when she adopted the Plaintiff as a son to her husband was not the interest which Pundlik had in the joint family property, but was the estate which had vested in Pandurang on the separation of the joint family.

In Ramji v. Ghamau (4) the parties were members of a Hindu joint family, and it may be assumed from the report of the case that the parties were subject to the Hindu law applicable to Hindus of the Mahratta country of the Presidency of Bombay. In that case it was held that a Hindu widow, who has not the family estate vested in her and whose husband was not separated at the time of his death, is not competent to adopt a son to her husband without his authority or the consent of his undivided coparceners. That was the question which had to be decided in that case. So far as their Lordships are aware that decision in Ramji v. Ghamau (4) was the first decision of the High Court at Bombay on that question in any case in which the Hindu law applicable to Hindus in the Mahratta country of the Presidency of Bombay or in Gujarat had to be considered, and the attention of their Lordships has not been drawn to any earlier decision of the Supreme Court of Bombay on that question. In Ramji v. Ghamau (4), the learned Judges stated:—

"There has not been any text quoted to us from the books to the effect that the widow of a parcener in a Hindu undivided family may adopt without the authority of her husband or the assent of her coparceners. The authorities in relation to the taking in adoption by a Hindu widow in this Presidency are so fully collected and discussed in Bayubai v. Bala Venkatish (6), Rakhmabai v. Radhakai (7) and Narayan Babaji v. Nana Munohar (8), that it is unnecessary to set them forth here."

After referring to some ancient texts and to some statements of Sir Thomas Strange and Mr. Colebrooke, the learned Judges said:—

"Accepting, however, the view which the cases seem to establish, viz., that the widow, where the husband dies separated, and she herself is the heir, or she and a junior co-widow are the heirs, may adopt without the sanction of the husband (if he have not expressly or by implication indicated his desire that she shall not do so) and without the sanction of his kindred, we are not (as has been previously said in this Court) disposed to carry the deviation from ordinary Hindu law further than it has been already established by precedents."

YADAO v. NAMDEO.

The allusion to what had "been previously said" in the High Court was an allusion to a judgment of Sir Michael Westropp, then Mr. Justice Westropp, reported in Bayabai v. Bala Venkatish (6), which it will be necessary to refer to later.

The Hindu law in the Mahratta country of the Presidency of Bombay and in Gujarat as to the power of widows to adopt to their deceased husbands differs widely from the Hindu law as it has been variously interpreted in other parts of India, but whether it is the original Hindu law on that subject, or, as the learned Judges in Ramji v. Ghamau (4) assumed, a deviation from it is not now an easy question to decide with certainty; probably it is a deviation.

In Lakshmibai v. Sarasvatibai (9), Sir Lawrence Jenkins, C. J., said:—

"It has been argued before us on the part of the Appellant that a widow's power to adopt does not rest on any delegation from her husband, but is her own inherent right, and it is obvious that the distinction may have more than an academic value. The commentaries, which prevail in this Presidency, seem to me strongly to favour the view thus contended for, but some at any rate of the more recent decisions in this Court contain expressions that point in the other direction. In the view I take of the present case, it is not necessary to decide the point, but the inclination of my opinion (though I reserve to myself the right to reconsider the matter hereafter, if necessary) is that in this Presidency the widow's right is inherent and not merely delegated."

There does not appear to their Lordships to be any sound reason why in the Mahratta country of the Presidency of Bombay the Hindu law as to the power of a Hindu widow who has not the authority of her deceased husband to adopt a son to him, should depend on the question as to whether her husband had died as a separated Hindu or as an unseparated Hindu, or on the question as to whether the property which was vested in her when she made the adoption was or was not vested in her as his heir. If it was her religious duty to adopt a son to her husband, that duty would be the same in either case, although possibly the right of the adopted son to the property vested in the widow might be different. It has, however, been held by the Board in Pratapsing Shivsing v. Agarsingji Raisingji (10), which was a case from the Ahmedabad District of the Presidency of Bombay, that:—

"The right of the widow to make an adoption is not dependent on her inheriting as a Hindu female owner her husband's estate. She can exercise the power, so long as it is not exhausted or extinguished, even though the property was not vested in her."

The Board was not then dealing with a case in which the deceased husband had expressly or implicitly prohibited his wife from making any adoption.

In Shri Ragunada v. Shri Brozo Kishoro (11), the Board said:—

"It may be the duty of a Court of Justice administering the Hindu law to consider the religious duty of adopting a son as the essential foundation of the law of adoption, and the effect of an adoption upon the devolution of property as a mere legal consequence. But it is impossible not to see that there are grave social objections to making the succession of property—and it may be in the case of collateral succession, as in the present instance, the rights of parties in actual possession—dependent on the caprice of a woman, subject to all the pernicious influences which interested advisers are too apt in India to exert over women possessed of, or capable of exercising dominion over, property. It seems, therefore, to be the duty of the Courts to keep the power strictly within the limits which the law has assigned to it."

That case came from Travancore, where the Hindu law as interpreted in the Province of Madras as to the power of Hindu widows to adopt, who have not had the authority of their husbands to adopt a son to him, is much more restricted than it is in the Mahrattā country of the Presidency of Bombay and in Gujarat, where it is the law that the widow of a separated husband, who has not prohibited her from making an adoption to him, can validly adopt a son to him without the consent of anyone except that of the parent of the boy. In the present case, owing to the family having separated, the rights of Namdeo and his son Rambhau were merely the rights of collaterals in unpartitioned property.

In Narayan Babaji v. Nana Manohar (8), where the question for decision was whether a Hindu wife could in the lifetime of her husband make a valid adoption to him, a widely different point from that to be decided in this appeal, and a widely different point from that which had to be decided in Ramji v. Ghamau (4), Westropp, C. J., delivered a long judgment of value when the respective authority of various ancient texts and commentaries on Hindu law has to be considered on questions of a woman giving or taking a boy in adoption or on the difference between the power of a widow and that of a wife to take a boy in adoption, and on other questions which their Lordships have not to consider in this appeal. In the course of the judgment, the learned Judge stated that he adhered to an opinion expressed by him in 1866 in Bayabai v. Bala Venkatish (6) as to the construction of some passages in the Dattaka Chandrika. As will later appear, it is not at all clear what was the judgment which Mr. Justice Westropp actually did deliver in Bayabai v. Bala Venkatish (6).

In Rakhmabai v. Radhabai (7), which was decided in the High Court on the 26th August 1868, the suit was between the two widows of Murarav Desai, of Nipani, in the Mahratta country of the Presidency of Bombay, who had died childless and apparently separate. The suit was brought by Radhabai who was the junior widow; she claimed to be jointly entitled with the Defendant Rakhmabai to the estate of their deceased husband.

The defence was that Rakhmabai had authority to adopt a son to her late husband, and had adopted Rav Saheb, who therefore became the lawful heir to the entire estate. The District Judge who tried the suit found that the adoption was not authorised by the husband, but he had no doubt that the adoption was in fact made, and for some reason which was not apparent to the Court of Appeal, he decreed that the Plaintiff was entitled to the half share which she claimed. The Defendant appealed to the High Court at Bombay and the appeal came before Sir Richard Couch, C. J., and Newton and Warden, JJ., who having found that the adoption had in fact been made, proceeded "to consider whether it was valid, either by reason of its having been made by the authority of the deceased Murarav (the husband), or by virtue of the power which Rakhmabai had by the Hindu law, by which the parties were governed." The High Court found that the husband had given no direction to adopt, and then considered whether the adoption without authority having been given by the husband was valid. The learned Judges of the High Court then referred to the Mitakshara, the Vyavahara Mayukha, an opinion expressed by Sir W. H. Macnaghten in a note at page 68 of the second edition of his Principles of Hindu Law, several cases reported, some reported in Borradaile's Reports and some in Morris' Sudder Dewany Reports, and to the opinions which had been given in some of those cases by Shastris and by Pundits, and expressed their decision thus:—

“Upon the review which we have made of the authorities applicable in this part of India, we are of opinion that in the Maratha country, wherein the property in question in this suit is situate, a Hindu widow may, without the permission of her husband, and without the consent of his kindred, adopt a son to him, if the act is done by her in the proper and bona fide performance of a religious duty, and neither capriciously nor from a corrupt motive.”

That decision was not based upon the fact that the deceased husband was a separated Hindu, nor was it based upon the fact that at the time of the adoption, the widow who made the adoption had vested in her the whole or any part of the property which had belonged to her husband. Their Lordships regard it as equally applicable to an adoption by a Hindu widow of the Mahratta country of the Province of Bombay, whether her husband at the time of his death was joint or separate, and whether his property was or was not vested in her as his heir at the time when she made the adoption, and consider that it is a decision to be applied in this appeal.

The learned Judges in Rakhmabai v. Radhabai (7), having expressed their decision which has been quoted on the authorities which they had reviewed, proceeded to consider whether the elder of the two widows had power to adopt without the consent of the other, and having referred on that subject to Strange's Hindu Law, Appendix 83, to a decision of the Supreme Court, to a decision of the High Court, to West and Bühler's Digest of Hindu Law of Inheritance and to Steele's Summary of the Law and Custom of Hindu Inheritance, said:—

“Considering the act of adoption as the performance of a religious duty, we think these authorities are sufficient to justify us in holding that Rakhmabai, the elder of the two widows, had the right to adopt. In the judgment of the Privy Council their Lordships say that ‘in the case of an undivided family, if there be no father of the husband living, the consent of all the brothers, who in default of adoption would take the husband's share, would probably be required, since it would be unjust to allow the widow to defeat their interest by introducing another coparcener against their will.’ The interest of the younger of two widows cannot, we think, be regarded in the same light as that of a member of an undivided family, and probably their Lordships would not consider the remark applicable in cases where, by the law which governs them, no consent of kinsmen is required. We must not omit to notice the judgment of Mr. Justice Westropp in Regular Appeal No. 17 of 1863 [Bayabai v. Bala Venkatish (6)], which was cited by the Respondent's counsel. The judgment was not a written one, and we have no report of it, but we understand that the opinion given by the learned Judge was that a widow had no power to adopt a son to her husband where he had expressly, or by his conduct impliedly, forbidden her to do so. In this we quite concur, and the Judicial Committee have so held in the judgment we have referred to. There is no question of prohibition in this case.”

Their Lordships will now consider the case of Bayabai v. Bala Venkatish (6), which was decided in the High Court at Bombay on the 7th March 1866, by Westropp, Tucker and Warden, JJ., and is one of the three decisions referred to by Sir Michael Westropp, C. J., in Ramji v. Ghamau (4), as the cases in which the authorities in relation to the taking in adoption by a Hindu widow in the Presidency of Bombay were so fully collected and discussed that it was unnecessary to set them forth in the judgment of the Full Bench in Ramji v. Ghamau (4), by which it will be remembered that Full Bench decided that in the Presidency of Bombay a Hindu widow, who has not the family estate vested in her and whose husband was not separated at the time of his death, is not competent to adopt a son to her husband without his authority or the consent of his coparceners.

It is necessary to make a few prefatory observations about the judgment of Mr. Justice Westropp which is reported in 7 Bomb. H. C. R., Appendix 1, as having been delivered in Bayabai v. Bala Venkatish (6) on the 7th March 1866, in Regular Appeal No. 17 of 1863. In the first place it appears that Mr. Justice Warden was one of the Judges in that case, and was also one of the Judges in Rakhmabai v. Radhabai (7), which was decided on the 26th August 1868, and is reported in 5 Bomb. H. C. R. A. C. 181. In the judgment of the Court in the latter case, at page 193 of the Report, it is stated that the judgment of Mr. Justice Westropp in Regular Appeal No. 17 of 1863 was not a written judgment, and "we have no report of it." It may be assumed that a decree of the High Court in Bayabai v. Bala Venkatish (6) was drawn up, and that it was drawn up as of the 7th March 1866. A decree must be justified by the judgment upon which it is based. Their Lordships are of opinion that the judgment of Mr.

Justice Westropp in Bayabai v. Bala Venkatish (6), as reported in 7 Bomb. H. C. R., Appendix I, could not possibly have been an orally delivered judgment, and they are further of opinion, strange though that opinion may seem, that no judgment was written in that case until after the judgment of Sir Richard Couch, C. J., Newton and Warden, JJ., in Rakhmabai v. Radhabai (7), had been reported in 1869 in 5 Bomb. H. C. R. A. C. 181.

The points which were considered by Mr. Justice Westropp in Bayabai v. Bala Venkatish (6), as appears from an examination of his judgment as it is reported, were: point (1), the power of a Hindu widow to adopt a son to her deceased husband without an authority from him to do so; point (2) whether the husband in the case before him had given authority to his wife to adopt or had not impliedly forbidden her to do so, and point (3) whether the widow had not been cajoled into making the alleged adoption by being kept in ignorance of her rights, and of the effect of an adoption. To the consideration of point (1), Mr. Justice Westropp devoted seventeen pages of his judgment as it is reported; to the consideration of point (2) he devoted about one page; to the consideration of point (3) he devoted two pages. In considering point (1), Mr. Justice Westropp is reported at pages xvi and xvii of the Appendix to 7 Bomb. H. C. R. to have said:—

"Baji Rav, the last of the Peshwas, as a general rule, treated adoptions by widows without the order of their husbands as illegal. But it is certain that he was swayed by interested motives. . . . The disapprobation which the deviation of the Maratha school met with in such high quarters may to some extent account for the fact that, for a long time afterwards, and down even to the hearing of this case, we find that adoptions by widows without express authority from their husbands have been constantly and vigorously contested, but, it must be admitted, generally speaking, without success, unless there were some other defect in the adoption than the absence of express authority from the husband. . . . Assuming, but not deciding, that the deviation of the Maratha school is established to the furthest extent to which any of the foregoing authorities reach (namely, that the widow may, without express authority or order from her husband, and without the consent either of his or her relations, adopt a son), and without in the least degree wishing or intending to infringe on the law of adoption by a widow so far as it can be considered as established in the Maharashtra, cherished as I believe that law to be by the Hindu community, or a very considerable proportion of it, yet I am not disposed to extend it, or to depart from the general Hindu law one single step further than provincial or local usage has firmly settled as admissible. And I have not any doubt that we should extend it much beyond its present boundaries were we to hold that the widow may adopt, where the husband has, when perfectly in the possession of his senses, as well on the day preceding his death as on the day of his death, in reply to suggestions that he should adopt a son, positively refused to do so."

There is nothing in the judgment of Westropp, J., so far as their Lordships can see, which confined his observations as to the power of a Hindu widow to adopt in the Mahratta Country of the Bombay Presidency and in Gujarat without the consent of relations to cases in which the widow was the widow of a separated husband, or to cases in which the widow was the widow of an unseparated husband; his observations appear to their Lordships to have been general and to apply to either class of cases.

Mr. Justice Westropp in Bayabai v. Bala

Venkatish (6), if the report is to be trusted, found that the husband had forbidden his wife to adopt. If the other Judges in that case, Tucker and Warden, JJ., had agreed with him that the widow had been forbidden by her husband to adopt, there was nothing further to consider in the case. According to the report of his judgment, Mr. Justice Westropp finally found that the widow had been cajoled into making the alleged adoption by being kept in ignorance of her rights, and of the effect of an adoption. With that finding, the other two Judges agreed. Their judgments will be found reported at page xxiii of the Appendix thus:—

"Tucker, J., concurred in thinking that the Defendant Bayabai had been circumvented by unfair means, and that an adoption procured, as the alleged adoption in this case, by suppression and misrepresentation of facts, could not be permitted to stand. It was clear to him that this youthful widow had been led by those around her to believe that the act of adoption would not divest her of her interest in the property of her late husband, and that she had not been fully informed as to her position and rights. . . . As to the right of a widow in this Presidency to adopt without any authority from her husband, he did not consider it necessary now to give any final decision but his opinion inclined in favour of that right, and of its having been sufficiently recognised by the Courts of Justice at this side of India. Further, he was inclined to think that she had that right unless her husband expressly prohibited her from adopting, and that a mere refusal by him to adopt would not be sufficient. But on this point he would refrain from giving any positive opinion.

"Warden, J.: I concur in the observations of my brother Tucker."

Whether the judgment reported as that of Mr. Justice Tucker had been written by him or was prepared for the Report by the reporter from his note of the case, their Lordships do not know, but it reads as if it had been written by a reporter from his note, not by the Judge.

YADAO v. NAMDEO.

Mr. Justice Warden must apparently have forgotten when the case of Rakhmabai v. Radhabai (7) was being argued in 1868, what was the actual point on which the case of Bayabai v. Bala Venkatesh (6) had been decided in 1866.

Their Lordships have come to the conclusion that the adoption of the Plaintiff who is the Appellant, was valid, and they will humbly advise His Majesty, that the decree of the Court of the Judicial Commissioner should be set aside with costs and the preliminary decree of the Additional Judge should be affirmed and restored. The Respondent must pay the costs of this appeal.

[APPEAL FROM PATNA.]

VISCOUNT CAVE.

LORD SHAW.

SIR JOHN EDGE.

MR. AMER ALJ.

Heard, 7, June.

Judgment, 9, June.]

BANDHU RAM and ors., Appellants,

v.

CHINTAMAN SINGH

and ors., Respondents.

Hindu law—Mitakshara—Joint family—Bond held in the name of a member—Separate private transactions by individual members—Presumption of jointness, if rebutted.

The presumption is that a bond held in the name of the managing member of a joint Mitakshara Hindu family is joint property and it is for those who assert the contrary to make good their case.

Proof that some of the members of the joint family had some private transactions by no means proves that the particular bond in question was the private property of the member in whose name it was held.

Held—That while the evidence on both sides was somewhat meagre the presumption in favour of joint ownership was not displaced.

This was an appeal from a decree of the High Court at Patna, dated the 30th January 1919, which reversed a decree of the Additional Subordinate Judge of Bhagalpur, dated the 9th August 1916.

The facts of the case sufficiently appear from the judgment of their Lordships.

Mr. L. DeGruylher, K. C. (with Mr. Kenworthy Brown) for the Appellants.—The family was joint in all respects till 1892 when there was a suit for partition by Madan Singh. The property was then partitioned by metes and bounds into three parts; Chandan Singh's sons, Rajdhari, Chintaman and Gobardhan, taking a one-third share. These three sons of Chandan remained joint. In 1902 Chintaman Singh brought a suit for partition and this property was divided. In 1908 Rajdhari bought the property now sued in execution of a decree against Pyare on a bond executed in 1891. Rajdhari sued for it in 1904 and bought the property in 1908. Rajdhari sold the property in 1908 (same year) to the present Appellant. Chintaman instituted the suit in 1914 for one-third of the property. What I say is that if the bond was joint family property then Chintaman's remedy was to get a share in the sale money. He has no claim in the property in the hands of a third person, unless the property was purchased on behalf of the joint family.

If the bond in favour of Rajdhari was not joint then Chintaman has clearly no claim.

BANDHU RAM v. CHINTAMAN SINGH.

The Subordinate Judge finds that each of these brothers had separate property and separate money with which they traded. The Subordinate Judge decided in our favour.

The burden is on the other side to prove that the property is joint.

My contention is that he bought the property for himself. In no case could Rajdhari be regarded as a trustee for the estate. He might sue for the moneys.

[MR. AMEER ALI.—If the property had remained with Rajdhari, the burden would have been on him to prove that the transaction was not in any way connected with the family, nor was it purchased with the family money.]

[LORD SHAH.—The whole thing was joint going back to 1891, and this transaction goes back to there.]

Mr. Kenworthy Brown followed.

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by

VISCOUNT CAVE.—This appeal has been fully argued on behalf of the Appellants, and all the material facts have been brought to their Lordships' notice, but in the result their Lordships see no reason to differ from the conclusion reached by the High Court at Patna.

The question raised is one of fact, and it is unnecessary to state the circumstances at length. It is sufficient to say that the title to the land in dispute must, in their Lordships' opinion, depend on the title to the bond given by Pyare Mander to Rajdhari on the 17th August 1891. If that bond was the separate property of Rajdhari, then the land which he purchased in the suit brought by him to enforce the bond was also his separate property, and he could give a good title to the Appellants. But if he held the bond on behalf of himself and his two brothers, Chintaman and Gobardhan, then he could in the circumstances of this case have no better title to the land, and the first Respondent is entitled to retain the decree granted by the High Court.

Now it is plain that at the date of the bond Rajdhari and his brothers were members with their three cousins (sons of their uncles) of a Mitakshara joint family, and that when in the year 1892 the cousins separated from the family and disclaimed all interest in the bond, Rajdhari and his two brothers continued joint. Rajdhari was the managing member throughout, and the presumption is that the bond held in his name was joint property; and it is for those who (like the Appellants) assert the contrary to make good their case.

It is said on behalf of the Appellants that the members of the family had some separate business transactions, and this appears both from a statement in the terms of compromise, dated the 28th July 1892, and from other evidence. But proof that some of the members had some private transactions by no means proves that the particular bond in question was the private property of Rajdhari; and there are several circumstances which tend to show that this was not the case. Thus in the first partition suit in 1892 the Plaintiff claimed as joint property a bond of Pyare Mander for 945 rupees, which must be assumed, in the absence of any evidence to the contrary, to be the bond in question; and by the terms of compromise in that suit it was admitted that all the debts (which would include that bond) belonged to the Defendants Nos. 1 to 3, that is, to Rajdhari and his two brothers. If the bond had been the separate property of Rajdhari, this would almost certainly have been stated.

Again, in the second partition suit of 1902, the Plaintiff Chintaman claimed as joint property a sum due to Rajdhari under a bond from Pyare Mander, and the award in that suit, dated the 30th March 1904, found that the three brothers were members of a joint family, and that all the moveable and immoveable properties were joint between them. It is not clearly shown that the bond here mentioned was the bond in question; but it appears unlikely that, if Rajdhari held a separate bond from Pyare Mander, it would not have been referred to and excepted from the award.

Further, in the subsequent proceedings in the same suit Rajdhari admitted that Chintaman was entitled to be credited with 1,000 rupees, being one-third of the purchase money for the property comprised in the bond, an admission which could only have been made if the bond was joint property; and while it is true that this was after the sale to the Appellants, it cannot be assumed without proof that Rajdhari was a party to a fraud.

Lastly, it is (to say the least of it) remarkable that, when in 1908 Ram Gulam made an attempt to execute the order which he had obtained against Rajdhari by a sale of this property, and Chintaman objected, no further proceedings were taken in execution, but a private sale was made to the first Appellant, who appears to be connected with Ram Gulam. Neither Rajdhari nor anyone else gave evidence that the bond was the separate property of Rajdhari, nor was any document produced in which it was referred to as his private property.

Upon the whole, while the evidence on both sides is somewhat meagre, it appears to their Lordships that the presumption in favour of joint ownership is not displaced, and therefore this appeal should be dismissed; and they will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly.

As the Respondents have not appeared there will be no order as to costs.

Solicitors: Messrs. Pugh & Co. for the Appellants.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), sec. 144, application for restitution of money paid to mortgagee auction-purchaser after the date of sale and before confirmation of the sale—Jurisdiction of Court to order restitution in execution proceedings—Separate suit for restitution, if necessary.

A mortgagee got a mortgage decree and in the sale in execution thereof purchased the mortgaged property "for whatever was due to him on the decree at the time of the sale," without offering any specific bid. In subsequent proceedings by the judgment-debtor to set aside the sale, the mortgagee auction-purchaser and the judgment-debtor came to a settlement to the effect that if a specific sum was paid off before a certain date, the sale would stand cancelled, but on default the sale would stand confirmed. The judgment-debtor, however, did not pay the entire sum but made part payments on two occasions and the auction-purchaser, with the sanction of the Court, from time to time extended the time on the above conditions. Finally, default having been made, the sale was confirmed under sec. 65, C. P. C., and the judgment-debt was satisfied in full by the purchase of the mortgaged property. The judgment-debtor subsequently made an application, in the execution proceedings, for restitution of the sums paid by him to the decree-holder purchaser. The lower

RAI CHARAN BHUTIA v. DEBI PRASAD BHAKAT.

Babu Amarendra Nath Bose for the Appellants.

Babus Lalit Mohan Mitra and Santosh Kumar Pal for the Respondent.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

This is an appeal by the judgment-debtors against an order of dismissal made on an application for restitution in the course of proceedings in execution of a mortgage decree.

On the 21st February 1916 the Respondent obtained a mortgage decree against the Appellants. On the 17th July 1917 the mortgaged property was sold in execution and purchased by the decree-holder. No specific bid appears to have been offered by the decree-holder, but it was stated that he purchased the property for whatever was due to him on the decree at the time of the sale. On the 14th August 1917 the judgment-debtors applied to have the sale aside under Or. 21, r. 90, C. P. C., but this application was not heard for a considerable time.

On the 9th February 1918 the decree-holder auction-purchaser and the judgment-debtors came to a settlement to the effect that if the judgment-debtors paid to the decree-holder Rs. 1,313 on or before the 2nd April 1918, the sale would stand cancelled, but on default the sale would stand confirmed. Neither of the two contingencies contemplated by the parties, however, happened. The judgment-debtors did not pay the full amount specified on the day fixed; they paid only Rs. 317, whereupon the decree-holder agreed to extend the time for payment till the 20th April 1918, subject to the reservation that if the balance was not paid within the period specified, the sale would stand confirmed. This arrangement, like that made on the 9th February 1918, received the sanction of the Court. On the 20th April

1918, however, the judgment-debtors brought in only Rs. 230, whereupon the decree-holder again agreed to an extension of time till the 15th May 1918, subject to the condition that if what remained still due was not paid on or before that date the sale would stand confirmed. On the 16th May 1918, no payment was made and an application for further extension of time by the judgment-debtors was refused. The consequence was that on the day following the 17th May 1918, the sale was confirmed and the application for cancellation of the sale, made on the 14th August 1917, was dismissed. The effect of the order for confirmation was that under sec. 65 of the Civil Procedure Code, the title to the property purchased by the decree-holder vested in him as auction-purchaser from the date of the sale, and, as the decree-holder had agreed to take the property for whatever sum was due under the mortgage-decree, the result was complete satisfaction of the claim under the mortgage. The position then was that although the judgment-debt was satisfied in full by the purchase of the mortgaged property by the decree-holder, he still held in his hands the two sums of Rs. 317 and Rs. 230 paid to him by the judgment-debtors on the 2nd and 20th April 1918 respectively. This was overlooked at the time when the order for confirmation was made; for it is inconceivable that if the matter had been brought to the notice of the Court, an appropriate order would not have been made in this behalf. The judgment-debtors, however, waited till the 7th February 1920 when they made the present application for restitution of the two sums mentioned. The Court of first instance held that the judgment-debtors were entitled to a refund of the amount claimed. Upon appeal the District Judge has reversed that order on the ground that the remedy of the judgment-debtors lies by way of a regular suit in the Civil Court. We are of opinion that this view cannot be supported.

There is no doubt that the case before us is not covered by the express terms of sec. 144, C. P. C., which recognises the principle of restitution. The question consequently arises, whether it is competent to the execution Court, in the exercise of its inherent power, to make an order for restitution with a view to secure complete justice between the parties concerned. Our attention has been drawn to the decisions in Dinesh Prosad v. Sankar Chaudhuri (1), Prayag Nath Singh v. Shro Prosad (2) and Rai Raghubir v. Jai Indra (3), where restitution was directed on reversal of a decree under circumstances which might be taken to attract the operation of sec. 144, C. P. C. We need not consequently discuss the applicability of the principle deducible from those cases. But it is plain from the decisions of this Court in Beni Madhav v. Pran Singh (4), Narendra Chandra v. Jogendra Narayan (5), Asutosh v. Upendra Proshad (6), Atul v. Kunja Behari (7) and Amirannessa v. Kurimannessa (8), that the execution Court is competent, in the exercise of inherent power, to make an order for restitution even in cases not comprised within the terms of sec. 144. A similar view has been taken elsewhere, as appears from the judgments in Collector of Meerut v. Kalka Prosad (9) and Sukdeo v. Rito Singh (10). The only instance where a restricted view has been taken of the competence of the Court to make an order for restitution in cases not governed by sec. 144, is Safaraddi v. Durga Prosad (11), which has been unfavourably commented upon in later cases, such as Asutosh v. Upendra (6) and Sukdeo v. Rito Singh (10). There can, in our opinion, be no room for dispute that the Court is competent to exercise its inherent power in cases of this description and this has indeed been recognised by the Judicial Committee. In the case of Prayag Naran v. Kamikhyia (12), it was ruled that the Court has inherent power to make restitution and a party entitled to it should not be referred to a regular suit, merely because the case may not fall within the purview of the appropriate section of the Code of Civil Procedure. Lord Macnaghten observed that as precisely the same relief would be obtained whether the application were made in a separate suit or in the execution proceedings, the litigant should not be driven to a separate suit. To the same effect is the observation in Shama Pattar v. Abdul Rajab Sahib (13), namely, that every Court trying civil cases has inherent jurisdiction to take cognizance of questions which go to the root of the subject-matter of controversy between the parties. The principle was recognised again in Parbhudayal v. Kolyan Das (14) where the Judicial Committee affirmed the decision of the Allahabad High Court in Parbhu Dayal v. Ali

RAI CHARAN BHUIYA v. DEBI PRASAD BHAKAT.

Ahmed (15). In the case before us, there is no question that if the matter had not been overlooked at the time of the confirmation of the sale, an order for restitution would have been made. Consequently the observation of Lord Shaw in Debi Baksh v. Habib Singh (16) applies, namely, that quite apart from sec. 151, any Court might have rightly considered itself to possess an inherent power to rectify the mistake or omission which had been inadvertently made. There is a long series of cases in this Court where it has been ruled that the Court has inherent power to recall money improperly paid out; amongst these, reference may be made to Mrinalini v. Abinas Chandra (17), Nabinkali v. Banalata (18) and Jogesh Chandra Roy v. Yakub Ali (19). We hold accordingly that the execution Court had ample power to make an order to prevent what would be essentially a miscarriage of justice. We may add that a possible difficulty, indicated by Lord Sumner, as to the applicability of sec. 151, in Sabitri v. Savi (20), namely, the difficulty of invoking the inherent power of the Court when there is an express provision to the contrary in a statute, does not arise in the case before us. Here sec. 144 does not define the full measure of the power of the Court to make an order for restitution; we may consequently take the provisions of that section as a guide to determine in what class of cases an order for restitution may be made, so that complete justice may be made between the parties and they may be restored to the status quo ante. There is thus no escape from the conclusion that an order for restitution should be made in this case.

Finally, the Respondent has urged that as execution purchaser, he has suffered injury by reason of the delay in the confirmation of sale and that this circumstance should be borne in mind when an order for restitution is made. This contention is obviously entitled to some consideration. But we observe that the Court of first instance did not direct a refund of the sums paid by the judgment-debtors with interest. The decree-holder has had the benefit of those payments for a considerable length of time, and if there was delay in the confirmation of sale, he was in part at least responsible because he consented to an adjournment on receipt of sums handed over to him in partial satisfaction of the decree. The judgment-debtors were no doubt ultimately unable to carry out their engagement; but this does not justify the conclusion that they should forfeit the sums they paid. In these circumstances we hold that the proper order to make is to allow the appeal and to restore the order of the Court of first instance. There will be no order for costs either here or in the Court of the District Judge.

The income of a father and his son, as members of a joint Hindu family, were jointly assessed for purposes of income tax. The son brought a suit for a declaration that he was a qualified voter under sec. 15, cl. (2), of the Bengal Municipal Act because he was assessed to income tax, and under cl. (3), because he was a graduate and occupied a holding along with his father:

Held—That the income of both the father and the son having been assessed, both of them were qualified to claim to be a voter under cl. (2) of sec. 15.

From the mere fact of a person living with another individual occupying a holding by reason of some connection with or relation to him, such as son or servant, he cannot be considered to be a person occupying a holding within the meaning of the section. Hence the son was not qualified to be a voter under cl. (3) of the section.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

This appeal arises out of a suit brought by the Plaintiff for declaration that he was a qualified voter under sec. 15 of the Bengal Municipal Act and that the Chairman's conduct in removing his name from the voters' register was illegal and without jurisdiction. There was also a prayer for an injunction. The first Court passed a decree in favour of the Plaintiff, declared that the Plaintiff was a qualified voter under sec. 15 of the Bengal Municipal Act and was entitled to have his name entered in the register of voters, but refused to declare that the whole election of the Municipal Commissioners was void and also dismissed the rest of the Plaintiff's suit. There was an appeal by the Plaintiff and a cross-appeal by the Defendant Chairman with the result that the whole suit was dismissed. The learned Vakil for the Plaintiff-Appellant argues that the Plaintiff had established his right as a voter by showing that he was qualified to vote under sec. 15 of the Bengal Municipal Act in two different ways. First it is urged that the Plaintiff was assessed to income tax and was therefore a qualified voter. There can be no doubt that the income of the Plaintiff along with that of his father was assessed for purposes of income tax, but the learned Judge having found that Plaintiff and his father were members of a Hindu joint family and the income of both were jointly assessed held that the assessment of the joint family gave the Plaintiff no right to vote. I do not think this is a correct view of the law. It is clear that the income of both of the father and the son was assessed and that in my opinion qualified both of them to claim to be a voter under cl. (2) of sec. 15. In support of the contrary view the case of Narendra Nath Sinha v. Nugendra Nath Biswas (1) was cited but I do not think that case has any bearing on the present question. There was no assessment in that case but there was undoubtedly an assessment in this case. Plaintiff also claims to be a qualified voter under cl. (3) of that section. He claims that he was a graduate of the Calcutta University and occupies a holding or part of a holding within the Municipality.

The Court below was of opinion that as the houses occupied in its ordinary sense by the Plaintiff belonged to the father and Plaintiff was living there as the son of his father and not as an owner and as his occupation was not exclusive, he cannot be regarded to be in occupation within the meaning of sec. 15 of the Act. This argument finds some support in a reported decision of this Court in Ambika Churn Mozumdar v. Satish Chandra Sen (2) in which it was held that from the mere fact of a person living with a particular individual occupying a holding by reason of some connection with or relation to him, such as son or servant, he cannot be considered to be a person occupying a holding within the meaning of sec. 85 and cannot be separately assessed under that section. In England it has been held that it is not sufficient to constitute occupation for the purpose of the franchise that a son living with his parents should be allowed to sole use of the rooms without contract or payment of rent [Macdonell v. Dickson

(3)]. A similar view was taken in the case of Gobinda Chandra Ganguly v. Kailash Chandra Sanyal (4). Having regard to these authorities I am not prepared to dissent from the view taken by the lower Court that Plaintiff is not a person qualified to vote under sec. 15 (3) of the Bengal Municipal Act. I, however, hold he is qualified under cl. (2) and accordingly set aside the decree of the lower Appellate Court and restore that of the Munsif.

The Plaintiff is entitled to half his costs both in this Court and the Courts below.

Sessions Judge of Pabna and Bogra (Babu Baroda Kumar Mukerjee), dated the 20th July 1921 as he disagreed with the verdict of the majority of the jury who found the accused not guilty of the charges framed against him.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

Mr. Orr for the Crown.

Babu Santosh Kumar Bosu for the Accused.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

This is a Reference by the learned Sessions Judge of Pabna and Bogra. The accused Sadhu Charan Dass was put on his trial on the charge of having committed murder by causing the death of Dasi Sundari Dasya—his wife. He was also charged with having committed culpable homicide not amounting to murder and also with having caused grievous hurt with a dangerous weapon to the said Dasi Sundari Dasya. The jury by a majority of 3 to 2 found the accused not guilty on all the charges. The learned Sessions Judge being clearly of the opinion that it was necessary for the ends of justice to submit the case to the High Court has forwarded the record with recommendation that the accused should be convicted under sec. 302, I. P. C.

The main facts of the case are as follows :—On the night of the 14th of April last, the accused Sadhu Charan and his wife Dasi Sundari slept together in the northern room of their house. At 6 A.M., in the following morning, their servant Kokan Chander Das a boy of 12 years old came to open the shop of the accused's sleeping room, but the accused did not allow him to do so. After this, Kokan saw that the accused Sadhu was vomiting and Dasi Sundari asked Kokan to call

Sadhu's brother and mother and Kokan went to fetch them. A short time after Kokan had gone, two sellers of charcoal cakes who were passing by heard cries from the accused's room and saw Dasi Sundari coming out of the shop with a blood-stained dao in her hand and with her throat cut. She went towards the house of Babu Adhur Chunder Das—a pleader. Adhur Chunder Das was coming from his house and met her and she fell on the ground. Adhur Babu secured a dooli and sent her off to the hospital. The medical examination discloses that she had one incised wound about four inches long and one inch and a half deep in front of the neck, the upper portion of the larynx and pharynx being divided. There were also two other slight incised wounds on the front of her left hand. Two constables who happened to be passing by Sadhu's shop saw a collection of people on the road side. They entered the shop where Sadhu was seated and found blood-stains on Sadhu's person and abrasions on his fingers. Sadhu was arrested and taken to the Police station. The Sub-Inspector found the accused slightly dozing and sent him to the hospital for treatment where he was admitted as a suspected case of opium poisoning. The Doctor washed out the stomach and sent the washing to the chemical examiner who detected opium in the washings. At 2-45 P.M., that afternoon, Dasi Sundari made what is described as a dying declaration which was recorded by a Sub-Deputy Magistrate. She was unable to speak; but, in answer to the question put to her, she pointed out the accused as the person who had inflicted the wounds on her. At 3-15 that afternoon, the accused made a confession which was recorded by the same Sub-Deputy Magistrate. In that confession, the accused stated that he had cut the throat of his wife as she was of bad character. Dasi

EMPEROR v. SADHU CHURN DASS.

Sundari died at about 11 P.M., on the following day—the 15th of April.

The case against the accused rests mainly on the statement of his deceased wife and on his confession and there is also certain circumstantial evidence. On the circumstantial evidence, there can be no doubt that the deceased woman Dasi Sundari was cut in the room where she and her husband—the accused—had slept and that she and the accused were the only persons present at the time. The only question therefore, is whether, as is contended by the learned Pleader on behalf of the accused, the wounds were self-inflicted or whether they were inflicted by the accused. As regards this point, the main evidence, as already stated, consists of the woman's statement and the statement of the accused. Objection has been taken to the admission of both these statements. As regards the statement of the deceased, it is contended that it cannot be regarded as a statement admissible under sec. 32 of the Indian Evidence Act because it is not actually a statement as the woman was unable to speak and could only make signs in answer to the question put to her. This point was considered by a Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court in the case of Queen-Empress v. Abdullah (1). The facts of that case, so far as this point is concerned, cannot be distinguished from the facts of the present case. We are in entire agreement with the majority of that Full Bench which held that the questions and the signs taken together might properly be regarded as "verbal statements" made by a person as to the cause of her death within the meaning of sec. 32 of the Evidence Act and were, therefore, admissible in evidence.

As regards the confession of the accused, we see no reason why it should be rejected in toto because the accused at the time of making it was under the influence of a dose of opium. From the evidence of the Assistant Surgeon and of the Sub-Deputy Magistrate, we are satisfied that the condition of the accused was such that he could understand the questions put to him. Also the confession itself, though not very elaborate, shows that the accused was in full possession of his senses at the time he made it. There is one noticeable point as regards this and that is that, when the statement was read over to him, he made an important correction. In the answer বহু চরিত্র, বলিয়া তাহাকে কাটিয়াছি which was recorded by the Magistrate, he corrected the word বলিয়া to দেখিয়া making the answer mean that he cut her throat seeing that her character was bad. There seems to be no reason to suspect that there was any undue influence or inducement of any kind that led the accused to make this confession and we can see no reason why he should have stated that he had cut his wife himself unless he had actually done so.

As regards the statement of the deceased, it is not quite clear what was the question put to her as there are slight variations in the different accounts. From the statement recorded at the time, it would appear that three persons including the accused were made to stand in front of the woman and she was asked to point out which of the three persons had wounded her and she pointed to her husband. We think that it is to be regretted that the question was put in a form which suggested that the injury was homicidal. But nevertheless the fact that the injured woman shortly after she had received the injury showed her husband as having caused it is a very important piece of evidence against him. There are other minor points in the case which support the theory that the wound was inflicted by the husband and not by the wife herself. Opinion of the medical officer is that the wound was homicidal and not suicidal. He has given his reasons for his opinion and though it cannot be taken as a conclusive proof, we think his opinion is entitled to some respect. It is true that the wound was inflicted from left to right which would be consistent with a suicidal wound. But this is not the only point that has to be considered in determining the nature of the wound. There is evidence that the accused about a week before the occurrence purchased a dao. To this we attach no importance whatever. A dao is a common domestic implement and there is no reason for thinking that it was bought with the intention of being used in the manner in which it was actually used. The fact that the woman had a dao in her hand at the time she left her house is not inconsistent with the case for the prosecution that the injuries were not self-inflicted. The marks found on the accused's fingers appeared to the Assistant Surgeon to be such as might have been caused by biting by teeth and the marks on the woman's hand would indicate that she tried to seize the weapon at the time she was attacked. If this was so, it is not improbable that she succeeded in wrestling away the dao from her husband's hand and ran away with it in the manner described. On the evidence the whole of which has been read by us, we are satisfied that the view taken by the learned Sessions Judge is a correct view and that the injury was caused to the woman by her husband—the accused. Having regard to the nature of the injury, there can be no other conclusion than that the person who inflicted it intended to cause death and that the offence committed is that of murder. The murder was undoubtedly committed as the accused said because he believed his wife to be of bad character. From the relations between the parties on the previous night as described by their servant Kokan, it seems probable that the murder was committed suddenly on a quarrel arising between the husband and the wife after Kokan had left the house. Possibly, the accused suspected that his vomiting was caused by some poison administered by his wife and that led him to attack her. But this is purely a conjecture. What actually happened, the husband can alone say. But, we think, that, under the circumstances of the case, the lesser punishment provided for such an offence will be sufficient. We, therefore, convict the accused Sadhu Charan Dass under sec. 302, I P. C. of having committed murder by causing the death of his wife and sentence him under that section to transportation for life.

CHETTIAR, Appellant,
v.

ors., Respondents.

Hindu law—Southern India—Inheritance—Division amongst sons by patnibhag, a provable as custom—Custom proved as prevailing amongst Chettis of certain villages, if open to objection as unreasonable, as a local custom—Chettis, if Sudras.

Though division of the inheritance amongst sons by putrabhag (i.e., according to the number of sons) is now the recognised rule of Hindu law, there are traces of division by patnibhag (i.e., according to wives). Therefore, though the prevailing law is putrabhag, patnibhag may be proved to exist as a territorial, family or caste custom, specially in

PALANIAPPA CHETTIAR v. ALAYAN CHETTI.

Southern India, where it is possible that the matriarchal theories of the earlier inhabitants may have led to the prevalence of this custom and caused difficulties in the way of its being extirpated by the Brahmins when they introduced the law of the Smritis in Southern India.

The Chettis are generally deemed to be Sudras.

Held, on the evidence, that the custom of patnibhag proved in the case was one of the particular class of Chettis who happened to dwell in, and probably were at the moment the only dwellers in, an area of seven villages; and such a custom could not rightly be described as a local custom, which it would be unreasonable to impose upon all persons dwelling in the area.

This was an appeal from a judgment of the High Court of Judicature at Madras, dated the 12th January 1915, modifying the decision of the Subordinate Judge of Madura, dated the 23rd December 1911.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

Mr. F. A. MacQuisten, K. C. (with Mr. W. Ingram) for the Appellant.—There has been an agreement in accordance with the custom. Not a single instance has been proved against the custom.

[MR. AMEER ALI referred to sec. 13 of Evidence Act.]

Refers to Temmakal v. Subhammal (3), 8th Edn., Mayne's Hindu Law, p. 659 (foot-note), sec. 417. It is clear that this custom was not entirely unknown at any rate in certain parts of India. It may be that the custom was so general that it was not challenged. Rama Nand v. Sargiani (4).

There is evidence that in Chetti families who do not enter into any such arrangements, division of property among male children per stirpes is observed rather than division per capita. [SIR JOHN EDGE.—'The question is whether, if a child is born before actual partition, that child is entitled to a share.]

Mayne's Hindu Law, para. 472.

Mr. L. DeGruyther (with Mr. B. Dubé) for the Respondents.—Custom must be widely established and practically have the force of law, before it could be recognised as such. The Plaintiff avers one custom and then tries to prove another. The same custom must be strictly proved. Custom alleged is that during the lifetime of the father a partition is made among the sons.

[LORD PHILLIMORE.—Secs. 6 and 7 of the plaint do not mean that. Has this point been taken before?]

Yes. If one wife has three children and the other four, are the three sons to take $\frac{1}{2}$ of $\frac{7}{8}$ after assigning $\frac{1}{8}$ to the father? Here they say $\frac{1}{3}$. How did they get $\frac{1}{3}$ if the custom they allege is true?

Again the evidence is that the partition takes place during the lifetime of the father. The judgment is in accordance with neither the pleadings nor the evidence.

v. Subhammal (3). Beyond this case there is no decided case.

Mr. Dubé (following), custom is not necessary to support the "moopu." That is a very ancient part of Hindu law. See Bannerji's Hindu Marriage and Stridhan, pp. 136 and 138. Mitakshara, c. 2, sec. 11, para. 2. Strange's Hindu Law, Vol. I, p. 52.

The Tinneveli District there referred to adjoins the Madura District. The document (p. 51) was quite consistent with Hindu law. It was a breaking up of the family estate, Ramalakshmi v. Sivanatha (7). Of the four instances attempted to be proved the High Court found that only two were supported by evidence, neither shews that what was attempted to be divided was joint property.

Respondents proved two instances to the contrary.

Examination of agreements is no proof of custom, Ram Nand v. Sargiani (4).

Mr. MacQuisten, K. C., in reply referred to Kokla v. Piari Lal (8).

THEIR LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by

LORD PHILLIMORE.—The Plaintiff in this case, the present Appellant, instituted a suit for partition of family property against his father and three half-brothers. During the pendency of this suit, a fourth half-brother was born, and all these are Defendants and Respondents. The right of the Plaintiff to have partition was not seriously questioned; the dispute concerns the extent of his share. The Subordinate Judge decreed to him a third share, but the High Court only gave him one sixth, on the theory that the father would have one share, the Plaintiff one, and each of his four step-brothers, one. There is a possible third view that the Plaintiff should have one-fifth, his youngest born step-brother not being counted for a share, as having been born since the unequivocal statement by the Plaintiff of his desire to have partition. But in the circumstances, their Lordships do not find it necessary to pronounce upon this contention.

It is not disputed that, according to the ordinary Hindu Law of the Mitakshara, upon the death of the father and a subsequent partition, the five children of the two marriages would each take an equal share, and that if there were a partition during the father's lifetime, he would count as one with the five, so that the shares would be in sixes.

The Appellant has contended before their Lordships that by the usage and custom of the sub-caste to which he belongs, the children of each wife take as a unit and sub-divide their share among themselves, so that he as the only son of the first marriage would, if his father were dead, be entitled to half, and each of the four half-brothers to an eighth. Applying this principle to partition during the father's lifetime, he now claims to divide the property into three shares, and take one for himself, leaving one-third for his four half-brothers, and one-third for his father. In addition, before the property was divided he claimed the sum of Rs. 600 as a first charge in his favour on the whole property as representing the Moopu provided according to the caste custom for a first wife when her husband married a second time, and descending from her to her son or sons.

He did not in his plaint state the custom as to application on partition in the precise form in which he insisted upon it in his evidence, and in which it was found in his favour by the Subordinate Judge, and it has been contended by the Respondents that this variation is fatal to his case.

The paragraphs of his plaint which relate to the partition are the following :—

“6. It is the longstanding custom obtaining among the people of the said caste, that any one of the said caste desiring to marry a second wife during the lifetime of the first wife gets the assent of the first wife for it and sets apart certain properties suitably to his position for the Jeshtabhagam of the male children by first wife born or to be born, and divides the properties, giving one share to all the male children together by the first wife on one side and a share equal thereto to all the male children together by second wife on the other, irrespective of one wife begetting a greater, and the other a less, number of male children.”

“13. According to the custom of caste, 1st Defendant should live with his children by his second wife. Plaintiffs have no objection to make proper arrangements for him out of the common properties till his death if he were to claim separate maintenance. Plaintiffs believe that Rs. 20 per mensem will be a sufficient allowance for him.”

He also relied in paragraph 7 upon an agreement executed by his father on the occasion of his second marriage, which he asserted was made in pursuance of the custom by which the father stipulated that he would give for the Jeshtabhagam, which seems practically the same thing as the Moopu, the 600 rupees, or their equivalent, and further stipulated to divide the remaining family property between the families of his two wives, giving each a moiety.

When it came to giving evidence it appeared that there were few known instances of partition during the father's lifetime, and that there was a lack of authority for the contention that the father was in such a case reduced to maintenance, as contended by the Plaintiff in paragraph 13 of his plaint. The evidence offered mainly related to division after the father's death and to the caste custom applying in this event.

It appears to their Lordships that the case in the Court of first instance was conducted upon this footing, and that what the Court was asked to decide was whether the caste custom as to division after the father's death was or was not a proved and binding custom; and that the mode of partition during the lifetime of the father was treated as consequential upon the custom, so that the Plaintiff would be not precluded by the language of his plaint from proving the custom which would operate upon the death of the father by reason of his having carried his claim too far and endeavoured to reduce the father's interest upon a partition in his lifetime to one of maintenance only. The Subordinate Judge who had control of the matter and could have allowed an amendment in the pleading, if it were necessary, and if no injustice was thereby done, stated among others the following issues: “(1) Whether the custom set up by the Plaintiff is true and valid; (8) To what share is the Plaintiff entitled?” He found the first issue in the affirmative, and as to the eighth issue he said :—

“8th Issue:—The division is as per number of wives having sons. This will naturally be after the husband's death. In some cases to which Plaintiffs' exhibits relate, the husband has made a division retaining nothing to him. It is open to him not to claim a share, but where the son enforces a partition, it can never be said that the father is not entitled to a share. The number of shares will be taken to be the number of wives having sons plus the father, if he is alive. So that in this case the property will have to be divided into three equal shares, of which the first Plaintiff will be entitled to one-third, first Defendant one-third, and Defendants Nos. 2 to 4 and 24th, one-third, first Plaintiff is therefore entitled to one-third share.

PALANIAPPA CHETTIAR v. ALAYAN CHETTI.

No doubt in their memorandum of appeal to the High Court the Defendants took the objection that "the custom set up in paras. 6 and 13 of the plaint could not be split up piece-meal, and that the whole must stand or fall together." But there is no trace in the judgment of the High Court of this view having been taken by the learned Judges in that Court.

Their Lordships therefore think that it was open for the Appellant to contend at their Bar, as he did, that the effect of the custom would entitle him on a partition effected during his father's lifetime to one-third.

This being so, it is necessary to look somewhat closely into the custom and to the evidence given in support of it, evidence which was accepted by the Subordinate Judge, but considered insufficient by the High Court.

That the two modes of division between sons are both known in Hindu law is unquestionable. There are appropriate words for them. When the division is by number of sons, it is called putrabhaga, when the division is according to wives it is known as patnibhaga. That putrabhaga is now the recognised rule of Hindu law is not to be questioned; but there are traces of the other view. In the appendix to Strange's Hindu Law, Vol. II, p. 351, the answer of the Pundit to whom the case concerning the Zillah of Chittore was referred, states that there is much dispute in books as to which is the true view of division; and the Pundit in that case proceeded to decide in favour of the rule of division by wives as being the law in the superior castes and the custom in the Vaisya and Sudra castes. The parties in the particular case, were, as it happened, Sudras. This decision, as a statement of the general Hindu law, was incorrect, as is pointed out by Mr. Colebrooke and Mr. Ellis in their notes on the case; but both these writers agree that there might be such a custom, and that it would support the Pundit's opinion.

Strange himself, in the first volume of his book, the first edition of which was in 1825 and the second in 1830, speaks of the two modes—patnibhaga, or division by wives, and putrabhaga, or division by sons. He speaks of the first as an "unnatural division" and says it "is therefore allowed only among Sudras, nor among them but where there is a custom for it, which must, of course, be strictly proved, though it is said to prevail in the Southern territories of India as much did formerly the custom of gavelkind in Kent, thus to a certain extent but still in the Sudra class only superseding the law of the Sastras; and to this opinion the frequency with which references of the kind appear to have been made in the Courts of the company in the Peninsula seems to give countenance."

There being this divergence of thought, it is not wonderful, that in a land where there are so many customs, appropriate to certain areas of territory, families, or castes, though the prevailing law is that of putrabhaga there should be in certain cases a customary law of patnibhaga. As was observed by their Lordships in the case of the Collector of Madura v. Mootoo Ramalinga Sathupathy (1): "Under the Hindu system of law clear proof of usage will outweigh the written text of the law."

Mayne in his Hindu Law (Edn. 7), sec. 472, states the general law as to the right to shares which pass by survivorship as follows: "Each class will take per stirpes as regards every other class, but the members of the class take per capita as regards each other. This rule applies equally whether the sons are all by the same wife or by different wives."

PALANIAPPA CHETTIAR v. ALAYAN CHETTI.

But in a note he adds:—

"In some families, however, a custom called Patnibhaga prevails of dividing according to mothers, so that if A had two sons by his wife B and three sons by C, the property would be divided into moieties, one going to the sons by B, and the other to the sons by C [Sumrun v. Khedun (2)]. This practice prevails locally in Oudh as evidenced by numerous Wajib-ularz, which I have seen in cases under appeal to the Privy Council."

The case before the Sudder Dewany Adawlut to which Mayne refers carries him but a little way. It was decided in 1814, and held that two instances of the alleged peculiar usage of the family in which distribution had been regulated by the number of wives were not enough to prove the custom and that the general Hindu law must prevail. However, it shows the existence of the idea.

Their Lordships have not been referred to any other authority for the existence of the custom in Northern India, but as regards Southern India, it seems fairly prevalent. Mr. Ellis, on page 357 of Vol. II of Strange, is quoted as speaking strongly of the prevalence of the custom in many parts of Southern India; and at page 167, a paper of his, written in 1812 is set out, in which he gives certain deviations by the Dravidian people from the ordinary Hindu law, the third of which is as follows: "The division of estates in case of one person having several families by different women among the families in equal shares without reference to the number of persons in each."

He explains all these deviations as showing that, though the Brahmins were "successful in extirpating the aboriginal religion of the South . . . they succeeded but partially in introducing the laws of the Smritis, and were obliged to permit many inveterate practices to continue."

It is possible that the matriarchal theories of the earlier inhabitants of Southern India may have led to the prevalence of this custom and caused the difficulty in the way of its being extirpated by the Brahmins. If this theory were sound it would naturally lead us to expect that the extirpation of the custom would be less effective in the lower castes.

In the case of Temmakal v. Subhammal (3), decided in 1864, it was held to be within the power of a guardian to refer to the panchayat the question which of the two principles of division should apply. Incidentally it may be mentioned that the panchayat held that the division should be by mothers.

Their Lordships therefore have to approach the evidence in this case with a knowledge that such a custom does exist, and was not an improbable one in the particular case, the parties coming from Southern India and belonging to the sub-caste of Chettis. The Chettis are generally deemed to be Sudras. The judgment in the High Court in this case describes the parties as Vaisyas, but apparently without any foundation for this in the evidence. The explanation for this may be, as was suggested at the Bar, that the Chettis now forming a prosperous class of the community are gradually claiming to be considered as Vaisyas; but whether they are Vaisyas or Sudras does not make much difference for the purpose of considering the probability of the custom.

The evidence offered for the Plaintiff was to the effect that in seven villages, inhabited by this particular class of Chettis, there were several peculiar customs, two of them relating to the case where a man marries a second wife in the life of the first. One custom is that the first wife is entitled to have some property set aside for her maintenance which would descend to her son if she had one, and is then called Moopu. The other, that the property is upon the second marriage, notionally divided, one moiety going to the sons of the first wife, and the other to the sons of the second. The custom further appears to have put some restriction on the liberty of a second marriage, and these marriages seem infrequent where the first wife has already a living son. It appears to be usual to execute an agreement or settlement, with the consent of the relatives and Nagarathars or villagers, represented by the heads of houses, providing for the Moopu, and at the same time stating that the property will be or is divided in moieties between the two families. In this particular case, such an agreement or deed of settlement was produced and proved, and the Plaintiff did alternatively base his case upon this agreement. It was said, however, and for the present purpose it may be taken, that the document being unregistered, could not be enforced as a conveyance.

This document, however (Ex. C), is only one of a series of documents lettered to M, where provisions of a like character were made. The earliest is Ex. M, and goes back to 1864. In that case the first wife had a son, but she was considered to be incapable of carrying on household affairs. The document proceeds to show that her relations had been consulted and that with their consent and with the consent of the wife the husband was building a separate house for her and her son, arranging to mess with each wife in turn, to allow the first wife and her son to take certain lands and goods as stridhanam, and that the rest of the man's property was to be divided one moiety to the first wife and the other moiety to the second.

The last document is Ex. B, in 1900.

Here the first wife had no children, and it is provided that there should be certain lands for her Moopu, that should she have a male child, the land shall be appropriated for Moopu, which apparently means that her son would succeed to it, and that the issues of the two marriages should take the properties remaining after excluding the Moopu lands, in equal shares.

Various comments were made upon these documents by counsel for the Respondents. It was suggested that several of them were mere agreements, and that it did not follow that they had ever been carried out: that where there was no son by the first marriage, the father, if at the moment separate from his family, was dominus of his property, and could arrange to placate his first wife by providing for her possible issue: it did not however appear that the father was separate from the other members of his family and in some cases he certainly was not. Then it was suggested that the very existence of these agreements proved that there was no legal custom, that it was a mere social usage, and matter of propriety among the inhabitants of the seven villages that a partition of this kind should be made, and therefore it was occasionally made by people who wished to stand well with their neighbours. But on the other hand, the witnesses who speak to these documents, also give oral evidence to the effect that it was and had always been the custom in their villages that property should be divided in this way.

Two special settlements showing a different arrangement were produced by the Defendants, but the cases were special, being cases where a senior wife adopted the child of a junior wife, and provision might have to be made for preventing the adopted son from getting a double portion. One settlement was put in where there was only a conditional Moopu and no provision as to the sons. In this case there was no son by the first wife, and it was suggested that perhaps she had passed the age of probable child bearing. But with these exceptions there were no documents pointing to a different custom.

As to the oral evidence the case in favour of the custom largely outweighed the evidence against it. Except the Defendant, the father, no witnesses spoke without qualification to the negative. The father had executed this particular deed, and tried to get out of it by saying that it was not meant to be acted upon, but as a blind to induce his wife to consent to the second marriage. One of the Defendant's witnesses said, "I do not know of any instance of partition according to the number of sons in all my seventy-five years' experience. I do not even remember to have heard of division by the number of sons."

As regards the argument that the existence of the several agreements shows that without them the law would have been otherwise, their Lordships on consideration are not inclined to attach much importance to it. It would be necessary to fix the Moopu; and this being so, it would be convenient at the same time that the settler should state his recognition of the custom. At any rate, the inference from the existence of settlements, that settlements are required, is not enough to outweigh the very positive evidence of the custom.

In the High Court it was said that there was no evidence that among the Chettis where settlements were not made division of property among male children per stirpes was observed; but the learned Judges must have omitted to notice some of the positive evidence given on both sides. Weight was also attached by them to a document drawn up in 1898 called an agreement between the Nagarathars of the seven villages, stating various matters of conduct and of business on which they desired to come to an agreement among themselves, such as that they would refer all their disputes to the Nagarathars and not have recourse to the magistrates or even to the village panchayat. One provision is thus expressed: "Should any wish to take a second wife during the lifetime of his first wife, he shall do so after informing the Nagarathars of his village and after making sufficient provision for maintenance of his first wife. Any violation of this rule shall be communicated by the Nagarathars of that locality to the Nagarathars of all seven villages who shall all assemble at Navinapatti, and the party shall abide by their decision." This no doubt does not state the custom now sought to be proved; but the document is not a record of laws, but a provision de futuro as to social conduct; and one of the witnesses says that the rules as to Moopu and division were so well-known that it was not necessary to express them.

The High Court have treated the case as if it were an attempt to set up a local custom, and say it would be unreasonable to impose it upon all persons dwelling in the area. But their Lordships conceive that the custom is one of the particular class of Chettis, who happen, it is true, to dwell in and probably are at the moment the only dwellers in the area of the seven villages.

It was pointed out for the Appellant that when the High Court came to consider the second matter, said to be proved by custom, namely the giving of Moopu, they thought that it was proved by the evidence oral and documentary. For the Respondents, it was said that an arrangement similar to Moopu was known to ordinary Hindu law. This may or may not be so; but the High Court considered Moopu as established by custom, and the evidence for the one matter is substantially as strong as for the other.

There is a curious possible effect of the custom upon general Hindu law, which may have some day to be considered. Upon a partition during the father's lifetime, the general Hindu rule is that he gets a share equal to that of one son, which if the partition were by sons would be one-sixth. The effect, in the view taken by the Subordinate Judge, of a division patnibhaga is that the father counts for one share, and the children of each wife for one share, and so he gets one-third. Their Lordships, however, have not to determine this point. If the division is patnibhaga, the Plaintiff as the only son of the first wife is certainly entitled to one-third. Their Lordships think that he proved the custom of patnibhaga, and that he was entitled first to the Moopu (which the Respondents do not now question), and secondly to a third share of the residue.

Their Lordships will therefore humbly advise His Majesty that the decree of the High Court be reversed, and the decree of the Subordinate Judge restored and that the Appellant have the costs in the High Court and in the Privy Council.

Appellants,

v.

SHIB NARAYAN CHOWDHURY and
ors., Respondents.

Hindu law—Will—Construction—Bequest to widows by Mithila Hindu—Interest given whether absolute or limited—"Malik," "malkiyat," meaning and effect of—Danger of construing one Will by reference to another—Translation of vernacular documents, challenged in the High Court—Proper procedure.

The term "malik," when used in a Will or other document as descriptive of the position which a devisee or donee is intended to hold, has been held apt to describe an owner possessed of full proprietary rights, including a full right of alienation, unless there is something in the context or in the surrounding circumstances to indicate that such full proprietary rights were not intended to be conferred. But the meaning of every word in an Indian Will must always depend upon the setting in which it is placed, the subject to which it related, and the locality of the testator from which it may receive its true shade of meaning.

Where a Hindu governed by the Mithila School of Hindu Law purported by his Will to confer on his wives "full power and all proprietary rights (malkiyat) over all his moveable and immoveable properties":

Held—That the rights intended to be conferred included full rights of alienation.

It is always dangerous to construe the words of one Will by the construction of more or less similar words in a different

Will which was adopted by a Court in another case.

Proper procedure where the correctness of the official translation of a vernacular document is challenged in the High Court indicated.

This was an appeal from a judgment and decree, dated the 23rd February 1917 of the High Court, Patna, which affirmed a judgment and decree, dated the 9th April 1914 of the Subordinate Judge, Darbhanga.

Bachcha Chowdhury, a Hindu, governed by the Mithila School of Law died in 1865.

On 5th June 1864 he entrusted the management of his property to his wives by a document which is called a deed of "atainama."

On the death of Bachcha his widows succeeded to his property, and acquired by purchase other property after his death.

In 1910 the surviving widow Musammat Sasiman purported to alienate certain of these properties, and the suit was brought by the presumptive reversioners of Bachcha for a declaration that she had no power to effect any such alienation.

The trial Judge made a declaration in favour of the Plaintiffs and the decree of the lower Court was upheld by the High Court on appeal. The widow appealed from the decree of the High Court to His Majesty in Council. The facts of the case are fully set out in the judgment of the Board.

Mr. L. DeGruyther, K. C. (with Mr. H. N. Sen) for the Appellants contended that under the deed of June 1864 the widows took full proprietary rights. The expression "malik" is fully discussed in Musammat Surajmani v. Rabi Nath Ojha (5). Mahomed Shumsool Hooda v.

Shewukram (1). The estate that was intended to be conferred must be ascertained by looking at the whole Will. Under the Mithila Law in Behar a widow takes an absolute estate in moveables, so that by inheritance she would take an absolute estate in the moveables and a limited estate in the immoveables. In this case the testator intended her to take the same estate in both the moveables and immoveables.

[SIR JOHN EDGE referred to Amarendra Nath Bose v. Shuradhani (6) and Fateh Chand v. Rup Chand (7).]

Mr. DeGruyther, K. C.—I do not intend to try and construe one Will according to the words of another; the only point is the principle of construction to adopt.

[SIR LAWRENCE JENKINS.—It is sufficient for you to argue that the widows took a life estate with full powers of disposition. You need not contend that they took an absolute estate.]

Mr. DeGruyther, K. C. also referred to Mayne's Hindu Law, para. 627.

Mr. H. N. Sen following: The form of marriage here was the "asura" form, an unauthorised form, after which the wife had greater powers over property. Banerjee on Stridhan and Marriage, 1st Edn., pp. 333 and 408.

Mr. B. Dubé for the Respondents:—It was never the case that this was a life estate with a power of transfer. There is no power of alienation given here.

The real intention was that the widow should have only a widow's estate. The real meaning of the words in the Will are "The Musammats after my death have all and complete rights of a land-holder in every circumstance." The grant of the powers of a land-holder does not necessarily imply powers of alienation. Reference was made to Lalit Mohun Singh Roy v. Chukkun Lal Roy (4), Musammat Surajmani v. Rabi Nath Ojha (5) and Fateh Chand v. Rup Chand (7). In each of these cases the words were different. Here the words do not increase but merely set out an estate which is no more than a widow's estate. The mention of part of the property as ancestral is an indication that the testator wished it to remain in the family. Under Hindu law there is a presumption that a wife has no power of disposal over a gift from her husband unless it is given to her in unequivocal terms. Reference was also made to Mahomed Shumsool Hooda v. Shewukram (1), Janki v. Bhairon (11) and Shib Lakhan v. Tarangini (12).

Mr. DeGruyther, K. C. in reply, referred to Mayne's Hindu Law, para. 664. The word "malik" does not give an absolute estate which cannot be cut down. The word "heir" in all these documents merely means successor, and the cases show that "malik" imports proprietorship which may be increased or limited by the context.

SIR JOHN EDGE.—The suit in which this appeal has arisen was brought on the 12th August 1912, in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Darbhanga in Behar, by the Plaintiffs, who are the presumptive reversioners of Bachcha Chowdhury, deceased, who in his lifetime was a landholder in and a resident of Mouzah Subhankarpur in Tirhoot. Bachcha Chowdhury died in 1865. The principal Defendant is Musammat Sasiman Chowdhurain, who is the surviving widow of Bachcha Chowdhury. His other widow was Musammat Subast Chowdhurain; she died before suit. Bachcha Chowdhury died possessed of considerable moveable and immoveable properties, which, on his death, came into the possession of his widows. Part of Bachcha Chowdhury's immoveable property was ancestral, and the remainder of it had been purchased by him.

Musammat Subast, shortly before she died, executed, on the 12th February 1867, an instrument by which she bequeathed her half-share in the property to Musammat Sasiman.

The suit relates to the nature of the title of Musammat Sasiman to the immoveable properties of which her husband, Bachcha Chowdhury, had died possessed, and to the nature of her title to other immoveable properties which she and Musammat Subast, or one of them, acquired by purchase, it being alleged by the reversioners that those immoveable properties which were acquired by the Musammats were purchased by them with moneys saved from the usufruct of the immoveable properties of which Bachcha Chowdhury had died possessed. The object of the suit is to obtain a declaration that Musammat Sasiman neither had nor has any power to alienate any of the immoveable properties. Her right, if any, to alienate, except for necessity, depends upon the nature of her title. Musammat Sasiman and some of the other Defendants are Appellants here. The Plaintiffs and others of the Defendants are the Respondents.

The Hindu family to which Bachcha Chowdhury had belonged was governed by the law of the Mithila School of Hindu Law. Bachcha Chowdhury had separated from that family. The suit and this appeal depend upon the true construction of a testamentary document which, although described as an atainama (deed of gift), must be regarded as a Hindu Will, which Bachcha Chowdhury made on the 5th of June 1864. On behalf of the Plaintiffs it is contended that the Musammats took no greater interest in the immoveable property which had belonged to Bachcha Chowdhury in his lifetime than that allowed by the law of the Mithila to the widow of separated and childless husband. On behalf of Musammat Sasiman and those claiming under her it is contended that she and Musammat Subast took in that property under the Will a full, absolute, and heritable interest as proprietors, with full rights of alienation, and not merely the interest of Hindu widows under the law of the Mithila. If her contention as to the construction of the Will is correct, this suit must fail, and should be dismissed, and it would not be necessary to consider whether the immoveable properties which were purchased by the Musammats, or either of them, were purchased with moneys derived by them after their husband's death from the usufruct of the immoveable properties which were left by him.

According to the official translation of the Will of the 5th June 1864 (15th Jeth 1217, F. S.), Bachcha Chowdhury stated that :—

“I am Bachcha Chowdhury, resident of Mouza Subhankarpur, pargana Hati, zila Tirhoot.”

He then mentioned lands, some of which were ancestral lands, and others of which he had purchased, and stated, as was the fact, that :

“the ancestral and purchased properties are held and possessed by me, without participation or interference on the part of any person”— and proceeded :

“I, the declarant, have no issue; I have to obtain bliss in the next world, caused to be sunk several ponds, and have constructed a temple of Sri Murli Manohar Ji within the compound of my own house, at a considerable cost; I often remain ill, although at present I am well, still on account of having no child, and placing no certainty in life, I intend to go on pilgrimage to Kashi and other places. Therefore I, the declarant, of my own accord and free will, in order to avoid future disputes and to perpetuate my name, gave all the mouzas in entirety or in part, both ancestral and purchased, thika properties, and all goods, and assets, articles of copper and silver, elephant, oxen, she-buffaloes, and all other properties, to both my first and second wives, Musammat Subast Chowdhurain and Musammat Sasiman Chowdhurain, who after my death will be heirs to all the moveable and immoveable properties. It is desired that the said Musammats by holding possession and occupation of all the moveable and immoveable properties should pay the Government revenue thereof, and they should collect rent of, and keep watch over, the mouzas either in entirety or in part and scattered lands, orchard, oxen, and elephant, etc., and they should give alms and charities. The said Musammats, after my death, shall have, in every way, full power and all proprietary rights over all the moveable and immoveable properties, and they should, under the deed executed by me, pay, annually, Rs. 360 to Musammat Lachhmi Chowdhurain, widow of my brother Dulār Chowdhury, until her death for her maintenance, and by this deed the said Musammats should get their names recorded in the Government Sherista in the columns of proprietors. To this I, the declarant, neither have nor shall have any objection. I have, therefore, given into writing these few words by way of a deed of Atainama so that they may be of use when required.”

Their Lordships have quoted from the translation which was made of the Will by the official translator in India, but it is admitted on behalf of the parties to this appeal that the vernacular word which has been translated as "gave" should have been translated as "give."
